Even so, in the sticks, we occasionally put across an idea in a big way. For example—on the "Third Alarm," not only did the local fire company lend us the use of their apparatus, properly bannered of course, but the siren brought the natives to their doors and the schools even had fire drills when we came to them. This gave the children the opportunity to read our banners and to receive the literature we handed out.

Just what is exploitation? It is the art of presenting the coming, or the presence, of a particular attraction in a different manner from ordinary advertising. It not only catches the attention of all who see it, but it holds attention and drives the idea home in a way that nothing else will. It is the novelty that does the work.

Of course the idea must tie up closely with the show. Exploitation cannot be used successfully on every show nor can it be used too often. While some stunt or other can be used on any attraction, quite often an idea strong enough cannot be found. If used in a weak way or too often the novelty wears off and no longer packs the required kick.

Exploiteers, like showmen, must be born—not made. Moreover an exploiteer must love his work. He will not be successful if he is working simply to keep the pot boiling. He does not work with bell or whistle nor does he keep track of the hours. Once obsessed with an idea he forgets all else until it is finished and he should be allowed to work that way too. He must be able to immediately recognize an idea and work out how to put it across. The idea must be practical. That is the fault I have to find with many of the stunts in the press sheets. They are not workable.

Poster panels have a big place in advertising and should not be neglected. Then there are trailers, lobby displays, store tieups, etc. In my estimation newspaper advertising is weakest of all. So few people, comparatively, read the papers. Those who do, sketch over the news and seldom read the ads carefully unless they are particularly interested in something or other. When tieups can be secured with the local papers, then their co-operation becomes valuable. Readers as well as locals and press matter, when intelligently selected, are assets. I find the newspapers are antagonistic towards press matter because many managers simply cut out the dope from the press sheet and expect the paper to run it verbatim. Press agents are notorious for handling the truth with parsimonious frugality and ye ed is quick to recognize this.

Finally, tell the truth in all your advertising. Never exaggerate. Do not misrepresent. We were here yesterday; we are here today and we will be tomorrow and we must keep the confidence of our public.

Ed. J. Hiehle Covers The Topic From All Angles!

There are so many forms of essential advertising for theatre publicity that should go hand in hand in selling your theatre and program, that it is difficult to pick out which is most valuable.

In my estimation newspaper advertising is the most valuable, especially when one is in harmony with the editorial department. Because theatre-goers WILL look in the news columns to learn what is showing at their favorite theatre. If you have an ad attractive enough to sell the show, which should not only give the title, star, but include an idea of what it's all about, then your show is SOLD. Fans look for more than title and star. They must be sold on the type and class of show. . . . The circulation and coverage of the local newspaper make it most valuable, if you have the proper cooperation of the paper.

Going hand-in-hand is the DIRECT BY MAIL method, which goes to a selected, or interested group, indicated by requests of patrons to be placed on your mailing list. You can tell your story and use more than title and star, for here you have an audience which is anxious to know what you have.

Then again, the TRAILER SERVICE belongs to this set-up because it delivers the idea of the story, star and interest to a ready-made audience.

For outdoor publicity I believe TIRE COVERS lead, because it carries your star and title to all parts of your city. We have a taxi-cab tie-up. Then outside of specialized street perambulating, I should place the merchant window display of cards next. The BILLBOARDS belong down below the line in this list of most essential outdoor publicity, because of the run-as-you-read angle, which MISSES a big percentage, unless it be a HEAD-ON location. I believe ALL THESE are so necessary in selling the theatre and show that they should become FIXED in your regular routine, with the value rated in order as read above.

Understand, this is my personal opinion and it may differ from others. I believe it most practical, according to our situation and that it should produce results wherever they have the price to buy entertainment. (Of course, we MUST DELIVER ENTERTAINMENT.) Poor product will not attract.

GREENE STILL CRASHING N. Y. DAILIES

With the same yen "One-Eye" Connolly displays for crashing the fight game there's a theatre manager over in Brooklyn by name of Albert Greene who consistently worms his way into front page stories of New York's big dailies. He may not make the headlines but if you are a patient reader, somewhere along a Monday morning yarn you'll come across a mention that Al and his theatre did this or that.

Following a sweltering day in New York when a large portion of the population jammed the Coney Island beaches, a reporter on the Herald-Trib observed that Al Greene's Tuxedo Theatre at 3050 Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, offered this inducement in a sign in front of the house: "The Tuxedo Theatre Advocates Sensible Warm Weather Attire. Follow the Lead of Our Employees. Male Patrons In Pajamas Admitted Free." To further quote the Trib, "About 100 men took advantage of the offer. Greene did not wear pajamas but his doorman, ushers, ticket-taker and projection-room operator were clad in night clothes."

Lamm Ties Up With Group of Merchants For Pony Give-Away

A free pony give-away is nearing its climax about this time out in Cleveland in the community of the Variety Theatre, managed by Julius Lamm, a frequent contributor to these columns, and from all indications the stunt has aroused a world of interest among regular and potential patrons of this house.

The idea was put in effect by arranging for a meeting of the Lorain Avenue business men, all located in the theatre zone, who agreed to stand the expense attached to purchase of the pony and printing of the necessary tickets and window display cards. The volume of interest is amply testified to by disclosing that 50,000 of the former were voted for at the meeting and since then it has become necessary to arrange for 30,000 additional tickets. The cards were distributed all through the zone, and as a further aid to publicity two large banners were strung across the street at two of the busiest corners on Lorain Avenue. The pony is being kept on display in the theatre lobby until give-away night.

Another stunt this member recently promoted through cooperation with a safety razor company was distribution of a sample mirror of the polished metal variety to all women patrons in the house at the time "Svengali" was showing. This was also accomplished at no cost to the theatre and the article made a hit with the ladies.

If any member wants more detail concerning the pony stunt we are sure that it can be obtained by dropping a line to this Round Tabler at the above address. Every kid is crazy to own a good pony and the amount of interest that a stunt of this kind stimulates is certainly bound to reflect a steady turn of trade to any house that's in on a cooperative move such as this one.

We are showing another "shot" of Julius' fine work elsewhere in this issue.

Street Ballyhoos Play An Important Part For Drumbar

Live ballyhoos played an important in campaigns on two pictures recently played by W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Abilene, Texas.

On "Connecticut Yankee" two boys dressed up in armor, rode horses all over town three days in advance and on opening day. Cards carrying copy about picture, theatre and playdates were suspended from the horses.

On "Mr. Lemon of Orange"—a boy with a lemon in one hand and an orange in the other walked all over the business part of town. A card on his back played up the picture, theatre and playdates.

The local High School band also paraded through the city streets on their way to the theatre where they gave a 15-minute concert before going inside.

Eleven window tie-ups were secured with grocery stores; these stores displaying an abundance of lemons and oranges together with stills from the picture and window cards.

Cassady's Striking Poster Art Work Is Attracting Patrons

The accompanying cut on this page shows three interesting poster cut-outs recently created by poster-artist, C. C. Cassady, for use in the lobby of Zaring's Egyptian Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind. They are not only most attractive to the eye but bear testimony to the creative abiilty of the artist.

Note the four Arliss faces in the photo at top of the layout. Each one is a replica of the star's characterization in a former success. The idea which the artist seeks to convey is that each previous Arliss picture overshadowed the other in greatness, "The Millionaire" being the greatest of all. This one, and the next in order, were set up in the theatre foyer under a spotlight, with a background of black velour. Bright colors were used on both and the star's name appeared in silver metallics. The "Nut" effect, along with the poster on "Cracked Nuts," is carried out by using the tree and squirrel idea.

The second photo in the row, the Chaplin cut-out, was also used under a spot in the theatre foyer but with all other lights out. A small flame bulb was used behind the street-light to give a night effect and a real bench and cane gave a display of depth and realness. Artificial grass was also used under the display to further carry out the idea. This was used in the foyer until the opening day and as this house is a neighborhood theatre it was found practical to carry it across to an opposite lawn for use all through the engagement. A spot was then trained on it from the top of the theatre.

We believe that all Club members will agree that Cassady's cut-outs are attractive, effective and original in treatment and we are glad to be able to pass them along to his fellow members. This material is always interesting and we hope that this member will favor us with future contributions as we have many requests from managers and poster artists for more material of this sort. Others are invited to contribute too.

FATE OF A TIME-HONORED INSTITUTION!

'Course we can't do anything about it but just take a squint at the thirst-quenching signs that hang around this replica of an old-time bar-room. Orange crush and all of today's favorites are in evidence. The display was set up by Louis Moses, manager of the Palace Theatre, Port Richmond, Staten Island, and proved an attention-arresting stunt in conjunction with showings of "Ten Nights in a Bar Room."

Schools Play An Important Part In R. Brown's Campaign

School exploitation played an important part in an effective campaign recently waged on "Trader Horn" by Russell F. Brown, manager of the Fox McDonald Theatre, Eugene, Ore., who in carrying the several different phases was ably assisted by Hal Elias. Between the two of them they are getting somewhere.

Owing to a country-wide endorsement of this picture by Parent-Teacher Associations as one particularly appropriate for children, Brown first held a preview for all city teachers and as a result the School Superintendent permitted the teachers to make classroom announcements regarding the picture and display bulletin-board posters at all schools. As a further tie-up it was arranged to have a 42-piece orchestra from one of the schools appear in concert on the theatre stage on opening day and at night in front of the theatre. Additional cooperation was obtained at the University of Oregon, where a 24-foot banner ad was attached to the stadium score board during an important baseball series. William R. Ferguson, exploitation manager, was also invited to address the local chapter of Alpha Delta Sigma (national advertising fraternity) on theatre advertising.

Other effort included a tie-up with a gasoline distributor for placing of cards at all filling stations; the entry of a special float, featuring "Trader" characters in a school canoe fete; a double truck co-op on the "Trader" idea; a street bally with jungle atmosphere and tom-tom; a "large pass" novelty presented to certain merchants for window display; weekly theatre bulletin issued to 1,500 members of a children's club; daily announcements over radio station, and the house-to-house distribution of 2,000 eight-page roto booklets.

That the above was a well rounded out campaign is attested to by the fine returns achieved at the box office and the Club is obliged to all concerned for passing it along for the inspection of other members. We hope that the next time Russ Brown puts over another such corking piece of work he'll let us know all about it.

Pearls Effectively Used By Chas. Amos To Boost "Kick In"

Strings of pearls and a guessing stunt proved to be two effective means of advertising "Kick In" when this picture was played by Charles Amos, former manager of the Paramount Theatre, Nashville, Tenn. Inasmuch as a missing string of pearls plays an important part in the story his idea tied in nicely with the whole scheme.

He made a good buy of 100 strings of pearls and managed to have them "lost" in all sections of the town. To each string was attached a Dennison tag bearing the message, "Are These Pearls Stolen Property—If So Circumstantial Evidence May Convict You of Complicity in Crime. . . . Your Reputation May Save You But When One's Reputation Is bad. . . . Well, See 'Kick In' and Learn What Circumstantial Evidence Did Do To A Man Who Was Going Straight." Name of theatre and playdates followed.

A jar was also filled with pearls and guest tickets were offered to persons who came nearest to estimating the correct number. The jar was placed in a jewelry store window not far from the theatre. Window cards, stills and cut-outs augmented the display.

Both the above stunts caused a lot of talk and helped immeasurably in publicizing this picture and are herewith passed along for the benefit of other members. Charlie Amos's contributions have often appeared among these pages so we know that most of you are familiar with his result-getting type of work.

DO YOU CARRY SPARE EQUIPMENT?

We furnish the cashier with sufficient change so that she will be prepared for any and all emergencies when the patrons come to the box-office window.

We keep the janitor's supply closet well stocked with such material as is needed to keep the house clean.

We stock up the coal storage cellar with plenty of fuel to insure the theatre's being warm and comfortable during the winter months.

We even carry an extra dozen or two of flashlight batteries for the ushers so they can always light the way for the customers.

BUT - - -

Do we carry the necessary spare parts for replacement in the booth and sound equipment so that the show can go on regardless?

In about eight out of ten cases the answer will be, No! Yet here is the heart and soul of the theatre. From that little room way up near the roof we must project the picture and the sound for which our patrons pay their good money.

Every theatre booth in the country should carry an extra mechanism, a spare intermittent and such other parts for their projectors as is apt to need quick replacements. Tubes, exciter lamps, fuses, etc., that are liable to go out of commission on the sound plant should likewise be kept handy.

Theatres with but one generator should certainly have some provision for breakdown service either by adding another generator or any other means practical for the house. Extra generator brushes, a set of fuses for every panel from the main board down in the meter room right up to the others located around the house, these should also be kept, and kept where they can be located at a moment's notice.

Elsewhere in this issue we told you about the exhibitor who laughed at the circuit method of carrying spare parts. His experience will be yours if you take the risk of running without such extra equipment as is needed.

Orlove Busy With Good Will Theatre Party In His Town

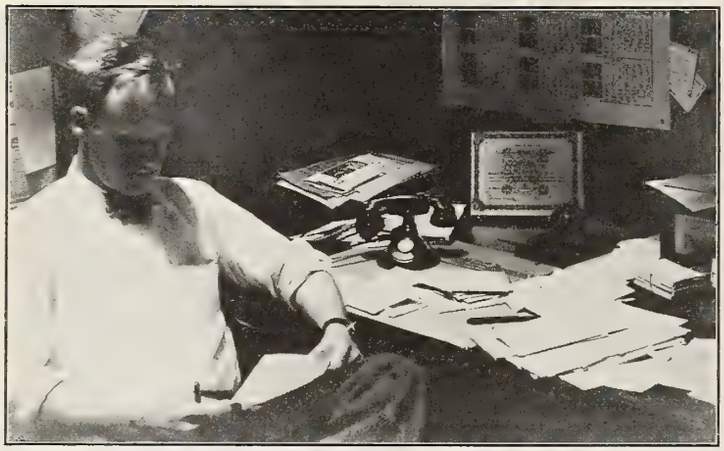
Busy as ever selling shows at the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, Manager L. W. Orlove takes time off to keep the Club informed on what's doing in his community.

Just about the time his letter was received he was knee-deep in the promotion of a Good-Will Theatre Party among members of the North Avenue Advancement Association, of which he is Vice-President and Chairman of the Committee on Advertising and Publicity. It is a tie-up between merchants and the theatre, with a scheduled give-away night and from all accounts the whole Avenue is agog with the idea.

We are publishing a photo of a "Skippy" display that was recently used in his neighborhood. The box was made from an old piano container and a six-sheet cut-out of "Skippy" completed the picture, with the exception of several signs planted here and there around the display. This was set on an empty lot about three weeks in advance of the run and it commanded plenty of attention in this section of the city.

Orlove wants to be remembered to E. J. Coppock, of the Staten Island Paramount, and we are passing along his best regards. We also note the tear sheets supporting his claim to advertising a recently run minstrel show as the "World's First Kid Minstrels," so there's no further comment to be made about that. Keep up the good work, and we'll be looking forward to your visit.

PIONEER PETE AT HIS DESK!



'Way back in '17 and for several years thereafter Elmer F. Holmberg, manager of the Pioneer Theatre, Amassa, Michigan, formed the habit of telling the HERALD what pictures did for him and his reports were signed, "Pioneer Pete." Now he has become a regular contributor to Round Table pages. Note that his Club membership certificate occupies a conspicuous spot on this well-known manager's desk.

Picture Suggested Money So Rosenberg Plugged A Coin Gag

It occurred to Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre in San Diego, Calif., that the title of "The Millionaire," suggested money. As he was about to show the picture he decided that he would make money in some form figure in the advertising of it. One of his stunts was to distribute what looked like cartons of twenty dollars in fifty cent pieces. The regulation paper was used so that the rolls looked as if they had just come from the bank. On removing the brown wrapper a silvered piece of wood was exposed. On the inside of the wrapper was printed an announcement of the showings of "The Millionaire." The package of "half dollars" created a lot of amusement and everyone wanted them. The stunt turned out profitably for it brought a lot of money to the Plaza box-office.

The above suggestion brings back the old saying that "money makes money" so perhaps some of our members can cash in the same way Jack Rosenberg did. Keep up the good work, Jack.

Penny Matinee Is Great Stimulant On Serial, Says Harvey

To start a serial off on both feet, J. A. Harvey, Jr., head of the J. A. Harvey, Theatrical Enterprises, San Jose, Calif., cheerfully recommends the use of a Penny Matinee to stimulate attendance of children and insure a filled house for the entire series. He admits that the idea did not originate with him but some new angles were injected that spelled success. However, the whole idea was new to San Jose.

Harvey's campaign was handled through newspapers, slides and announcements, children up to 12 years of age being admitted for one penny on a Saturday matinee. On the first matinee the increase in children business amounted to over 500 per cent. In fact, Harvey states, the house got more money with pennies than it had previously received with regular admissions. That, in itself, was most gratifying, he continues, but the most important fact is that ever since the inauguration of the idea children patronage has been on the increase. And the stunt not only made friends among the younger generation but many adults accompanied the children through curiosity. As an added plug the manager was introduced to the packed house from the stage and he made announcements concerning the next show and nature of prizes to be given away.

Properly exploited, we agree with Harvey that this will not only stimulate interest in forthcoming serial episodes but will turn out to be an excellent business builder for a theatre. He also points out another factor in connection with the Penny Matinee and that is to be sure to show shorts that will be interesting to children. The Club appreciates your letter, J. A., and notes what you have to say about further contributions. Let them come along, for we feel sure that your brother members will be the beneficiaries.

Mervis Hits Paper In Weak Spot And Breaks Opposition

To stimulate word-of-mouth advertising on "Skippy," Chas. D. Mervis, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Newport, Ky., put over a stunt that nicely accomplished his purpose and incidentally succeeded in breaking down a local barrier against newspaper cooperation in connection with the exploitation of pictures. He deserves much credit, too, for the way he did it.

There's a working arrangement between Newport papers that prohibits participation in all exploitation campaigns but Mervis hit a weak spot of one by suggesting a scheme that would build morale among circulation personnel. Briefly, it was the promotion of a Newsboys' Party, similar to an "Orphans' Party" at Xmas time, and for the first time over a long period this paper carried first and second page stories of the coming event. The paper also had tickets printed and took care of the mailing one week in advance. The net result was that every boy in town who was not a newsboys knew that "Skippy" was booked for a showing. The paper further cooperated by placing signs in its windows and on all newsstands and while none of the local papers carried the comic strip, distribution of same was arranged by insertion of special heralds. Schools also cooperated through personal endorsement by teachers of both public and parochial institutions.

Most all effort was concentrated on the above, Mervis tells us, with the exception of using three sheet cut-outs in the lobby and the running of the regular trailer. Business was good despite the hottest week of the year so it appears that this member got what he wanted, in addition to driving an opening wedge for future cooperation from the newspaper. This would appear to be a good recipe for others to follow where they are up against similar obstacles. It will be interesting to know how this manager makes out in the future and we will look forward to hearing some more.

Essay Tie-Up With Paper Nets George Hoffman Big Space

A writing contest tie-up with the local paper recently netted George Hoffman, manager of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., some fine publicity breaks and created a great deal of interest in his community.

The Augusta Herald printed a two-column head on the front page Saturday before picture's Monday opening and allotted the same space on an inside page four days in advance.

The contest centered on "Define a Virtuous Husband and win theatre tickets." The article read: "Here is the chance for married women to tell the world what they have found out are the ten best virtues a husband can have and for the unmarried to give some idea to prospective husbands what he ought to be like in order to please them."

For the 10 best letters of not more than 200 words describing "A Husband's Ten Best Virtues" will be given a set of two tickets each.

This is a subject that most women patrons will find interesting and the average newspaper will cooperate with most any manager for this sort of copy. Keep up the good work, George.

FIRE STUNTS THRILL THE KIDDIES!

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR SCRAPS!

Photo above shows what can be accomplished with odds and ends of material from the house workshop. These attractive small window displays were gotten out in one afternoon by Jack Carr and Dick Dare for Lester Fountain, manager of the Fox Theatre, Long Beach, Calif. Use of the above served the double purpose of servicing waste material and the turning out of an easily planted display, because of taking up but a small amount of space. Any Club member may obtain full description, as to colors and backgrounds, by writing headquarters.

Endurance Drive Nets Kaufman Big Space In Newspaper

A vast amount of free newspaper publicity was obtained when an endurance drive was run by Albert Kaufman, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., judging from an armful of tear sheets that we have before us. Story after story and many photos of the principals are included among the clippings.

The scheme is worked out through securing the services of an attractive young woman, billed to the public as on the way to Hollywood to sign a contract for a movie assignment. Arrangements are made with a local auto concern (in this case a rebuilt Packard) for the run-off of a 100-hour endurance drive. Merchants, such as gasoline companies, tire concerns, accessories, a restaurant, a jeweler, auto, radio and others are tied in with the stunt, furnishing items in return for the advertising received. The girl wears a mask and the start and finish is made from the stage of the theatre. Prizes are awarded to those who guess nearest to the number of miles covered and how many gallons of gas are used for the drive. The girl unmasks on the stage at the end of the drive.

There's one for you to try out, fellow-members, if you have not already tried some similar stunt. Most any attractive local girl could be used for the stunt and we can believe Kaufman when he states that his show not only helped publicize the house but resulted in capacity business at both appearances. If any member wants further details he kindly volunteers to send it if you will but get in touch with him by letter. Thanks for your contribution, Al, and be sure to let the Club hear from you again.

Local Policeman Helps Oliver Put Over Parking Gag

A couple of result-getting stunts are sent the Club by Charles J. Oliver, manager of The Gem Theatre, Prescott, Ark., and who signs himself, "one of 'em who's one for all and all for one."

If you are lucky enough to stand in with your policemen the same as this member he suggests using the parking tag which reads, "Don't Park Here, Park at the Blank Theatre and See So and So Picture"; that is, if you can also prevail upon your cop to place the tags. A full house resulted in this case because of the psychology of uniformed authority in connection with tying the tags to the parked cars. Hardy states that the average person's reaction was that he felt lucky to have escaped the summons and therefore became impressed with an idea that he ought to attend the theatre.

Another stunt that brought trade to the Gem was an essay contest in connection with a showing of "Kept Husbands." Letters were circulated among pupils of the local schools, inviting them to write the answer to, "Should a Poor Boy Marry a Rich Girl?" Not over 100 words were asked for and either side of the question could be taken, with as many reasons advanced as one wished. No age limit was stipulated and the winner of first, second and third prizes were granted respectively free passes for two weeks and one week. The graduation season at the schools is also being observed by the Gem through an invitation to all graduates to attend some showing free of charge.

We're glad to know that trade is coming along so nicely out your way, Oliver, and hope that you will pull plenty of stunts this summer to keep the ball moving. As you put them over, don't forget to jot down some notes to send your Club.

Burns Ties With Merchants On Tour From Store To B. O.

A sort of a "Shopping with Susie" idea, or a personally conducted tour of a lonely woman from her home through the town's shopping district, was incorporated into a novelty circular and used most successfully with "Lonely Wives" by Will Burns, manager of the Princess Theatre, Joliet, Ill.

It is impossible to faithfully reproduce a copy of one of the circulars here so a brief description will be attempted. The first page is headed, "Lonely Wives" and in attractive, well spaced Vogue type the balance of the copy deplores loneliness when it is possible for a woman to board a street car right to the door of such and such a beauty shoppe; then, to Mr. Blank's jewelry shop; a lunch at Blank's cafeteria, and so on until there's but one thing missing and that's a visit to the Princess Theatre where blank picture is playing.

On the fourth page appears ads of the merchants mentioned, each one offering a special inducement to do shopping during the specified days. In all, 6,000 of the circulars were distributed, with 3,000 placed on street cars. Entire cost of this stunt was borne by the merchants and it greatly helped put the picture over.

The above appears to be a novel use of this kind of material and if any of Burns' fellow members adopt it we suggest that the secret of the copy lies in making it as breezy and intimate as possible. There are any number of newspapers using this style in "shopping around town" columns and you can get a very good idea of the style from glancing through one of these. Or, we feel sure that Bill will send you a copy of his if you will but drop him a line.

Krim Sends Club Some Small Town Ads And Hangers

A collection of small town ads, heralds and door knob hangers were recently sent the Club by Sol Krim, manager of the Macomb Theatre, Mount Clemens, Mich. Sol tells us the hangers were used to good effect with the showings of "Doorway to Hell" and "Reducing." In a future issue, when it is the Club's plan to reproduce a page lay-out of ads from the smaller communities, some of this manager's work will be used. In the meantime, we would like to hear some more from this new member as to how show business is going along out in Mount Clemens.

STEP UP AND SEE THE GREAT BOSCO!

Believe it or not the gang of tug-o'-war men in the above photo couldn't break this tough guy's neck when they tried this stunt in front of the Fox West Coast Theatre in Pocatello, Idaho, a house managed by R. E. Archibald. This one was pulled by this manager in conjunction with the showings "It Pays to Advertise" and was instrumental in drawing a large crowd of onlookers.

SHOW SELLING IN AUSTRALIA!

It's been quite some time since we last discussed the exploitation activities of our brother showmen in Australia, but the only explanation we can offer is the lack of space and the tremendous amount of material on hand from our members in this country.

However, don't let this indication mislead you into believing that we don't want to carry Australian material. On the contrary, we do like to and just to prove it we are going to tell you about several interesting gags pulled to great success in that far-off land.

When "Hook, Line and Sinker" played the Regent Theatre in Melbourne, they hit upon a rather novel idea through the use of the banner and two comedians as shown in the accompanying photograph. Incidentally, this stunt created plenty of talk which reacted nicely at the b. o. As to the effectiveness of this stunt we can only suggest that you try something like it yourself, if it is in keeping with your theatre and community, and see how the natives fall for it.

On several previous occasions we took the liberty of calling attention to the quick thinking and acting abilities of the Australian managers, and it was just along these lines, too. Here you see a building in the course of being demolished. A wide-awake showman, happening along, immediately saw the chance for a bit of advertising and had the sign about "Hell's Angels" posted in a conspicuous spot. The reference was obvious and no doubt helped keep the public interest centered on the attraction.

There are probably any number of wrecking jobs going on in YOUR own community where such a gag would do as much good as it did here, but the question is, Do you take advantage of it? Probably not. But then, it's up to you, so we're not going to tell you what to do. Our job is telling you how the other fellow is doing it.

Then, to get on to the subject of ballyhoos. Australia likes them, which is one of the many reasons why we like Australia. And when "Blushing Brides" played in Auckland, N. Z., "Big Jim" Wilson, a showman of note in that country, left no stone unturned to see that everybody knew it was playing via a series of inside and outside stunts. For example, in the theatre they transformed a large lounge room into a bedroom scene where in a complete layout for milady's comfort was arranged through a local merchant. The picture tells the story quite nicely, so we'll amble along to the outside ballyhoo.

This is the bride and groom with all the trappings and attendants in tow. They made the rounds of the city and visited the outstanding establishments as well, much to the delight and amusement of the theatre-going public. Little room for doubt was left in the minds of any who saw this layout as to what it was all about and where it was playing. That is showmanship in any man's country. Hats off to Australia.

Well, considering the limited time and space available at the moment, we are going to take temporary leave of Australia (land of kangaroos and Mel Lawton) and bid them adieu until we can again take our trusty (but rotten) typewriter in hand and tackle some more of their activities. In the meantime, here's "hands across the sea" in a friendly grip from the showmen of America to the showmen of Australia.

Morelock Arranges With Local Stores For Ticket Selling

A scheme whereby a tie-up is made with a local merchant for the sale of theatre tickets is recommended as a corking means of boosting trade by C. Morelock, manager of the Arcade Theatre, Cottage Grove, Ore.

The regular admission at the Arcade is 35 cents but each week an arrangement is made to supply a different merchant with tickets to be distributed at the rate of 20 cents per single admission or two adult admissions for 35 cents. At the theatre the tickets are sold at the regular rate. In return the merchant heavily advertises that the tickets may be securd in his store at reduced rates, his advantage in the deal lying in the chance he has to sell customers some other articles while there. It has the added value of bringing in news customers to both store and theatre. This stunt is featured on Wednesday and Thursday nights and the tickets must be use on date of sale only. The results are described as highly successful.

The Arcade is also having pronounced success with the running of Country Store Nites during the summer months. On Monday nights a complete change of program is made, especially selected for the occasion. Twenty grocery prizes, consisting of about seven or eight articles for each award, are purchased by the theatre at wholesale prices. Awards of several other articles, such as tires, lamps, house dresses, shirts, etc., are donated by merchants in return for the advertising they receive. A capital prize is offered every six weeks, such as a radio, davenport, or chair, the theatre also buying this at wholesale and the gag being that patrons will save their tickets over this period to get a whack at the big offering.

Morelock is enthusiastic over the success of both of the above stunts inasmuch as the use of same greatly helped increase receipts at his house and he generously offers to give full details of either plan to any Club member who will drop him a line. We might add that he personally attends to the Country Store and the making of awards, believing that a local man lends more importance to the occasion than the cold contacts an outsider would make. In this matter, the Club heartily backs him up, not only as a means of saving a middleman's share but warding off the possibility of having his local merchants high-pressured beyond their liking. And with the theatre manager in charge of the awards, a further intimacy with patrons is effected.

More Boosters For The Round Table!

LEO RIDEOUT is another Publix manager to become a member of this Club and his house is located down in Denison, Texas. Inasmuch as we've already received a contribution from this new member his fellow Round Tablers may soon expect to get a line on what he is doing to put his house over the top in Denison. Shoot in some more ideas, Leo, just as soon as you can get to it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

S. A. DEUEL is the manager of the Paramount Theatre, Provo, Utah, and it won't be long before you'll see some of this new member's brand of show-selling appear in this department for the reason that an account of a recent stunt he pulled will soon be on its way to the printer. By this time you've exploited several more shows, Deuel, so why not obey that impulse and put them in the mail? And we can use that photo of yourself any time you see fit to send it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

ROBERT SPARKS is the manager of the Temple Theatre, Arcadia, Texas, a house of the Publix circuit, and we are electing him a member of this Club at this writing. Bob, keep up the good work started by your brother Publix managers in your state and shoot in an account of some good selling stunt you've recently pulled.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JERRY COOPER manages the Marinos Theatre, Luzerne, Pa., and he's another Pennsylvanian to join this fast moving army of live-wire showmen. Jerry, reach in that pigeon-hole of your desk and send along that account of the last big drive you made in your town so your fellow members will know you're on the job. And don't forget a photo of yourself next time you write.

JAMES P. MARTIN certainly has his hands full looking after the affairs of three theatres up at Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Knowing full well the amount of work necessary in the operation of just one single house, we can just about figure out what Jimmy has to contend with, having three of them. But we're not a bit afraid of his being able to make a good job of it, too. Just wait until we start running some of his interesting activities if you doubt this statement. Let's go, Martin.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. PINANSKI is the manager of the Liberty Theatre, Dorchester, Mass., and he is proposed for Club membership by George Laby, well known manager of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass. We've come across Pinanski's name before in connection with live exploitation work and it's a real pleasure to add this new member's name to this rapidly growing list. Justify our faith in you, showman, by shooting in an account of a result-getting stunt.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HENRY J. DENNING manages the Criterion Theatre, Roxbury, Mass., and he, too, now becomes a member of this great organization. His house belongs to the Publix-Netoco chain and we will look forward to receiving word from him in the near future as to what he's doing to put the Criterion over the top. And how about a photo, Henry, when you write?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSEPH DONDIS is in charge of the Strand Theatre, an 800-seat house in Rockland, Maine. It's another Publix house and this new member will now be able to swap show yarns with the large group of Publix managers in this organization. Send them in, Joe, and we will do our part in passing them along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

NICK CARL is located 'way down in Cuero, Texas, where he has the job of managing the Rialto Theatre. Nick admits he's been a constant reader of these pages for a long time, has finally seen the light and right now becomes a full-fledged member of this Club. So you used to work with Tommy Olson, Nick? Down in New Orleans. Next time we are in touch with him we'll pass along your regards, but maybe this paragraph will catch his eye. Now, how about that stunt that you're going to pass along?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ALMON McDONOUGH is at the helm of the State Theatre in Scranton, Pa., and we can guess that this job is heavy enough to keep any one man busy. Scranton's a town where the boys hustle to show each other what can be done to the Queen's taste in show-selling so we'll await Mack's version of the art. Shoot it along just as soon as you can find time, Mack.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. J. STEURLE is in charge of the Uptown Theatre, Louisville, Ky., and his house is one of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company chain in that city. 1,300 seats need to be filled each day of the week and we know that Steurle is on the job with ideas to do this. Pretty soon we'll be relating how he does it.

BOB GROSS has the job of managing the Granada Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., and his application for membership is accompanied with a sample of work which will soon make its appearance in this department. Glad to welcome you, Bob, and thanks for your first contribution. We shall be looking for more just as soon as you can get to it.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRANK CHAMBILLO manages the Coleman Theatre in Southington, Conn. Frank's house seats between 600 and 700 people, but we know that in proportion it offers all the problems of a much larger theatre. We are well aware of theatre conditions up his way and feel sure that this new member will have some interesting yarns to spin for the mutual benefit of everyone in this organization.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. E. TOOLEY is the resident manager of the State Theatre, Red Bluff, and he's another T. & D. Jr. manager to fall in line. That's the spirit, W. E., and let's hear from you real soon as to what's doing out your way. There are a considerable number of Tee and Dees on our list and when you meet them, please extend out kindest wishes.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOWARD KEELEY manages the Dewitt Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., and we'd say he is located in one of the livest towns in the State of New York. As we recall the Dewitt, it's a neighborhood house, and that means that we are going to get some good live show tips from this new member. Shoot them in, Howard, and send along a photo if you have one on hand.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. ERVINE STONE is the manager of the Rialto Theatre in Durham, N. C., and the Club welcome is extended right now to this new member from the Southland. He's in the army now and that means that he will take time off to exchange some good selling ideas with his brother Round Tablers.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. B. TOLLETT happens, at this time, to be the managing director of the Plaza Theatre in Burlington, Wis., and from all indications the Club can chalk up another go-getter from Wisconsin. We don't always make such a claim unless we have some concrete reason to believe that it is true and in this instance we do feel that way because his first few letters were the kind that generally mean real showmanship. Another reason why we say this is because his interesting biography clearly shows that he has a fine theatrical background to work from. Watch for more "dope" on this new member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WARREN PINDER manages the Nassau Theatre, Nassau, N. P., Bahamas, which is one of a collection of islands lying in the ocean in a southeasterly direction from this office, unless our geography is faulty. What they do to sell shows to the Islanders Warren proposes to tell us all about in his next letter. And we believe that it will be interesting to other members.

THE RELEASE CHART

Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

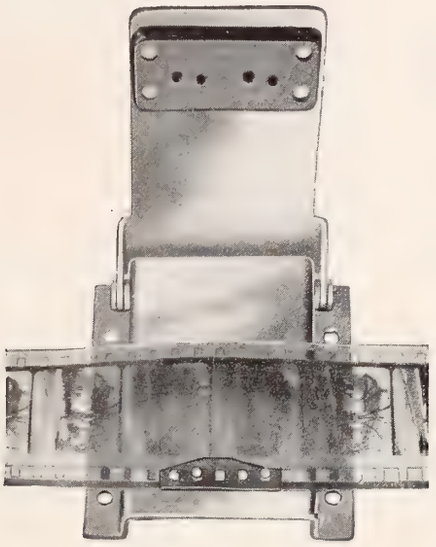
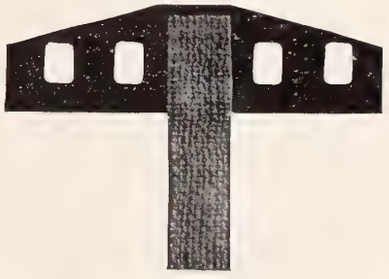
An improved method of blocking out splices in sound film





Now the sound track need no longer be painted out at the joints to silence splice noise. The Eastman Sound Film Patch enables the laboratory worker to block out joints with greater ease, speed, and uniformity.

The patch is made of light-weight, opaque film. For convenience in handling, it is provided with a quickly detachable finger tab. With the aid of this tab, a simple but accurate registration block, and cement, the patch is quickly applied to the film.

Because of its design, the patch is practically inaudible in projection. At the same time it obscures a minimum of the sound record, and assures fast, accurate treatment of all splices. These factors make the patches and the block a valuable feature of Eastman Service.

CONFESSIONS OF A SHOWMAN!

"Now that I've signed this 1931-2 PARAMOUNT contract, Mr. Salesman, I confess I'm happier about it than any business deal I ever made.

"I knew from the start I had to have PARAMOUNT this year. It takes real quality on the screen to make real money at the box office today. PARAMOUNT has a 20-year quality record behind its trade mark that no other company can touch.

"Then take stars. The big drawing cards always belong to PARAMOUNT. Favorites like Lloyd, Bancroft, Chevalier, Dietrich, Chatterton, Marx Brothers, Carroll, Cooper, Brook, Lukas, Arlen, Bankhead, Colbert, Holmes, March, Lombard, Sidney, Shannon and the others, presented as only PARAMOUNT can, mean real money to me.

"When I read PARAMOUNT'S new season announcement, I said, 'There's the cream of the 1931-2 crop.

"But I waited for actual pre-release performance at the box office. I investigated reports of SMILING LIEUTENANT playing three months of S. R. O. on Broadway in New York's hottest summer and then doing sensationally in Chicago and the Carthay Circle, Los Angeles. It's true.

"I saw AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY last week. All the fine things the trade reviewers have said about it are too modest. It's a clean-up.

"I caught MURDER BY THE CLOCK at the New York Paramount. How that big audience went for it!

"I got confidential wires from Hollywood telling me HUCKLBERRY FINN will out-gross TOM SAWYER, SILENCE is the best melodrama in years and DAUGHTER OF THE DRAGON is a honey. With a special rave about the MARX BROTHERS in MONKEY BUSINESS.

"Now, Mr. Salesman, you understand why I'm smiling. You had about as much chance of getting out of that door WITHOUT my name on that PARAMOUNT contract as the proverbial snow-ball."

My dear Mr. Miller:-

While it is extremely unusual, I cannot refrain from commenting on the results we have obtained with UNIVERSAL PICTURES as compared with all the other product we played last season. You will remember the difficulty we had in getting together, due to the difference in price and the reluctance with which we signed your deal. In fact it was only because we wanted ALL QUIET and KING OF JAZZ that we purchased the balance of the contract at all. Imagine our surprise when a final analysis proves that we made more money, picture for picture, on the UNIVERSAL LINE UP than that of any other distributor.

FREE LOVE, CAT CREEPS, LITTLE ACCIDENT, DRACULA, COHENS AND KELLYS IN AFRICA and LADY SURRENDERS all did exceptionally fine business for us.

If UNIVERSAL can keep up this pace, turning out productions that will do what these pictures have done for us, your local representative will find a ready listener on his next visit to us.

I want to thank you for insisting that I sign up last year even though I thought that we had over paid you right straight down the line.

Kindest regards.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Levine:

After looking over the advance announcements of the various companies, I decided to buy Universal's product for every one of my theatres for the coming season.

This step is prompted primarily because of the reports I received from fellow exhibitors, men who used your product last year and found it much more profitable than they had anticipated.

Theatres like the National and Milwaukee in the city, and the Allis and Capitol at West Allis NEED consistently good pictures. The clientele we cater to DEMANDS ENTERTAINMENT, and it is for this reason that I decided to gamble on Universal for 1931-32.

If SEED is any criterion of what exhibitors can expect and look forward to from your company, then there will be much cause for rejoicing at the box office.

With every good wish for Universal success for you and my four theatres, I am

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Skorey:

Thanks for the confirmation of my date on SEED. I take this opportunity to compliment the Company on the class of product it has turned out this season and wish to state that whilst I have played four different products this year, yours is the only one which has proven anything like profitable. The short product has been extra good and consistent, and I am more than satisfied with my buy.

I have already bought the product for next season, feeling that I am doing the right thing and also supporting a Company which deserves every support of the independent exhibitors.

Here's wishing the Company every success and prosperity during the coming year, and thanking you for the splendid service and cooperation rendered, I remain

Yours faithfully,

Gentlemen:

With a great deal of pleasure we acknowledge receipt of confirmation of our contracts for the season 1931-1932.

It is most gratifying for us to buy your product because of the fact that we found your productions of last season very satisfactory. The excellent box office attractions were well received by our patrons.

While very few of our theatres have used any Western pictures, we bought your Tom Mix pictures because we felt that Mix was and still is the outstanding Western star of today.

We feel that these productions also will make money for us.

Best wishes for a successful year, we are

Yours very truly,

The Trouble Machinery

NOW that the industry has been for a time without organized, standardized arbitration procedure there are increasing evidences of a realization that it is a necessary instrument in this complex business.

Because of the nature of the merchandise, the mechanism of selling and delivery, there is probably no other industry in the world which so peculiarly needs adequate, effective arbitration machinery.

Regardless of what may have been the faults of arbitration methods leading up to the Thacher decision and the consequent suspension of this method of dealing with motion picture trade controversies, the motion picture still needs and still must in some manner achieve arbitration facilities.

Significant figures appear in a survey of the country's civil courts, made by the Institute of Law of Johns Hopkins University. In an analysis of 527 cases before the civil courts of New York City it was found that of every dollar recovered by litigation 70 cents went to pay the costs. The plaintiffs paid an average of $67 to collect $201, meanwhile the defendants spent an average of $73.33 to contest the suits, making a total expense, for each $201 award, of $140.33. Further, it appears that in 4,720 civil cases surveyed in the New York Supreme Court records only 17.3 per cent were marked "satisfied in whole or in part."

That much for litigation. The figures for the courts of New York may be considered fairly representative for the country.

Writing in "The Exhibitor" (Philadelphia), Jay Emanuel remarks: "In New York, the old Pathe contracts are legal, must be adhered to, according to a final court decision. In Buffalo a ruling is made that RKO-Pathe does not have to assume the old Pathe contracts. In Pennsylvania a legal authority advises that the old Pathe company and the new RKO-Pathe organization are not one and the same—that exhibitors can not claim any pictures or redress on their contracts.

"Legal decisions may be different in various districts, but the motion picture industry is the same in Dallas as in Portland, Me. The RKO-Pathe controversy is embarrassing to the distributor, annoying to the exhibitor. If arbitration were now a part of the industry, the situation would be settled through that court of equity. Now the muddle continues."

No matter what the history of the past may contain, the fact remains that the motion picture industry is in definite and growing need of arbitration. Also it must be true that this industry, quite as well as others less complex, can in some manner have a satisfactory, lawful and efficient machine for the settlement of the multitude of disputes which can have no proper place or attention in the courts.

Dr. Mees on Farm Relief

WE all have our troubles. There's Dr. C. E. K. Mees, director of research for the Eastman company, and a considerable factor in the evolution of modern raw stock, bothered about several matters from where he sits up at Rochester. Engineering Foundation is conducting a symposium on the question of how the sciences have conferred benefits and increasing happiness on civilization. Dr. Mees' reply shockingly indicates that "benefits" will have to be defined, first and that the only great gift of science to the world has been in checking disease.

"Apart from this," Dr. Mees remarks, "I doubt if the life of the agriculturist in any country today is happier than that of a peasant in the Nile Valley 4,000 years ago. . . . While machinery assisted the farmer at first, it is now undermining his status. . . .

"If I could exchange the life I lead in a modern city for the life of Athens in the Periclean age, or Thebes under the Eighteenth Dynasty, I think I would undoubtedly accept it. In those days there was more leisure, less pressure, more opportunity for exchange of ideas."

As we recall Periclean Athens and Thebes, however, there were quite a few persons in each city who found conditions fairly hard. Dr. Mees could dream himself into considerable leisure in Rochester, New York, today and now, if his curiosity about ergs and ions would let him alone. He is enslaved by the mysteries of emulsions and he will never be free.

Some Vagabond Thoughts

CASTING about for an optimistic thought to record it, one comes to the refreshing notion that, no matter what may be the effect of economics and weather at the box office, this is precisely the season when the black bass rises best to the bucktail fly, especially when artfully presented with a pork rind trailer. Considerable relief from key city figures may be had on the shadow side of a lake where the "big 'uns" lurk in the little bays between the rush patches. This is the bass month across the nation from Moosehead to the Rockies. Perhaps a little fishing and meditation would help this year.

The Power of the Medium

POIGNANT reiteration of the extraordinary, graphic power of the screen is presented in a dispatch to Film Daily relating that Mr. Paul Robinson, manager of the Hollywood Theatre, Hollywood, Florida, has been taken to the U. S. Veterans Hospital at Lake City because of a return of shell shock following a showing of "All Quiet on the Western Front" at his theatre. When an exhibitor is not shock proof in the presence of the screen, what may one expect of the possibilities of impact on the sensibilities of the layman?

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

ANN ARBOR (Michigan) NEWS just naturally insists on "art" in the motion picture, whether the motion picture wants it or not, as evidenced in the following editorial:

Art Is Necessary

"Motion pictures are primarily not intended to be educational or art," says Arthur Cohen, managing director of Famous Players' Canadian corporation, replying to criticism. "They are the means of providing entertainment, relaxation and drama for the great masses of the people. It is the duty of the producers to make pictures that will entertain the masses, not to intrigue the fancies of a few intelligentsia."

We think Mr. Cohen is only half right. It is true that entertainment is the primary purpose of the movies. But good entertainment is an art. There can be no convincingness without artistry. And the so-called masses demand convincingness, or realism. They may not call the flaw by its technical name, but when a photoplay is weak in plausibility the audience is dissatisfied. Plausibility depends upon the actors, the plot—and the camera effects.

There is much artistry on the screen today. Great attention to detail is everywhere in evidence. Dialogue, on the whole, is well handled. Scenic effects are a credit to the picture-taker's art. The acting is restrained—convincing.

Mr. Cohen, in rising to the defense of the cinema, has dwelt with it unjustly. He has tried to separate entertainment from art, and they cannot be separated. It is in entertainment that the genius rises to its superb heights. If there were no art on the Hollywood lot there would be no successful entertainment on the screen.

Mr. Cohen's defense is more unfair to the industry than is the criticism.

However, there is ample ground for hearty agreement with Mr. Cohen's cool Canadian opinion. If the "Ann Arbor News" will reflect on such productions as the "Tarzan" series, "The Lost World," or the charming implausibilities of "Mickey Mouse," and the antics that never happened in Aesop's Fables, it may perhaps agree that "realism" has nothing to do with entertainment. Mr. Cohen will find large support in the industry for his assertion that the one important obligation is to entertain the masses. That is what the business is about.—THE EDITOR.

THE CAPITAL of TOPEKA, Kan., in an article by E. D. Keilmann, makes these observations about weather and entertainment:

"Daddy Long Legs" at the Grand theatre the week of June 15 did one of the best week's business of the early summer season. The same week—one of the hottest yet in 1931—"White Shoulders" and "Kick In" at the Jayhawk almost went into the red ink. The Jayhawk was refrigerated and the Grand only gave its patrons the comfort afforded by ventilating fans.

"Daddy Long Legs" was a clean picture. Topekans liked it. They paid their money to see and hear it and didn't take the "cool theatre" into consideration. It was entertainment of the kind they wanted at the Grand and it was there they went. . . .

Give the fans a good picture, like "Millionaire," "All Quiet," etc., and they'll come out again from those holes—golf and otherwise—to make a real box office showing. . . .

THE BRONX (N. Y.) HOME NEWS pleasantly and refreshingly records a slight item in behalf of the much blamed motion picture thus:

Myron Hess, 15, who was sentenced to the Jewish Protectory for second degree murder by Justice Cohn in Bronx Supreme Court on Tuesday, was never known as "Little Caesar the Second," nor did he have any desire to be no nicknamed, it was revealed yesterday when the probation department report of Bronx County Court was made public.

What's more, while he admits that he did see the moving picture, "Little Caesar," which has been blamed for the youth's sudden turn to crime, Hess denies that he was influenced by it.

"I didn't like the picture," the report quotes him as saying.

The report was compiled by Edward White, a probation officer of Bronx County Court.

THE FREE PRESS of DETROIT, Mich., presents a special dispatch which sets forth the patriotic views of that famous motor magnate and statesman, Mr. James Couzens, who does not seem to have enough troubles of his own:

Los Angeles, July 15.—Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, who arrived here today with a group of relatives and friends, paid his respects to the home city of the movies by predicting that the senate interstate commerce committee will be forced to take up the films next session "because there is a feeling the Will Hays organization is hardly handling the situation in the motion picture industry."

"While I don't believe in Government interfering in business," Senator Couzens said, "and feel that business should look out for itself, when it does not do so, the Government has to step in to protect the public, as in the case of the movies. . . ."

THE COMMERCIAL APPEAL of MEMPHIS, Tenn., gets a shade indignant at the London film critic who said that British films must be tuned down for the mentality of America. It says:

. . . As for the claim that British pictures must be put on the same low level as the American brand if they are to appeal to the lower American mentality, the answer lies in the greater popularity of the American-made pictures with British audiences. What can the critic say to that? If he insists that American films appeal to lower intellects, then he must admit a low intellectual standard for British audiences who prefer the Americans.

INDUSTRY TO TEST UNIT PRODUCING TO SHAVE COST, IMPROVE QUALITY

Paramount Will Release Independent Film

Unit Pictures Will Find Market According to Quality, Says Herman Wobber

A system of unit production, which would supplant "the factory method," and thereby effect a saving in overhead of between 30 and 40 per cent," is the plan of David Selznick, who only recently resigned as executive assistant to B. P. Schulberg, production manager for Paramount.

David Selznick is one of the few production executives of the industry who is strictly of the film generation, born and reared in the industry. His father, Lewis J. Selznick, entered the industry in its hectic earlier days and became a spectacular pioneer of merchandising methods, prospering mightily in the "war years."

"Permits Inidvidualism"

Selznick, with Lewis Milestone, whose most recent directorial successes were "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "The Front Page," is organizing for the purpose of unit production, which, contends Selznick, "will permit individualism in the production of each picture."

Arriving in New York this week Selznick has been in daily conferences with distributors and with Walter Wanger, also recently resigned from Paramount and who, according to Selznick, has notions similar to his own relative to the breaking down of production into directorial units.

Wanger, who has been reticent to discuss his future plans, was host at his Great Neck estate, to David and Myron Selznick over the weekend. Selznick said that he and Wanger were negotiating with a thought of association, but that no agreement had been reached, and might not be.

The new Selznick-Milestone guild will maintain no distribution organization. "It is organization that we are trying to eliminate," he observes. "Even if we sign other directors, a separate unit for each will be maintained."

Lower Cost, Better Films

"The advantages of unit production are twofold," he continued. "They are cost and quality. Through unit production there is a saving in overhead of between 30 and 40 per cent. The only good reason for factory production in any line of business is to lower cost. Now, the minute you remove the reason for factory production it is no longer useful.

"Under the factory system of production you rob the director of his individualism, and this being a creative industry that is harmful to the quality of product made."

Selznick and Milestone plan first the production of six pictures. Two of these, said Selznick, will be directed by Milestone, with the other four being produced under the mutual supervision of both.

"Only one picture will be in production

The motion picture industry has not finally determined how to make motion pictures. Also no one has yet arrived at a completely satisfactory formula for the production of literature, painting, sculpture, plays of the stage, or masterpieces of music. The tremendous mortalities of ideas and material in the older arts are accepted facts. All motion pictures are expected to be successes.

In consequence there is today, as ever in the last decade, but today more than ordinarily, a vast searching for some philosophers' stone which will turn every film into the gold of art and merchandise. The searching is for a system, a method.

The successes and traditions of success in the industry took their rise from individuals and their concepts, their dreams perhaps. The rise of the names of Griffith, Ince, Sennett, Zukor, Lasky, and as many other builders of the empire of the screen as you may care to name, came from one-man ideas put into execution, and rather generally by just that one man.

Good ideas have resulted in good pictures. Good pictures grew into companies, corporations and grandiose operations, finally into the giant structure called the motion picture industry. Success has brought its problems, among them the very considerable one of relating the work of the man to the great machine, the vast super-mechanism. In varying forms the whole industrial world has something of this problem. The motion picture is far from alone.

Now, tentatively, with the inevitable force of economic pressure, an evolution of a sort appears about to put forth a new form of picture organism. It purports and tends toward a restoration of some part of the individualism which seems to be an essential factor in creative effort. It will go to the test of the crucible of experience, as all things must in industry, and as all things do in the motion picture, very rapidly. Just now the handy name for the new form is "unit production." Perhaps the idea will presently take a form which outgrows the label. The outcome will be ordained by the necessities of the industry.

Box Office At Last Backfiring At Studio in Economy Move

And Even Pass System Can't Stop Demand That Every Other Business Is Meeting

By WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

OLD Man Economy is knocking loudly at Hollywood's studio doors; and the new pass system fails to keep him out.

Cuts in one studio, cuts in another, dissension in another, demoralization in another—all are different manifestations only of economic pressure. The box office is backfiring on Hollywood, at last.

All this is in order. When depression comes and sales fall off production has to tighten its belt. Every big business in the land—and most all felt the present hard time in advance of the film business, has been putting its production house in apple-pie order, sweeping out the overhead dust and clearing up the dark corners of waste.

But it is doubtful if Hollywood realizes this.

The stock market crash was a concrete thing; so was the Beesemyer failure. But to many high salaried studio folk it comes, if at all, as a distinct shock that box office receipts will not permit a continuation of the fool's paradise of the past two years, born as it was of general prosperity plus the novelty sweep of the talking picture.

The vicious thing about Hollywood may be expressed in a word of five letters—money.

To many in Hollywood this will be a highly ironic statement. A few thousand competent persons here are continuously in various stages of dire want or worry because comparatively a favored few fill all the fine jobs.

On the other hand, the favored few achieve salaries that the picture business, in these or even normal days, cannot possibly pay unless some factor along Box Office Avenue is willing to take a loss.

There's an old saying in show business that you can pay most anything for the right attraction. Lame ducks are the costly ones.

Quite true, insofar as the exception proves the rule. Harold Lloyd, for instance, has successfully paid himself an enormous salary.

But we are speaking now of the major studios to whom the box office looks for some 400 features a year; and of their

VITAPHONE MARKS FIVE YEAR GROWTH

Anniversary Finds Talking Picture Equipment Installed In 11,000 Theatres in the United States And in Several Thousand Houses Throughout the World

"It is obvious that the talking picture has its definite place in the film scheme. But this does not mean that the silent picture is doomed. On the contrary, it will remain the backbone of the industry's commercial background."

JESSE L. LASKY

". . . I think that as we get further into them [talking pictures], we will find that eventually talking pictures will be restricted to certain types of productions rather than that the trend will be to make all pictures talk. The silent picture technique is too well established. . . ."

CARL LAEMMLE

The foregoing, voiced a few years back, is merely a preamble to the story that on August 6, Vitaphone talking pictures celebrate their fifth anniversary. Since that night in 1926, when the talking picture made its debut, it has gradually superseded the silent until today, a survey of product will show, it is the rule with the silent the exception.

Five years ago, an executive of Warner Brothers points out, "people pooh-poohed the idea that sound synchronized with action would ever be successfully accomplished. Today, however, the talking picture is a tremendous success in all portions of the world."

To observe the anniversary, Warner Brothers has prepared a special program of feature releases and Vitaphone shorts.

"Despite the improvements in the recording of sound in pictures made since that memorable night in August of 1926," said a Warner statement, "all of the numbers on the original program are as entertaining today as they were on their introduction. This is particularly true of the Martinelli number from 'Pagliacci,' the musical numbers contributed by Efram Zimbalist and Harold Bauer, and the operatic drama, 'Li Fiesta,' in which Anna Case and the chorus from the Metropolitan Opera House took part.

"With the tremendous success talking pictures are enjoying, it is difficult to realize that five years ago people pooh-poohed the idea. What is stranger still is the fact that even in the motion picture industry there were men who held that even if sound and action could be synchronized the public would not be interested in it. These men pointed to the fact that Edison had perfected a machine for talking pictures and that in face of skilful exploitation nothing came of it.

"Despite the pronounced public success of the Vitaphone talking pictures their growth was slow, the Warners preferring to prepare the public for them by easy stages. At first all of their productions merely boasted of synchronized musical scores. Of the shorts which were produced the majority were made up of orchestras, bands and instrumentalists. In the production of 'In Old San Francisco' with Dolores Costello, which took place at the Warner Theatre, on June 21, 1927, sound was introduced.

"The great effort on the part of the Warners occurred on October 5, 1927 when they introduced Al Jolson in 'The Jazz Singer.' In addition to his songs Jolson had a line or two of dialogue in this picture and its tremendous success was the fiat to the film industry that the era of silent pictures had come to an end. The first picture to boast of considerable dialogue was 'The Tenderloin' with Dolores Costello, and the first picture to be free from subtitles was an adaptation of Edgar Wallace's mystery story, 'The Terror.' All of the early history of Vitaphone pictures is connected with the Warner theatre.

"The first 100 per cent talking picture was 'The Lights of New York,' introduced at the Strand theatre at a midnight showing on July 6, 1928.

"There was a period in 1926 after the introduction of Vitaphone that the houses wired for the new product could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Today over 11,000 theatres in this country are wired for sound and thousands are wired, or being wired, throughout Europe and the Continent."

Canada Exchanges Industrial Film Ad Series With England

A new type of advertising reel is coming into Canada, in the shape of a series of exchanged semi-dramatized film subjects between the various dominions of the Empire. They come under the plan of the British Empire Marketing Board.

The Ontario government has shipped 16 to England and received 16 in return. They may be used by provincial governments as a wedge for British quota systems. They are called by the English "poster films," and cover various industrial phases.

Mayor Vetoes Sunday Opening; Up to Council

They almost had Sunday shows at Willmar, Minn. Then Mayor Peter Bonde stepped in. The proposal had been approved by a close vote June 2 at an election paid for by Publix, but the mayor vetoed it. Now the leaders in the movement, Don Chambers of the Minneapolis Publix office and Harold Johnson, Educational manager, are hoping that the council will override the veto.

Chamber of Commerce to Aid Miniatures to Re-establish

President A. M. Lockett of the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce has invited owners of miniature golf courses "to assist in re-popularizing the courses and putting them on a paying basis."

Meanwhile, legitimate and motion picture theatres are paying heavy city and state taxes, while the miniature golf courses are paying nothing.

Film Evidence!

Another case where a motion picture is serving as a key point in a damage suit, is that of Rasmus P. Anderson against a steamship company at San Francisco. Rasmus is asking $35,000 for alleged injuries sustained when a piece of iron fell on his hand, while working on the S. S. Ventura. The defense, contending that he was not as badly hurt as he claims, offers a motion picture, taken without his knowledge, showing Rasmus at work building a house, sawing, hammering and climbing ladders. The judge will decide.

Laemmle, Jr. Sees 5 "Aces" In New Season Product

Carl Laemmle, Jr., has stated on the Universal lot very emphatically, that the company has five pictures on the new season program which should stand up against the best output of any other company.

The five are "Waterloo Bridge," directed by James Whale; "Strictly Dishonorable" from the stage play, directed by John M. Stahl; "Heaven on Earth," with Lew Ayres starred; "East of Borneo," sensational animal type film; "Frankenstein," a "Dracula" type film with James Whale directing.

Others are "The Spirit of Notre Dame," "Murders in the Rue Morgue," "Back Street," "Twenty Grand" and a Walter Huston picture. When questioned on the reports that Universal's directorial staff was being reorganized with young blood predominating, Laemmle,Jr., answered, "That is already true."

Two Year Columbus Dispute Ended by Owner and Union

J. Real Neth, who has operated the Grand, Cameo, State, Clinton and Eastern theatres in Columbus, Ohio, for two years on an open-shop policy, has announced a final agreement with the union, with the 16 projectionists and two mechanics returning to work August 1.

Neth, whose person and theatres have been threatened during the long dispute, pointed out that the action was an agreement and not a complete concession by him to the union demands.

Thalberg Sees a Good Market For Our Films Abroad

Irving Thalberg, M-G-M production executive on the Coast, just returned from Europe, found conditions there better than he had expected, and expressed the belief that there is a large potential market for American films which can meet the European taste, according to a signed interview by William A. Johnston, in the Hollywood Herald on Thursday.

"The most important factor today, as far as the American industry is concerned, is the attitude of the foreign press toward our pictures," said Thalberg. "It is adversely critical to an astounding degree. British papers are more fair, but the continental papers are filled daily with articles and reviews openly and unrestrainedly hostile to American pictures, studios and operations. The worst of it is that it is obviously a reflection largely of the American press. Everything critical of pictures and production that appears in our newspapers is quoted at length. A curious situation exists. Foreign papers, as one, are praising their own product and decrying ours, whereas our own newspapers seem anxious to go out of the way to lavish praise on artistry, so-called, of French and German productions which reach our theatres," said the M-G-M chief.

"One would think America would take pride in leading the industry which has conquered the world trade to such a remarkable degree. American studios and theatres have performed a gigantic and most creditable task. We should at least have home recognition. It is high time to be constructive. The good work could well start in Hollywood. It is about time for all to speak of the creditable work being done and stop the irresponsible bickering that exists," Thalberg concluded.

Over Tax Noted Against Publix

The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation at Washington has reported an over-assessment of $402,134 against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for 1918 to 1920.

The company is now Paramount-Publix Corporation. The case is in the hands of the Government, the over-assessment having been due to a miscalculation.

Fox Plans Houses In Orient, Says Returned Theatre Man

Herbert A. McNeil, theatre and real estate man just arrived in San Francisco from the Orient, reported Fox Film and the Golden Gate theatre interests planning to build houses at Manila, Hongkong, Kobe and Tokio.

Sites have already been acquired through lease or purchase, and actual construction merely awaits the completion of architects' preparations, according to McNeil.

POOLING OF CIRCUIT OPERATION IS SEEN

More Wodehouse Backfire

And now it seems that P. G. Wodehouse's farflung words anent the motion picture industry have drawn fire from another quarter.

Roland Pertwee, writing from Devon, England, to J. L. Warner, vice-president of Warner-First National and in charge of production on the coast, says:

"I very much regret that Mr. Wodehouse should have labored under the delusion that I was slung out of Burbank by the 'cop.' I knew nothing about his article until I read it at Cherbourg. On arriving in London I instructed the reporters who met me to deny the incident as having happened to myself. Also I asked them to say that I had received at your hands nothing but the greatest courtesy and consideration. . . . I would like to add further that, unlike my friend Wodehouse, I am in no sense appalled at the amount of salary I drew, nor am I troubled by any pangs of conscience about the amount of work I did. I only hope that work will not have turned out too badly."

Pertwee wrote the dialogue of "I Like Your Nerve," in which Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., will star, and also the story for "The Road to Singapore," in which William Powell will be seen.

Cameramen, Technicians Organize Opposition Unit

Two hundred thirty cameramen and sound technicians met in New York this week to organize the International Cameramen and Sound Technicians' Union, which will function in opposition to the International Photographers.

Harrison C. Meyer is president and Sherman Pratt secretary. The initiation fee is $50.

Coast Operators Take 15 Per Cent Salary Cut

Motion picture projectionists of southern California have agreed to a 15 per cent salary cut for ninety days.

The action is seen as probably preventing the closing of additional Fox West Coast houses, and permitting the reopening of some.

"Boarding School" Postponed

Filming of "Boarding School," M-G-M story, has been indefinitely postponed for rewriting and the elimination of risque matter.

Report Comerford Will Manage Paramount and Fox Theatres In Upstate New York

Conferences held in New York this week indicated the possibility of the consolidation under one operating unit of most of the New York upstate theatres now owned and operated by Paramount-Publix, Fox Theatres and the Comerford interests. These conferences followed a visit made within the last two weeks by M. E. Comerford and some of his associates to virtually all of the cities from Yonkers to Buffalo in which Publix and Fox now operate.

The reported deal is said to include all theatres of the three interests except certain key city situations and said to exclude the Publix-Shea houses in Buffalo, although it is reported to take in some of the Fox neighborhood theatres in Buffalo.

The Fox holdings in upstate New York include the old Schine Circuit of approximately thirty theatres and of which the center of operations was Gloversville. Publix now operates in Yonkers, Poughkeepsie, Newburgh, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo and other cities. Fox operates in Niagara Falls. The chief Comerford interests in upstate New York are centered around Binghamton where they not long ago acquired the Cohen and Kornblite Circuit, combined with the theatres owned by Kallet in Rome, Oneida, Syracuse and Utica. The Comerford people also have been closely affiliated with the Benton Circuit operating about ten houses located from Saratoga Springs to Plattsburg.

It is impossible to obtain from any of the principals involved any details of the proposed merger of upstate theatres but the reported deal is said to be a consolidation of operations with a possibility that the Comerford interests would assume management.

The Comerford company sold a large number of its important Pennsylvania theatres to Paramount Publix about a year ago, but it retained a number of small town situations in Northern Pennsylvania and its New York state interests, since which time it has acquired Binghamton from Cohen and Kornblite and the Kallet theatres, these acquisitions making them almost as important in New York State as either Paramount or Fox.

One significant fact in connection with the reported deal is that William E. Cadoret, for many years the Comerford buyer, has been headquartered for several weeks in Oneida.

Chicago Clubs Tacitly Agree To Showing of "Hell Bound"

Tiffany's "Hell Bound" will not be affected by the objections of clergy and women's clubs to gangster pictures at the Rogers Park theatres, Chicago. The objections have heretofore kept several films of that class from important North Side bookings.

CAROLINA SHOWMEN PLEDGE STATE AID

Admission: One Bushel!

On Saturdays in Amarillo, Tex., the price of admission at the local theatres, should you chance to be a farmer, is one bushel of wheat, which admits the entire family. The theatres adopted this policy, they said, in an effort to aid the farmer in the present deplorable wheat situation, with the price per bushel at rock bottom.

Offer Screens to Executives at Capital at Raleigh for Pushing Ten-Year Plan

A forward-looking gesture in which theatre men see an outstanding case of recognition of the value of institutional cooperation is the decision of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina to cooperate with the state officials of North Carolina in presenting on the screens the ten-year development plan of the state.

This decision was one of the highlights of the convention of the exhibitors' organization at the Oceanic hotel at Wrightsville Beach, N. C. President Charles W. Picquet named Senator A. G. Sams of Winston-Salem and W. G. Culoe of Raleigh to call upon Governor Max Gardner and formally enlist the theatre owners in this big service to the state.

Support was pledged to the MPTOA and to its president, M. A. Lightman, who was one of the speakers at the two-day convention. Others who addressed the sessions were M. J. O'Toole, secretary of the national organization, Senator John Umstead of Chapel Hill, Senator Lunsford Long of Roanoke Rapids, Mayor Harry Buchanan of Sylva, N. C., J. B. Sherrill of Charleston, S. C., Jack Barry, director of personnel for Publix Theatres, A. B. Wilby of Atlanta, Dave Palfreyman of the MPPDA, A. Julian Brylawski, chairman of the national legislative committee, Mayor Walter Blair of Wilmington, N. C., and A. C. LaRue of Philadelphia.

The MPTOA was asked by resolution to hold its next convention in Pinehurst, N. C. The legislative committee was thanked for its work at the last session in Raleigh.

An informal serial session was conducted Monday night at the Oceanic hotel, with Mrs. Walter Griffith, secretary of the two-state organization, in charge.

Inventor-Usher

Francis Bowling, 17 year old Majestic theatre usher in Gettysburg, Pa., has just patented a heliocopter airplane of a new type, which may have an effect on the future of airplane construction. The wings are attached to the motor, in the new ship, and may be driven up and down like the side wheels of an old steam boat. His work as an usher was for the purpose of acquiring sufficient funds to patent the invention, on which he had worked two years.

Midget Moderne Houses to Play Ufa in Midwest

Negotiations are under way in Chicago between Louis Machat, independent exhibitor, and F. Wynne-Jones, American representative for Ufa, the conclusion of which, if successful, will result in a circuit of small, modernistic theatres in the Middlewest to play Ufa pictures exclusively.

Ufa will have no financial interest in the houses, it is understood.

In addition to operating the theatres, Machat would become the Central district distributor for Ufa.

Theatres, which will seat between 300 and 400, will be constructed immediately in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee and St. Louis, according to the program. Machat's Cinema Artguild theatre will be used in Chicago.

To finance the circuit, it is hoped to obtain 50 per cent of the capital through the sale of investment securities to prospective German patrons, with the balance of the financing done by a group of architects and builders, whose names at this time cannot be divulged.

Booking deals are also pending with Tobis and other foreign producers.

Theatre Competition Gone As Carnivals Are Banned

Hagerstown, Md., theatre owners have no fear of competition from summer carnivals this year, since the city officials, upon recommendation of the police department, will not issue any permits for the operation of carnivals.

Chadwick Making 12 Comedies To Be Distributed by T. P. E.

Columbia Uses New 'Adometer' In New York Cab Advertising

Columbia has contracted for "Adometer" space in 1,000 taxi cabs in New York City, the first production to be so advertised being "The Miracle Woman," to have its premiere shortly at a Broadway de luxe house.

The new machine, built into the cab, is a rotary sign, which displays each individual ad at the rate of four times every 15 minutes. Columbia expects a class audience of 40,000 per day.

Production Overtures Supplant Stage Shows

Production overtures, bringing into play the Saenger pit orchestra, will supplant the local stage shows at the Saenger in New Orleans, due to a disagreement between the management and the stagehands' union as to the number of stagehands who must be employed.

Sacramento Finds 'Go to Show Week' A Great Success

Nine theatres in Sacramento, Cal., under the sponsorship of the Sacramento Amusement Guide, recently conducted a co-operative "Go to Show Week" to inaugurate the summer season, which is reported as having been highly successful in concentrating the attention of the city's population on the motion picture theatres.

Screen trailers, window cards, radio broadcasts, special lobby displays, lines across amusement ads, all were utilized in an effort to put across the "Go to Show Week" idea. Pointed out as unique in the campaign was the fact that all theatres handled the "week" as a strictly co-operative effort, with no one house attempting to individualize the publicity campaign in any way.

Names Withheld in Plan of Giving Academy Awards

Instead of voting by name on directors, cameramen, art directors and sound technicians awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences this year, the ballots first will be cast for accomplishments in these departments and the individuals responsible will be identified afterward.

The list of nominations for the honor of being adjudged the best picture of the year is being sent out this week and it is expected there will be 300 titles and casts on the roll. Only titles and names of principal players are being sent.

M. A. Namazie, Head of Far East Company, Dies

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

NOW that Horace Liveright has poured his heart out to the Los Angeles Times about what he thinks of the motion picture business there is some speculation as to whether he may return to the book publishing business in New York. A years or so ago Mr. Liveright became quite displeased with some aspects of the motion picture industry, while he was then active in the Liveright publishing concern and was variously engaged in dramatic production. In that period he arranged for the writing of and made a contract for the publication of a book about one of the more important personages of the industry. Then abruptly things took a turn. He withdrew largely from the book publishing business and took a post with Paramount. When the book manuscript in question was delivered he found it "unavailable." There was a considerable submerged fuss about the matter but the book did not see the light of day. It seems that if the book had been as sensational as contemplated it could have been even less acceptable, in the light of Mr. Liveright's then new motion picture connection. It may be a cheerful reflection to P. G. Wodehouse that just when he was getting the heat of resentment about his remarks on his idle $104,000 year in the industry, along came Mr. Liveright to draw the fire. Who is next? The motion picture industry, what with the weather and this and that, is in all the patient temper of a she-bear with cubs in flytime.

The rooster has lost another friend. This week the duPont Pathe Film Manufacturing Company went down to Wilmington in Delaware and changed its name to duPont Film Manufacturing Company. This change has been in contemplation on the part of the duPont concern for some years. While Pathe Exchange, Inc., now in liquidation, owns 49 per cent of the film company, its name is not considered an asset in the raw stock business in sales to other concerns. This interest in the film manufacturing concern is the biggest single asset of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the one of chief interest to the holders of Pathe bonds. The change of name in nowise changes the interrelation between Pathe and duPont interests, at this time.

467,568 Seats Are Added in Europe

Europe's total of new theatres and added seating capacity has shown a marked increase, according to a Berlin survey. The total increase in 1930 was 478 new theatres with 467,568 seats, while the growth in 1939 was 439 theatres seating 383,550.

England retained the lead, with 175 new theatres seating 250,000. Germany dropped from second to fourth, with 60 new houses seating 40,000, while France went into second place with 76 theatres and 54,700 seats. Spain added 48 seating 51,588 and Czechoslovakia 60 with 26,000 seats.

Cannot Decide Local Option; May Resort To Popular Vote

The recently enacted Ohio law making Sunday theatre operation a matter of municipal option, has placed the city council of Wooster, O., in a quandry. If Sunday shows were prohibited, the theatre forces would present petitions, and if they were permitted, the "anti" forces would do likewise.

It was indicated by the city solicitor that the matter would probably be submitted to popular vote at the next election.

Previews Point To Bright Season of New Pictures

If the studios can continue their present high standard of production as indicated by previews, "or even continue fairly to approximate it, the daylight is shining ahead —and brightly," says William A. Johnston in an editorial in The Hollywood Herald.

"Last week ushered in 'Huckleberry Finn,' 'Merely Mary Ann' and 'Monkey Business,' Johnston points out. 'These three are surefire. No one need hesitate over that prediction.

"We know how 'Tom Sawyer' has done; 'Huckleberry Finn' is right abreast of its production value and Junior Durkin gives it an advantage. We know the box office power of Gaynor and Farrell. In 'Merely Mary Ann' there's the romance in which they shine. In 'Monkey Business' the Marx Brothers exceed their former successes. That is the general opinion, and a decided one. The rip roaring pace of this picture make a new record in fast and sustained tempo. Gags aplenty and all brightly new. The four famous play boys at their level best.

"Here we have family trade appeal, variety, box office names and other exploitation values."

Metro Split With Stanley Rumored in Philadelphia

Philadelphia rumors, following the Paramount and Stanley-Warner agreement, indicate that M-G-M is ready to withhold its product from the Stanley circuit, unless terms of a new contract are met, said to ask for added percentage. Metro may enter the independent exhibition field if it is not satisfied with the situation.

There are several possible locations in the city for a Metro outlet. The Erlanger, a legitimate house; the Chestnut, a wired Shubert theatre, and a site which is reported to be an independent holding, and large enough for a de luxe house, are the principal situations.

Fire "Not Successful," So Theatre Will Reopen

The Lincoln Square theatre in Broadway, one of the oldest vaudeville houses in New York, reopens August 29 following the completion of remodeling necessitated by a fire which gutted it early this year. "The fire," says Oscar Doob, advertising manager of Loew Theatres, "was not successful."

Although one of the oldest variety theatres, the Lincoln Square reopens with a straight picture policy.

Manager Exchanges Shots With Bandits Who Get $50

Two bandits held up and robbed the cashier of the Maffitt theatre, St. Louis, Mo., of $50 in receipts, and escaped after exchanging shots with the manager, Clarence Groteke.

Covering Nellie Stapleton, cashier, and the ticket taker with revolvers, the two pocketed the contents of the cash drawer, but missed another $50 removed a few minutes before.

Up to the Exhibitor

Exhibitors are to have an opportunity to decide for themselves whether they will show a new comedy starring Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle.

The picture, to be made on the Educational lot with the approval of President E. W. Hammons, will be produced in two versions, one of them starring Arbuckle, the other with another comedian. Arbuckle will direct the one in which he is not starred and possibly the other also.

Skouras Company Receivership In St. Louis Court

Harry Koplar, former associate of the Skouras brothers and at one time vice president of the St. Louis Amusement Company, is accused of having instigated receivership suits against Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., and the St. Louis Amusement Company. The formal answers of the defendants filed in court, charge the chief purpose of the suits is to force Warner Brothers to pay an excessive price for minority stock held by the complainants.

The hearing of the suit against the Skouras Brothers Enterprises, which came up July 27 was featured by the introduction of evidence tending to show that the company suffered to the detriment of the minority stockholders since Warners obtained control of the St. Louis theatres.

The minority stockholders are seeking the receivership on the ground that the company is being operated in the interests of Warner Brothers chiefly, and that the Skouras brothers accepted the Warner offer for the "B" stock in preference to a better offer from Paramount-Publix, which would have taken over all of the "A" as well as the "B" stock.

Demand Right To See Firm's Books

James E. McPherson and other stockholders have filed a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the Consolidated Film Industries, a Delaware corporation, to open its books to examination. The petition was filed at Wilmington, Del.

The bill states that the petitioners own 21,000 shares of common stock, and they desire access to the books to locate names and addresses of other stockholders so they may consult them in regard to the corporation's management and the desirability of a change. They claim permission to examine the books was refused by representatives of the corporation.

ALLIED CONTRIBUTES $100,000 TO "CHEST"

Virtually All Illinois Members to Aid In Inquiry; Expect Cermak to Oust Joe Maloy and 300

Members of The Allied States Association have to date pledged over $100,000 to the Allied "war chest" for the investigation and prosecution of the officials indicted in the inquiry into the Chicago projectionists' union. Only several thousands have been turned in in cash, but virtually the entire membership of the exhibitor organization stands ready to back their pledges of from $1,000 to $2,000. It is understood they feel they will get their money back inside of a month if the prosecution is successful, since that will eliminate the second man in the booth within a very short time.

Indictments of the seven officials and associates were to be returned Friday, prior to the dismissal of the Cook County grand jury.

That phase of the projectionist problem may be even closer of realization, since it is understood at city hall that Mayor Cermak may act within the next few days on the recommendation of the state's attorney's office that Joe Maloy, indicted city examiner of motion picture operators' licenses, be removed from office, and 300 "permit" operators' licenses, be revoked. This will automatically eliminate the second projectionist phase of the situation, and relieve exhibitors of the fundamental cause of the investigation.

Allied States has meanwhile gone ahead with its own inquiry into conditions, with numerous investigators having been retained to run down evidence furthering the continuation of the state's attorney's delving into the union affairs, which have already resulted in the indictment of five officials and two alleged associates.

Allied of Illinois also has three or four young attorneys aiding the state's attorney in the gathering of evidence and assembling of that already in hand, as well as furnishing new leads to the prosecutors. That and other detail work which they are doing, is said by the state's attorney's office to very likely hasten the preparation of criminal cases against the indicted seven, and perhaps bring about an earlier trial than had heretofore been thought possible.

With prediction from the two state's attorneys, Charles Lounsbury and Charles Bellows, that all seven indicted men will be convicted and adding that additional indictments are in immediate prospect, there is now a definite possibility that police and city officials will be drawn into the situation. The prosecutors, in inquiring into the shooting and slugging of Milton Krueger, recalcitrant exhibitor, in the Paramount exchange 18 months ago, have uncovered irregularities in the manner in which the police investigated the attack.

William Canavan, president of the International Alliance of Motion Picture Operators, has been in Chicago for several days, supposedly in connection with the indictments, but his attempts to communicate with the state's attorney's office have been unsuccessful.

Scarface Al Speaks!

Alphonse (Scarface Al) Capone, chatting while clad in black silk pajamas in his Chicago hotel suite, on the eve of sentence for violation of the income tax and prohibition laws, and calling himself "an issue," had this to say about motion pictures: "These gang pictures—that's terrible kid stuff. Why, they ought to take all of them and throw them in the lake." (pictures, not kids). "They're doing nothing but harm to the younger element of the country. I don't blame the censors for trying to bar them. Now, you take all these youngsters who go to the movies. Well, these gang movies are making a lot of kids want to be tough guys, and they don't serve any useful purpose." That, apparently, is that!

Vote Milestone First In Best Directors Poll

Lewis Milestone took first place in Film Daily's poll for the 10 best directors of 1930-31, in which approximately 300 motion picture critics participated. Milestone received 252 votes. He directed "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "The Front Page."

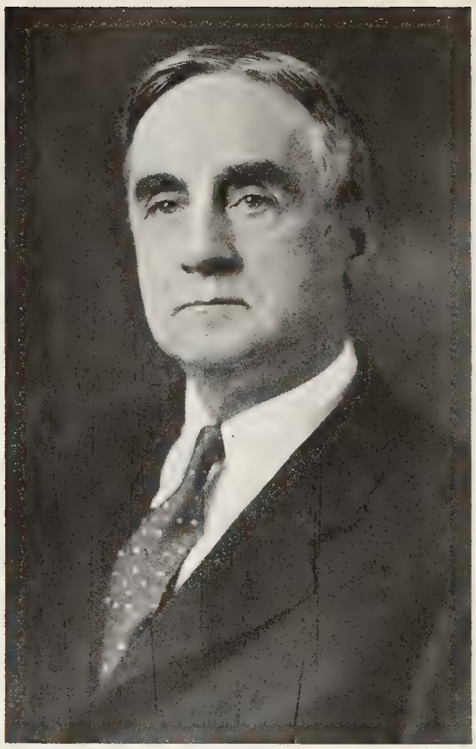
Wesley Ruggles took second with 179 votes, followed by George Hill, 160; Josef von Sternberg, 148; D. W. Griffith, 139; Robert Z. Leonard, 137; John Cromwell, 111; Charles Chaplin, 101; Howard Hawks, 101 and Howard Hughes, 91.

For the first time in the six years of the voting, Ernst Lubitsch was not included among the 10 best, though this is attributed to the fact that he directed only one picture during the year.

F & M to Produce In Four Centers

With the adding of the Publix deluxe theatres to its circuit bookings, Fanchon & Marco has expanded its facilities for the production of stageshows. In addition to Hollywood and New York, where separate units are whipped into shape for the Roxy, "Ideas" are being produced in St. Louis and Detroit.

Gae Foster will supervise certain units in both St. Louis and Detroit, while others will be under the personal direction of Fanchon.



This advertisement is the sixth of a series on success in the picture industry

a victor over adversity

MR. M. E. COMERFORD, in his career as a motion picture exhibitor, has become a personal exemplification of the quality of success which comes with the defeat of adversities. He began more than twenty-five years ago with a little theatre in the anthracite region of Pennsylvania. It was one of the great battle grounds of the capital and labor strifes which arose in those low wage years. Mr. Comerford was faced with the problems of the then bitterly struggling motion picture industry and the problems of the industrial and social conditions of the strike torn country he served. He had a hand in all these struggles and having that, he won a share in the victories that came out of them. He expanded his interests, built and bought theatres, and he sold entertainment to an entertainment hungry country. Mostly his battle was selling them and keeping them sold, in hard times and good times. He bought pictures, sold his way to success.

come out of the woods

A long time ago when life in this wide country was simple, when merchandise was scarce and merchandisers few, Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson, a New England philosopher, wrote something to the general effect that if a man built a better mouse trap than his neighbors, even though his house were in the woods, the world would beat a path to his door. That was very true—in its day.

Sometime later when the industrial era had got well under way another Yankee philosopher, Fra Elbert Hubbard of East Aurora, came forth with the assertion: "He who bloweth not his own horn, the same it shall not be blown." And Elbert Hubbard could sell anything—including a roycroft mouse trap, if he had had one.

Now merit is still a great thing. No permanent success can come without it. But merit in the shady stillness of the tall timber will never be discovered. The busy boy with his mouse trap displayed on the main road will get the business.

Once upon a time in the motion picture industry selling consisted in telling the clamoring exhibitor when and what film the exchange would let him have. And exhibition selling consisted of a phonograph in the lobby and a one sheet on the side of the house.

The exhibitor clamors no longer and the public shops before it buys at the box office.

Also the show business is a business of vociferation. From the beginning it has had its barker, its ballyhoo, its calliope. They say "silence is golden"—but not in the show business.

The business of today and tomorrow will be done by those who do the selling. The pages of Quigley publications talk to more customers every week than all the traveling salesmen of the industry can in a month.

"Grown Up" Golf Course in Chicago May Give Theatre Owners Some Competition

Chicago is about to be the center of a new "grown up" miniature golf game, which, if successful, may give theatre managers some little of the competition they experienced from the original vest pocket editions.

The promotors of the venture, R. D. Cunningham and Joe Roseman, call it "Night Golf," and it offers nine holes, distances from 75 to 165 yards, on an 18 acre tract on the northwest city limits. Wooden clubs are out, but all the irons may be used, say the promoters. Nine steel towers, each 75 feet high, light the course, with a total of 125 watts. Total cost of the course, including $32,000 for the lighting system, is put at $43,000.

Admissions are 75 cents during the day and $1 at night, with a 50 cent charge for additional rounds after the first. Similar attempts in other cities are said to have failed because of inadequate lighting, a difficulty which is understood to have been overcome in Chicago. It remains to be seen whether or not theatres will be disturbed.

Plan to Produce French, English Films in Canada

Talkies, in both French and English, under Canadian auspices, will soon be realized if plans now in hand up Ottawa way meet with no serious obstacle.

The newly-formed St. Lawrence Moving Picture Corporation has applied for authorization from the Canadian government to erect a studio for the production of talkies at Ironside, Que. According to published announcements the proposed studio will be erected at once and will have a floor space of 150 by 100 feet.

It is said that the Provincial Government of Quebec has agreed to furnish support "should the venture prove to be a success."

The vice-president of the company planning this new enterprise is the French-Canadian comedian, Pierre Desrosiers of Montreal. M. Desrosiers is likewise the official spokesman for the new company and he says:

"We want to start in a modest way. We don't want to fool the public into thinking that we have something grand and glorious. But we believe that in starting in a small way we may achieve something."

Associated with Desrosiers are Rene Fandrich, Canadian correspondent of the Educational Cinema committee of the League of Nations, and Henri Robichaud, of Montreal, who is the "business agent."

United Artists Goes Ahead On Building

United Artists is going ahead with its building plans in the Far West while a deal is being negotiated under which Fox West Coast would take over operation of the theatres. One house is now in operation in San Francisco, another is under way at Richmond, Cal., and plans have been completed for a theatre at Vallejo. The dispute last year between the two circuits was settled when Al Lichtman closed with the circuit for the new United Artists product.

Advertisers Will Stand Television Bill, Says Writer

Advertisers will be the showmen paying for the nationwide usage of television predicted for 1932 in "Radio and Advertising," the book of Orrin E. Dunlap, Jr., just published by Harper & Brothers. He warns that the television pictures must be supported by newspaper, magazine, billboard and other forms of advertising, with print continuing as the backbone of advertising.

The practical angle of television also is pointed out by the New York City YMCA in announcing that a West Side YMCA radio-television institute to train television technicians is to be started in the new educational building of the organization in September.

"Television, at present, compares favorably with the earphone stage of the early days of radio reception," says Louis L. Credner, principal of the West Side YMCA trade and technical schools." It offers unlimited opportunities for further experimentation."

Chief instructor of the course will be Harry Higginbotham, chief engineer of Jenkins Television Transmitter, New York.

From Cincinnati comes the news that Crosley Radio Corporation, operating WLW and WSAI, plans to erect a visual broadcasting station, with application for a waveband already having been filed. It would be used for experimentation for the present.

Demonstrate a New Lighting Control Board In Milwaukee

Cutler-Hammer, Inc., demonstrated recently a new type lighting control system, at the Pabst theatre, Milwaukee. A radical change in stage lighting equipment, the control board occupies less space than ordinary boards and can be placed anywhere in the theatre.

It is semi-automatic, and gives the operator complete control over speed and intensity of light at all times. Proportional dimming and the automatic blending of colors are also possible.

Color of Equal Efficiency With Black and White

Color films were brought to an equal efficiency basis with black and white films today through a series of tests conducted by RKO-Radio Pictures at the Coast plant.

Wedding the improved Technicolor process with the new super-sensitive film, faster lenses, new make-up and a radical innovation in set painting, the following important discoveries were made:

1. That color films can be produced at one-half former costs.
2. That one of the largest items of expense, electric current for lighting, can be reduced from one-half to one-third because of a decreased need for extreme lighting.
3. That color can be reproduced naturally, without flickering fringes or overlapping and without tiring the eyes.
4. That the faster lenses permit a clear color definition in both close-ups and long shots, said to be an impossibility with former color processes which discriminated one way or the other.
5. A reduction by at least one-half of the terrific heat produced on previous color sets. This, of course, is due to the need for less lighting units.
6. That creditable color reproduction is possible with normal outdoor lighting, such as might be used in photographing black and white subjects.
7. That the sensitivity to extreme color opposites is heightened 100 per cent, allowing for a more natural coloring of sets and costumes.
8. That make-up tests disclosed a decreased need for rouge on the faces of stars and permitted a more natural facial coloration.

The experiments at the RKO-Radio studio were conducted in association with Technicolor experts by Max Ree, art supervisor; Ernest Westmore, make-up chief, and Ray Rannahan, cinematographer.

French Studios to Make 150 As Compared With 94 in 1930

French studios will turn out approximately 150 features this season, compared with 94 in 1930, according to advices from Paris.

Production activity is said to be overflowing the capacity of the French studios. nd installations in French houses have already passed the 900 mark.

LADIES OF FASHION. In real life this time, the four featured screen actresses being shown at tea at the swanky Annandale Country Club in Pasadena, where they attended a fashion show. All are First National players—Mae Madison, Lillian Bond, Evalyn Knapp and Polly Walters.

THREE GENERATIONS. And the three of 'em equally young. Feel that way, you know, as one gathers from observing them on the screen. In the center is Jackie Cooper, recently signed by M-G-M, who says the others—Marie Dressler and Dorothy Jordan, also of M-G-M—are his best girls.

CAMERAMAN. Here is a bit of recognition for one of that all-important group of men-behind-the-picture, Ernie Haller, cinematographer at the First National studio. Incidentally, here is a good shot of the kind of camera being used today in the shooting of talking pictures.

GANGSTER. But the kind we love. A member of Hal Roach's Our Gang, and it's newest. He is Sherwood Bailey, Jr.—but he will be known as Spud.

WOTTA LIFE! Manuscripts everywhere and—but James R. Quirk, editor of Photoplay Magazine, says that there really are some ideas in them. The manuscripts were submitted in the Photoplay Magazine—Warner Brothers' contest seeking a good film story to fit the title, "Beauty and the Boss."

IN CONFERENCE. A Hollywood habit that even Charles C. Pettijohn, conference veteran of the Hays Organization, had to succumb to during his visit to the production capital. Here he has words with Wallace Beery, about—maybe that stock issue: Angustora Bitters versus Pale Orange!

CAN I COME IN? Anyway, that about expresses it, since Helen Hayes of stage fame is so anxious to join the ranks of successful screen stars. In fact, her first picture, M-G-M's "Lullaby," is being remade because the first effort, she felt, didn't promise her a career on the screen.

CAFETERIA. Illustrating the well known saying that he who helps himself gets rich or jailed. Reading from the sublime to the ridiculous, we have Robert Woolsey and Bert Wheeler, those funny screen fellows, shown exactly as they arrived in London the other day.

KEEP MANAGERS IN ONE CITY; WOBBER

Wanted!

Missouri is taking steps to put behind bars Ray Renard, former St. Louis gangster, who has been lately employed in Hollywood as an assistant director, because of his knowledge of crime from the inside. He was convicted in 1923 for carrying concealed weapons, and sentenced to two years. Later he was given executive clemency by President Coolidge after turning state's evidence in the United States Government prosecution of men involved in a mail truck holdup. There was an understanding at the time that Renard would not be molested if he stayed out of Missouri, but apparently that has been forgotten.

Few Unions Seek Increased Wages

Three hundred of the 695 projectionists' locals in the United States will meet exhibitors on new contracts when the current agreements expire on the last day of August, but only in a few localities is it expected that higher scales will be demanded.

Resolution of Trade Board Praises Secretary's Service

The full membership of the Charlotte N. C. Film Board of Trade in final session before the discontinuance of the Charlotte board on June 29, passed a resolution in testimony to the valuable services rendered by the retiring secretary, Mrs. Marion G. Wrenn.

Speaking very highly of Mrs. Wrenn's services, the resolution requests the home office of the Film Board of Trade to re-employ her on the re-opening of the Charlotte Board, and if possible provide her with another secretaryship until that time.

Circuits Would Show Poor Showmanship If They Dropped Theatres, Declares Paramount Executive

For circuits to drop key houses would be poor showmanship, says Herman Wobber, general manager of distribution for Paramount Publix from Denver westward, in an exclusive interview with the Hollywood Herald. In fact, declares Wobber, there is no good reason for turning back theatres to individual owners in wholesale lots or even a slight percentage of the circuit holdings. At the same time, in his opinion, circuit owners must show interest in community problems. Making resident management permanent will be a vital factor in future circuit policy, he believes.

Cites Buying Advantage

When the reported plans of Paramount, Warner Brothers and Fox to relinquish important groups of circuit-operated houses to independent owners were mentioned to Wobber, he said:

"I can see no reason why there should be even a slight reversion of theatres to former owners—let alone wholesale reversion—unless the financial structure of some of the circuit operators is such that temporary losses in some situations may be too great to carry. Most of the circuits with which I am familiar are making money as a whole.

"I do not believe it advisable, from a showman's point of view, for circuits to have their key houses revert to individual owners. Advantages in buying and booking of talent are entirely too much in favor of circuit operation.

"Circuit management is learning that it must show all the interest in community problems that independent exhibitors do, and making permanent residents of house managers will certainly help to build goodwill for theatres.

Unit Production Factor

Of other current problems of the industry, Wobber said:

Unit productions, made by independents, will get a market based on quality.

The slump in theatre patronage is less than in other lines and due almost entirely to the financial depression.

Good pictures will bring prosperity to the theatre before other business groups can get back to normal.

Zoning changes will be governed by local conditions, such as shifting population and new theatres, and percentage deals on an equitable basis for buyer and seller will continue.

Musicals, properly treated and not released too freely, as in the early days of talking pictures, will be an important factor in future.

A mixed menu of comedy, sophisticated, sentimental and musical productions will bring the public back to the theatres.

"The motion picture business is all right," Wobber holds.

Billposters' Revenge!

Four billposters, formerly employed by the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, Louisville, Ky., are under arrest, charged by J. Hohnson Musselman, manager of the Rialto, with defacing posters for the Rialto and Strand. One of them, when arrested in the act, implicated three others. They claimed they were members of the Bill Posters' Union and had been defacing signs in retaliation after being discharged by the theatre organization. They are being held for the grand jury under bond of $2,000 each.

Tillotson Forms Publicity Bureau

Harold E. Tillotson, formerly of Paramount Publix and Theatre Service Corporation, has organized, with associates, the Associated Public Relations Guild, Inc., with offices in New York and London.

The company will handle the publicity and exploitation of radio, screen and stage stars, as well as corporations.

In charge of all newspaper relations will be Howard Lichey. The Associated staff will be composed of publicity men, writers, artists and photographers.

Pollak on Tour of Keys; Jones, Peerless Ad Chief

Adolph Pollak, general manager of the newly organized Peerless Productions, which has announced 24 features for the 1931-1932 season, left New York on Wednesday for a tour of the country. Pollak's route will take him through every key city for the organization of territorial distributors of Peerless product. On completion of his trip, he will visit Hollywood for a conference with the production executives of the three Peerless producing units.

Charles Reed Jones, publicist and author of mystery novels, has joined Peerless as director of advertising and publicity. Jones is the author of "The Mystery of Judge La Garde," second release of the Peerless "Perfection" group.

Double Value Seen In Unit Production

at a time," he said. "We will have no studio. Our plan is to rent stages as the occasion demands."

That the individually produced picture of high caliber is looked upon favorably by the major companies is indicated in the fact that Paramount Publix has just taken over for distribution "The Mad Parade," which was produced by Herman M. Gumbin and supervised by M. H. Hoffman. This picture will be released October 3.

"The Mad Parade" is an all-women feature with Evelyn Brent, Irene Rich, Louise Fazenda and Lilyan Tashman in the principal roles.

Commenting upon pictures of this type, Herman Wobber, Paramount sales manager for the division West of Denver, said this week: "Unit productions made by independents will get a market based upon the quality of the product."

Selznick, at his headquarters at the Hotel Pierre, declined to name the distribution companies with which he has been negotiating for the release of his product, which will be handled on a percentage basis.

"There are other companies with whom I am to discuss my plans, and I don't think it would be wise to give out names until negotiations have been successfully concluded," he explained.

In his estimation, "the motion picture industry is the only one in which quantity production is more expensive than individual production."

"Studio executives," he said, "are confronted with the task of doing too much. It is a human impossibility—and I know, for I have been in the studio—for one man to have a hand in the writing of the story, the script and the dialogue, and also in the casting and editing of from 50 to 70 pictures a year. Under that plan he cannot do those pictures justice.

The present method of production, in the opinion of Selznick, is the result of the fact that in past years any and every picture might be expected to be a success at the box office.

"Now, however," he added, "the public is shopping for its motion picture entertainment, and as a consequence the companies are glad to let down the bars to independents providing their product is comparable with the best.

"Milestone and I are working on a co-operative basis. He also sacrificed a big salary for his opinions regarding individual production, paralleling mine."

Selznick believes that in the not distant future all studios will turn to the unit plan of production for, he said, "they cannot continue the making of pictures on a factory basis."

It is possible that other prominent directors may join the Selznick-Milestone association, such names as King Vidor and Cecil B. DeMille having been mentioned.

As to talent, Selznick is of the opinion that they will encounter no difficulty in borrowing players from other companies.

That a unit production organization was in its formative stages was first announced to the trade by Motion Picture Herald in its issue of June 27.

OLD MAN ECONOMY CAN'T BE HELD OUT

payrolls that have rolled so easily up into eight figures; and of whether or not the public will pay the admission prices that will foot the heavy picture costs.

In other words, how many directors and feature leads are worth upwards of $50,000 a picture? And how can they be paid?

There are too many people shoving up these Hollywood salaries.

Take the case of a certain star.

Two years ago she stepped from the footlights to the incandescents.

She was a most talented stage actress, earning perhaps $500 a week. She was overjoyed to get $2,000 down payment against a possible studio contract, and she was hysterically happy later on over a contract that started at $1,000 a week and ran up to $3,000 a week for the fifth year.

Only two years have gone by, but what with the machinations of others and mad studio competition, she is now drawing $8,000 a week for some 42 weeks a year, and at that she probably feels that she is a sacrifice on the altar of movie greed and aggrandizement.

Does she know or care whether her pictures pay or not—that a half million gross which might take care of her salary has now slipped to $300,000? No! Why should she?

If this were an exceptional case, outrageous as it seems, the situation would not be alarming. But these swollen salaries exist so generally within the charmed circles of Hollywood's money mad aristocracy that studio payrolls become a financial nightmare.

And right here originates the broad curse of it all.

Because big overhead tends to smother the quality of pictures.

Divide the huge weekly expense of a studio into days, and the day into hours, and each hour lost is a young fortune. Hours must be saved. If not, the picture rolls up a disastrous cost before ever it begins.

"Are you ready?" yells the chief executive to the supervisor.

"Great Heavens! No! I haven't got a story."

"Get it!" is the order. "And hurry!"

So—the pressure is heartless, crushing, inescapable—pictures are rushed into preparation and out of the cutting room; and shooting schedules, with their allocated cost of thousands of dollars per hour, are shortened, shortened right up and then beyond the danger point.

Executives it would seem, must be supermen to face daily this financial nightmare and still keep their heads cool enough and their wits facile enough to turn out pictures that jell.

The few pictures that emerge successful from this production melee ring the box office bell and then the wise ones remark that good pictures make money and that is all there is to the picture business, anyway. Yes, but they succeed spectacularly—these few ones, because the majority fail.

Another thing—and, also, a basic one; you cannot have creative folk money-mad and money-fat and still keep them genuinely creative. The lightness, smartness, flippancy—in short, the artificiality of the flock of pictures which we dub "sophisticated" is probably a reflection of the philosophy of the people who make them. Exhibitors exclaim that there's no "heart" in pictures these days. Well, there's no heart in eight thousand a week, still less in the thirty thousand given another star; there's plenty of sophistication, undoubtedly.

So, Old Man Economy is knocking. But the right people won't hear him. It looks like the situation calls for a giant with a sledge hammer, to break the iron ring of the charmed circle, to smash to smithereens a lot of practices that just can't be tolerated in any stable business.

Money-Mad

ALIAS—THE BAD MAN — VERY GOOD
Tiffany

Acted with more than usual verve, and clean and wholesome in its presentation, this picture has all the ingredients that combine to make a good Western—a beautiful horse, excellent riding, the story book fascination of two old ranchers who have been losing cattle and who each suspect the other of rustling. (Star: Ken Maynard. Sound.)

BLACK CAMEL, THE — EXCELLENT
Fox

Mystery—A finely developed and cleverly worked out play in which Warner Oland, as Charlie Chan, the shrewd and lovable Chinese detective, pieces together the intricacies of the plot and finds the solution in the finished pattern. The background of Hawaii gives interest and distinction to the photography, and the problem of the plot itself holds all the suspense that anyone might require in his motion picture entertainment. (Stars: Warner Oland, Bela Lugosi and Dorothy Revier. Sound.)

CHILDREN OF DREAMS — GOOD
First National

Sigmund Romberg has written the music of this tuneful musical romance with its charming lilting airs. The story is that of a girl who sacrifices love for her career as a singer, only to find it is not enough. The background is that of the "auto gypsies" who follow the fruit crops on the Western Coast, gaily working in the hot sunlight and gaily dancing and singing at night; a novel departure and a relief from the mythical kingdoms of the Balkans. (Stars: Paul Gregory, Marion Schilling and Tom Patricola. Sound.)

EVERYTHING'S ROSIE — GOOD
RKO Radio

A comedy, featuring Robert Woolsey, that is notable for its simplicity. A carnival faker, told by the sheriff to "move along," comes upon a little child who has been badly treated by the old woman who is its foster parent. The child, sensing a sympathetic relationship, follows him on his way, and the companionship of the two, the delightful bond of cameraderie that develops from their mutual woes, makes for fine human interest and heart appeal. (Stars: Robert Woolsey, Anita Louise and John Darrow. Sound.)

HOLY TERROR, THE — GOOD
Fox

Western drama of juvenile as well as adult interest, the Holy Terror tells the story of a boy who was adopted under a false name and who grows to young manhood and to a realization of his loss with a determination to clarify the unhappy tangle. The plot gives the hero a chance to ride a handsome horse on open plains, and a pretty girl in the offing to help him to success. His daring courage on a broncho wins for him the title "the Holy Terror." This is clean, fine entertainment which has merited endorsement by all national groups. (Stars: George O'Brien, James Kirkwood, Sally Eilers. Sound.)

With this issue "Motion Picture Herald" begins the presentation of Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick's selection of specially approved motion pictures classified according to her opinion of their merit and the special fitness for the two principal audience classifications: the family audience including grown-ups and children, and, the strictly adult audience. She also gives her evaluation of the more desirable short product, with an eye to its various merits and special appeals. A considerable array of "selected lists" of motion pictures is now being presented by no less than seven, and perhaps more, selection committees representing various socially minded organizations. In view of the fact that these selections are obviously and of necessity made from the angle of view of the special cause of the organizations concerned, it is deemed a service for Mrs. McGoldrick to present a series of selections made with the same high standards of requirement, but free from the necessity of service to any special interest or organization, and in essence a selection of selections.

Mrs. McGoldrick is widely experienced in this labor of selection with some years of activity in viewing product with and for selection committees of several organizations. She has also a vivid, living contact with the motion picture, from the viewpoint of the American home, as the mother of a large and decidedly active family, with which she divides her attentions to the screen. She is a resident of Brooklyn and summers with her family at picturesque Sayville, the village of the wireless towers, down east on Long Island. Her writings and her radio talks concerning motion pictures reach a wide circulation in the United States and Canada.

HONEYMOON LANE VERY GOOD
Paramount

Eddie Dowling has brought to the screen a delightful family audience picture based on the musical comedy of the same name which was an outstanding stage hit during its Broadway run. The picture, however, is not a musical comedy, but a drama of more than average human interest. It has a few musical numbers. "Honeymoon Lane" is clean, high type entertainment and may be booked for discriminating audiences everywhere. All national groups have given the picture high rating. (Stars: Eddie Dowling, June Collyer and Ray Dooley. Sound.)

MISBEHAVING LADIES VERY GOOD
Vitaphone

Society comedy—This picture tells, sometimes with loud hilarity, the story of the small town of Milldale which turns itself out to welcome a Princess. A meek little housewife and her incompetent Joe find themselves the aunt and uncle of Helen the Princess of Bulgaria. The Princess, arriving on an earlier train than expected, is mistaken for a dressmaker and becomes a charming and amusing figure in an uproarious situation.

All reviewing groups have objected to the title of this picture which is a false label on a good product. It has averaged the rating of "very good" from all national groups. (Sound.)

NEWLY RICH VERY GOOD
Paramount

Comedy—A comedy satire that pokes a little fun at the precocious children of Hollywood who are never free to be just the simple children they would like to be. The cast, which includes Mitzie Green, Jackie Searl, Bruce Line, as the important children, is strengthened by the remarkably good performance of the delightful character artist, Edna May Oliver, whose work in this picture as well as in those others she has contributed to the screen in the past few years is brilliant and distinguished. Children will love this picture. Its satire is not above their heads, while the children in the cast are delicious. (Sound.)

SWEEPSTAKES GOOD
RKO Radio

A story of the race track with the usual plot of this type of picture—the misfortunes and final reinstatement of a dethroned jockey. Paramount

This is a drama of political life with a plot involved with present-day graft, scandals, political bosses and the doings of the vice squad. Shooing Unwanted Light Is Problem of Studio Expert

Eliminating unwanted light from a motion picture set is as great a problem as getting light where it is needed, they've found in Hollywood.

More than twenty kinds of incandescent lamps and lights are used to supply the illumination while there are twice as many ways of "steering" the rays, according to Louis Gasnier, Paramount director.

When several players are working in front of the camera, five or more lights play on each one and many more on the set behind them, the number depending upon the depth of the set.

The reflectors behind the globes are concave mirrors. Some of them are smooth, others broken into thousands of small triangles or rectangles which spread the light smoothly. The rays can be concentrated or sprayed out by moving the globe.

Light shields are used on an elaborate scale to keep the "spill" rays from reaching the set or striking the camera lens. Black cloth is stretched across the set, above and in front of the camera to keep the overheads from reaching the lens. Black panels are placed on either side of the camera several feet in front of it and just out of the picture to cut off the floor lights. These shields are made in many shapes for difficult lighting problems or for special effects.

See More British, Is One Mr. Bell's Song and Dance

That Canada should see more British films and fewer of those from the United States is the burden of the song of one T. H. Bell, Toronto legislator and active in Ontario political circles. Bell seems to have taken unto himself the task of promoting the British product to the elimination of all pictures made in the U. S. A.

Bell makes a practice of warbling his carol at meetings of Orange Lodges in Ontario. He has a group of stock phrases like "American monopoly," "British supremacy," "Film quotas," etc., etc., ad nauseam.

According to this eloquent pleader, were it not for the film censors in Canada, that country would be over-run with movies featuring gangsters, crime, sex and nudity "as is the case in a great part of the United States." He wants the nations of the British Empire to stick together in this motion picture business and he asserts that his beloved fatherland is being exploited by the foreigner because his country is not organized.

Exact details of this organizing, so devoutly to be wished, are not made public, but it has been suggested that Bell would like to do the organizing.

New Dutch Company

A new Dutch company, N. V. Electrafilm Maatschappij, has erected a studio for the production of sound films.

When Lions Crow!

The audience recently at the Tudor in New Orleans, came very close to hysterics, rubbed its collective eyes, and wondered if its ears had gone back on it. Here's the reason: The projectionist, that evening, was feeling gay, or angry, or something. Anyway, he had just completed the running of an RKO Pathe comedy and went into the feature. As the MGM lion appeared on the screen, he cut off the sound on his machine, connected the horn with the machine on which the comedy had run, and allowed the sound track to run through with the RKO Pathe rooster's crow. And when Leo proudly raised his head, and started to act like a chicken, the audience was just the least bit surprised.

Papers Prepare Copy On "Tabu"

When Paramount's "Tabu" played the Venetian in Racine, Wis., recently, the advertising copy on the film was prepared at the request of the manager by the theatre editor of the Journal-News and an editorial writer of the Times-Call, two local dailies.

Noticeable in the copy prepared by the reporters was a decided use of superlatives, the Journal-News editor adding a note to her ad, which stated, "Although a reporter and not a copywriter, I submit with all sincerity the copy below." A note on each ad indicated that the management requested Racine newspapermen to prepare their own copy on the film following a preview showing, "because of the different type of picture represented by 'Tabu'."

Freuler Plans 12 '31-32 Westerns

On his return to New York from Hollywood, John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, has announced that his company will produce at least 12 Westerns for the 1931-32 season. In addition there may be some specials, he says.

Bob Custer will make a series of six Westerns, as will Buzz Barton. There also will be six melodramas.

"The public is literally rejecting slow-moving talkies," said Freuler, "On the other hand, no producer who maintains action in his pictures need have fear for the future.

"Talking moving pictures have come to stay, but talking pictures that are little more than audible tableaux are headed full-speed for the discard."

The Rialto and Princess theatres in Frankfort, Ind., have been sold to T. Valos and J. Gregory, who are building another house. Albert Goldman of Chicago handled the transaction.

SUPREME TEST FOR NATION'S SHOWMEN

Leaders Sound Keynote That Extra Effort Will Bolster Low Summer Grosses

Theatre management is facing its greatest challenge and must fight the good fight or lose.

This season, like its predecessors, has brought with it the usual dozen or more widely different "sure-fire" plans, policies and methods of operation for overcoming what industry pessimists would have one believe is a summer "curse" on the box-office. And though they all differ in detail, the majority do agree on one point: "expect lower grosses and you most certainly will get them!"

While it is believed by important operators that mediocre product will do more damage to receipts in hot summer months than during other seasonal periods, extra effort spent in merchandising will bring to the till during June, July and August a corresponding increase in theatre admissions.

It is vitally important—even essential—to dispel all thoughts of pessimism, circuit and other exhibition leaders agree.

Sam Katz of Publix, Harold B. Franklin of Hughes-Franklin, and others governing the destinies of important theatre properties all sound the same keynote: half of the summer battle is mental, and its defeat depends upon the individual.

Franklin told his group of managers this week that "it is easy to take the line of least resistance when we are under pressure—to drift along with the tide, but those who make up their minds that results must be had because conditions are bad, from weather or other influences, naturally get what they expect."

"Too many managers," he said, "find a summer slump inevitable and such a state of mind broadcasts itself, virtually informing all and sundry that only bad business is expected. It follows that they might just as well close up shop. That management which lets down during warm spells confesses its surrender—and will be defeated!"

Franklin believes that "the outstanding showman is the one who under the stress of obstacles grits his teeth, pulls his belt in another notch and makes a more determined effort than when the going is good. There is no room for pessimism in this show business. The industry never needed hard hitting more than now. Present conditions are a challenge to progressive management, a clarion call for good men.

"We need spirit more than anything else. It is worth more than dollars; more than knowledge. 'Courage is the master trait from which all other virtues rise.' Routine methods may seem good enough during peak business periods but not in a period like this.

"What we require is individuality. To meet present day conditions management must rely on new resources, indomitable courage, limitless initiative. Results will be determined by the ability of management to adjust itself to changed conditions, to adopt new and more attractive methods of operation.

The Last Laugh!

Norman Krasna wrote a play. But, according to Luella Parsons, Norman, formerly with First National on the Coast, was so anxious to tell everybody about it, that even his best friends used to cross the street when they saw him coming. But now Norman has the laugh on them. He sent his brainchild to New York, and lo, it was accepted. Another company heard the story and offered him $400 per week, but Norman, says Miss Parsons, snapped his fingers, and laughed. And furthermore, Norman is going to New York when the play is ready for production, and the New York people sent him an advance. Young Krasna left the Exhibitors Herald World to go with First National. A genius, maybe!

Pacent Pleased At The Buffalo Patent Decision

Louis Gerard Pacent, president of the Pacent Reproducer Corporation, commenting on the decision of Judge Galston in the suit against Sol Wallerstein, Buffalo exhibitor who had installed Pacent equipment, by American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and ERPI, expressed himself as extremely gratified.

He was particularly pleased that the claims of infringement originally involved in the suit which related to eight patents, had been abandoned on three patents and the aggregate number of claims had been reduced from 54 to 18.

Of the patents remaining in litigation, by far the most important, according to Pacent, are the Lowenstein, covering negative grid bias, which was declared invalid and the Colpitts, or push-pull patent, which expires next February.

Columbia Will Buy Independents

Worthwhile independent productions will be distributed by Columbia, Harry Cohn, Western studio chief, told Quigley Publications at Hollywood this week. "Columbia is interested in purchasing independent productions," Cohn stated. "If anyone has any pictures, send them along, we want to see them," he said.

USES BIGGER SCREEN FOR SOUND CLOSEUP

And This Exhibitor Finds Good Reproduction More Important Than Ever—Makes Constant Checkup

By AN OBSERVER

How's business? I asked him.

"Business is great," he replied, and he meant it. He's an exhibitor in a small town, dependent upon residential patronage. His community is just the same as that of the average town. His success is not an accident or a fluke. In two years he has taken a theatre whose financial reports had been written in crimson and put it on a record written in the black ink of good profits.

How, I asked him, do you account for a business that's great when nearly every exhibitor says, "Business, what business?" His reply extended into an hour's sermon on showmanship. It was good to find an exhibitor who still believes in and practices showmanship.

"Too many exhibitors are looking for alibis instead of business," he began. "People still want amusement and they are going to find it; it's up to the showman to help them and give them what they want. Don't let anyone tell you that people are tired of good pictures; that's bunk. But you've got to coax the public; just like we had to coax them three years ago or twenty years ago. It takes showmanship.

Makes Screen Larger

"One thing I did when I began showing talking pictures was to increase the size of my screen. Talking pictures are more dependent upon facial expressions of the actors than were the old silent pictures which depended to such a great extent on action. For people really to enjoy and get the most out of a talking picture they must be able to see clearly every changing expression on the faces of the actors on the screen. I increased the size of my screen so that the person in the back row could do this as easily as the one in the front row.

"Good sound is more important than ever. You can't give your public poor sound and get away with it, for your public knows the difference. Pick out any theatre that's making money and you'll find it has good sound. You'll also find that the people who patronize that theatre pass right by other theatres showing the same pictures but with inferior sound.

"I know, because I see the results of good sound in my own house. My town is in about the center of at least nine other towns in a radius of fifteen miles from my theatre. I draw from every one of the theatres in these towns. I have regular customers who come as far as forty miles each week to my house. The answer is good sound, for they can go within a few blocks of their homes to larger theatres showing the same pictures several weeks in advance. I have the best sound equipment money can buy, but if better equipment were built, I'd buy it, no matter what it costs."

"Why do you have better sound than some of the other theatres that have the same type of equipment," I asked him.

"Because I supervise my shows constantly," he answered. "Watch your sound volume or watch your audience walk out. In my 1,200 seat house I have four signal stations where I can signal the operators in the booth the moment the volume is too low or too high. I have at least one person on the floor every moment of every show whose one job is to listen and keep the sound right. I have found that the person listening gets sound and volume deaf if he concentrates for too long a time. I mean by this that he loses good judgment after listening continuously too long; to avoid this I have him get out of the theatre for a half hour or so after he has been on duty several hours, so that he may regain his sound judgment.

Correct Volume Needed

"Correct volume is absolutely essential. If people have to strain to hear because of low volume level, they are uncomfortable and people do not pay good money at the box office to be uncomfortable. Excessive volume is annoying and even painful, and again, people don't patronize theatres to be annoyed. So watch your volume.

"Keep your equipment in best possible condition. I will not tolerate having my equipment neglected. I require my operators to be in the projection room an half hour before show time. In that half hour, they must go over the equipment, oil and test it. This is a daily procedure and is adhered to every day. No projectionist working for me can come dashing into the projection room two or three minutes before show time and put on the show trusting to luck that everything is all right.

"I rehearse every picture before I play it and set my own volume cues. I watch the volume, the equipment and everything else that affects the quality of sound.

"The picture business has not changed; don't let anyone tell you that. There are still good pictures; and there are still bad ones. To get the good ones I buy the entire feature product of four of the best producers, but that doesn't mean I play them all. I shelve lots of them.

"The same is true of shorts. When I have a sure-fire picture which I know will bring in the business, I am more careful than ever in selecting my short subject to accompany the feature. People as a rule remember the worst part of the program, not the best. I want them to remember the entire show as being good. A poor short is not a filler; it's a chaser."

While we were talking, this showman had been taking me through his house. It was clean and fresh from the men's room in the basement to the projection room.

"The theatre is and always will be a place of magic and illusion for the public; I don't intend to destroy this natural attraction with an unattractive front.

"I change organists quite often so that they never have a chance to go stale in their playing.

"I cooperate in every way with all civic and other organizations. I have the fullest cooperation and support of the public schools because they in turn have mine. Right now I am putting in deaf sets."

From Experience

1. Sound pictures are dependent upon facial expressions; increase the size of your screen so every changing expression of every actor can be seen by the person in the last row.
2. Watch your sound volume every moment of your show or watch your audience walk out.
3. A theatre program is no better than the short that accompanies the feature.
4. The theatre is and always will be a place of magic and illusion for the public; don't destroy this natural attraction with an unattractive front.
5. A poor short is not a filler but a chaser.
6. The exhibitor who complains of miniature golf courses is looking for an alibi for poor showmanship.
7. Your audience expects something to happen every moment he is in your theatre; don't disappoint it.
8. One crying baby disturbs a whole audience.
9. The greatest asset of any theatre is community good-will; cultivate it.
10. If better sound equipment were built, I'd buy it, no matter what it cost.
11. I buy the entire product of four producers; but I don't play them all. The best way to use a poor picture is to leave it on the shelf.
12. A bad picture advertises a theatre just as much as a good one, but it's the worst possible advertising.

Publix Twin-Billing in Its Twin City Houses After RKO

Paramount-Publix has adopted a policy during the past few weeks of duplicating the bills at the Tower in St. Paul with those at the Aster in Minneapolis. The experiment is said to result from RKO's method of doubling in the two RKO Orpheum theatres.

The system, it is said, enables RKO to use street car, bus and radio advertising without emphasizing the name of the city where particular attractions are showing. RKO plans to continue and Publix may extend it to other Twin City houses.

E. J. Lipow, Paramount Foreign Representative, Dead Abroad

E. J. Lipow, for many years representative of the Paramount foreign department, and lately district manager in Austria, Poland and other countries, died on July 24 in Jugoslavia, the home office is informed.

His headquarters were in Berlin, where burial will take place. Lipow was an American citizen, and was engaged in business here before going to Europe.

Merely Mary Ann

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

Another of Fox's promising fall line-up is "Merely Mary Ann," co-starring Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell with the former in the Cinderella type of role which audiences love. There is plenty of humor in the situations and the dialogue and excellent direction by Henry King.

Beryl Mercer gives another of her priceless characterizations which contributes largely to the picture's success. With Farrell in the role of a young composer, opportunity is afforded for the introduction of music which a preview audience seemed thoroughly to enjoy.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Story by Israel Zangwill. Scenario by Jules Furthman. Directed by Henry King. Assistant director, Charles Woolstenhulme. Cameraman, John Feitz. Sound engineer E. Clayton Ward. Setting by Wm. Darling. Release date, September 6, 1931.

Huckleberry Finn

(Paramount)

Mark Twain's Story

Equally as good as "Tom Sawyer," right up to the mark in story and dialogue and marked by better acting, "Huckleberry Finn" bears out the cheerful advance reports of the picture.

Junior Durkin carries off the honors, but also credit goes to Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green, Jackie Searl, Clarence Muse, Eugene Pallette, and Oscar Apfel. Generous action, fun, adventure and kid love interest stamp this as ideal family fare.

The direction of Norman Taurog is excellent; so is the screen treatment by William Slavens McNutt and Grover Jones.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. From the Mark Twain story. Directed by Norman Taurog. Adaptation and dialogue by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt. Photography by David Abel. Release date, August 15, 1931.

Monkey Business

(Paramount)

Comedy

Paramount's "Monkey Business" is a smash laugh comedy equally as good, or better, than previous Marx Brothers pictures. A Glendale preview audience howled gleefully at the antics of the Marxes whose rapid-fire gags never let down. Norman McLeod's direction is excellent, keeping the piece moving in fast tempo continuously.

Groucho, Harpo and Chico supplied most of the gags, while Zeppo carried the romantic interest with Ruth Hall. Both are very good, too. Rockliffe Fellows, Thelma Todd, Tom Kennedy and Harry Woods do capable work.

The picture has a slight story thread which helps hold interest at all times. The story by Sam Perelman and Will B. Johnstone is very good and the dialogue by Arthur Sheekman filled with laughs.

The entertainment qualities of the picture are unlimited. This is a potential box-office success as were the Marx predecessors.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Norman McLeod. Cameraman Arthur Todd. Screen story by S. J. Perelman and Will B. Johnstone. Additional dialogue by Arthur Sheekman. Release date Sept. 26, 1931.

A Jew at War

(Ukrainfilm)

Soviet Propaganda

This is another of the Soviet Russia propaganda pictures which have been playing Broadway with regularity.

In this instance, the world war, the Red revolution, and the five-year plan are used to put before the American public the thought of communism.

Although a silent picture, there is a synchronized score.

Especially outstanding in the picture is the cast, with Venimin Zuskin of the State Moscow Jewish theatre, carrying away the honors. While the photography is good, there are spots when trick shots become confusing.

"A Jew at War" is the story of the experiences of a youth through the world war, during the revolution, and as a commissar under the rule of communism.

In the last phases of the picture, there are shots of the huge factories which have been built under the present regime, and of the training of children to become adherents of U. S. S. R.

Produced by Ukranifilm. Distributed in America by Amkino. World release by Souzkino. Scenario by V. Stroyevoy and S. Roshal. Directed by Gregory Roshal. Photography by Michael Belsky. American titles by Michael Gold. Running time, 71 minutes.

Woman Pursued

(RKO-Radio)

Comedy-Drama

And when the suave, romantic Russian, Ivan Lebedeff, is the pursuer—well, that's sumpin!

Here is a story of Balkan intrigue—St. Petersburg, Bucharest—women spies, adventuresses, court beauties, uniforms, gardenias, mysterious perfumes (except that Lebedeff tells us the spyesses don't use perfume, to keep pursuers off the scent!). It opens with an amazing succession of trick camera shots, lapped over one another like a layer cake and then settles down to just what this power is that M. Lebedeff has over women. Being Ivan's first author-star picture, he was perhaps slightly nervous in spots, but on the whole he proved he had the power to get himself in and out of a series of affairs which highly entertained a preview audience in spite of the uncut length of the picture.

Lebedeff received superb support from three of the "women pursued," Genevieve Tobin, who is very rapidly getting to be our favorite actress, Betty Compson, an old favorite, and Ilka Chase, who does her own pursuing in a thoroughly amusing fashion. One of the most captivating sequences in the picture is that in which Lebedeff as the romantic Russian captain on a mission to seek spies in Rumania, meets Genevieve Tobin on the train. As a comedienne this Tobin girl is pushing right out ahead of all of them. Author Lebedeff, Benn W. Levy, who wrote the screen play, and Doris Anderson, who did the adaptation and dialogue, have given her the best opportunity she has had to show her genius for light comedy.

It will be interesting to watch the career of Lebedeff. He has undeniable charm of manner, an unusual personality and a flare for the "little touches" which the ladies are supposed to like, and probably do. While there is nothing startlingly new in this story, yet the treatment accorded it by his co-writers and the director, Richard Boleslavsky, make it very satisfactory entertainment. Max Ree, too, deserves generous credit for giving the whole fanciful tale a feeling of lavish authenticity and realism.

Arthur Edmund Carew strolls through, a Dracula-like specter, adding mystery and suspense to the piece. Purnell Pratt, Colin Campbell, Rita LeRoy and Edward Martindel also contribute valuable support.

Good pictures are coming through in numbers from the studios of Hollywood, as we have been saying in these columns frequently of late, and this is one of them.

Produced and distributed by Radio Pictures. Supervisor, Pandro Berman. Screen play by Benn W. Levy, Adaptation and dialogue by Doris Anderson. Directed by Richard Boleslavsky. Photographed by Leo Tover. Art Director, Max Ree. Sound by Bailey Fesler. Release date, September 12, 1931.

Drama

With Ramon Novarro in the lead, supported by Madge Evans, Conrad Nagel and Marjorie Rambeau chiefly, this film, seen at New York's Capitol, recounts the story of the son of a desert merchant, who escapes from raiding bandits on the desert, becomes a wealthy jewel merchant, and renounces his love for an American girl, at the request of her brother, to whom the merchant owes a debt of gratitude.

Noticeable reaction did not seem to indicate that the audience was strikingly impressed with the screen offering, though the work of Novarro, Nagel, in a minor role; Marjorie Rambeau, also inconspicuous as the girl's aunt and Miss Evans as Janice, drew favorable comment.

John Miljan, as the old wise man of the East, who, clad in rags and supporting himself on a stick, is beside the young man at every moment of danger, pointing the right course for him to follow, was accorded praise for the dramatic manner in which he spoke his epigramatic lines of wisdom.

Novarro's father is a jewel merchant who, with his followers, is attacked at night by a band of robbers on the desert. The father is killed, but the son, to whom the father had given a great diamond, is saved by the old man, who buries him in the sand, with a reed to permit of breathing.

In Bombay, Novarro is arrested by an unscrupulous merchant to whom he had tried to sell his diamond, and is saved from jail by Nagel who had been a witness. Novarro promises unending gratitude. Accidentally, after Novarro had amassed wealth as a jewel merchant, he meets Madge Evans, unaware that she is Nagel's sister.

Their mutual attraction reaches the point where the girl is prepared to give up family, friends and race for Novarro, and he in turn is ready for an equal sacrifice. The brother, hearing of the affair, goes to Novarro, and after pleading gratitude, exacts a promise that Novarro will give up the girl.

The closing sequence shows Novarro telling the girl that their affair must end, after the old man has given him necessary advice and comfort.

Road to Singapore

(Warner)

Drama

Here is William Powell's first effort under the banner of Warner Brothers, and, if audience comment at a Coast theatre is any criterion, it is one of his best pieces of work in some time.

The story, spotted with humorous lines, which seemed particularly to be appreciated by the audience as a result of the manner in which Powell renders them, concerns the star on the way to the tropics, when he meets Doris Kenyon.

Finally, and after resort to trickery, he succeeds in getting her to his island home, but she manages to escape and make her way to her husband, a doctor. But, despite, or because of, her marriage, since her husband has little time to give her much attention, she goes to Powell.

They prepare for an elopement, but Powell warns her to be very certain of the step she is taking, and indicates that the island gossip concerning his habits and reputation were all decidedly wrong.

The concluding sequence shows Powell rushing for the boat which is carrying Miss Kenyon away from the island.

Produced and distributed by Warners. From play by Roland Pertwee. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Edited by Bill Holmes. Dialogue, J. Grubb Alexander. Photography by Bob Kurrle. Art director, Anton Grot. Release date, September 26, 1931.

Smart Woman

(Radio)

Comedy

This film, adapted from the stage success of Myron Fagan, "Nancy's Private Affair," seemed to register well with an audience at the Boulevard theatre on the Coast. The patrons apparently derived a great deal of enjoyment from the light effort, with laughter breaking out again and again, given rise to by both situations and the clever dialogue.

Robert Ames tires of Mary Astor, as his wife, and takes Noel Francis as the object of an intensive flirtation. But Mary apparently, is not in the least disturbed. She even entertains Miss Francis and her mother, and tells them lots of things about husband Robert.

John Halliday, as a wealthy bachelor, calls and renders what assistance is necessary in the story of Robert as his wife knows him, which incidentally, serves to arouse Ames' jealousy to a point where it might mean something. Edward Everett Horton, playing the brother-in-law of Ames, steps into the picture and tells Miss Francis that Ames, financially, is nothing to get wildly excited over. Thereupon the girl, seeing a better bet, drops Ames and goes after Halliday, and thereby loses both men, since Robert decided to write finis to the affair.

Mary, bent upon teaching her straying husband what it is all about, checks out with Halliday, but, of course, returns in time for the expected conclusion.

On the whole, the audience seemed to extract entertainment from the lines and the work of the players, while the direction of Gregory La Cava received favorable comment.

Produced and distributed by Radio Pictures. Associate producer, Bertram Millhauser. Original play by Myron C. Fagan. Screen adaptation by Salisbury Field. Directed by Gregory La Cava. Photographed by Nick Musuraca. Art director, Max Ree. Sound recording by Clem Portman.

Dolly Macht Karriere (Dolly Gets Ahead)

(Ufa)

Semi-Musical Comedy

A story of the theatre, "Dolly Macht Karriere," abounds in music, particularly duets, and several of them drew applause from the New York audience at the Cosmopolitan, "das Deutsche sprechfilm theatre." Several of these duets were inserted in the manner of the earlier synchronized musical comedies of American production. This is a Bloch-Rabinowitsch production.

Dolly Haas, vivacious German star, and Oskar Karlweis as the young composer won particular favor and the comedy lines spoken and sung by Kurt Gerron, as Silbermann, theatrical producer, drew laughter.

Dolly, sales girl in a hat shop, has ambitions to become a famous actress and Fred Halton, her sweetheart, hopes to become a leading song writer. When the Panama Cabaret is deserted by its leading woman, Dolly gets her opportunity. Silbermann, deciding that for publicity purposes she must be "sponsored" by a noted personality, finds a picture of the Duke of Schwarzenburg in the society columns. The Duke, says the story, is shooting lions in Africa.

Dolly's premiere is almost wrecked by stagefright, but a kindly elderly gentleman in the audience helps her to success. It is the Duke; the clipping was from an old issue. He invites her to dinner that night. Silbermann promises to protect her, but leaves her. She manages to get the Duke intoxicated and thus escapes.

Freddy, her sweetheart, is advised by a friend that success will be his if he can get the new star of the Panama Cabaret to introduce his song. (He does not know that his Dolly is the star.) He goes to her dressing room. Separated by a screen, he tries the strategy of making love to her. She drives him out of the theatre. Freddy drowns his sorrow at a bar and tells his story to the Duke without knowing him. The Duke, realizing that youth must be served, reunites the sweethearts and the song has its innings from the Cabaret stage.

The Homicide Squad

(Universal)

Drama

A San Bernardino audience indicated its approval of this film from Universal, despite it being another gangster offering.

The leading role work of Leo Carrillo as the Italian candy maker and beer baron, was accorded high praise, not only for the serious effort, but also for the laughs and thrills he provided. Also accepted with approbation was the performances of Mary Brian, as the feminine lead, Noah Beery and Russell Gleason. Miss Brian's work, particularly, was rewarded with applause.

There is nothing unusual in the story itself, following more or less the general formula for this type of film, that of the gang mob engaged in the eternal battle with the police.

However, a surprise conclusion, was noted as adding considerably to the entertainment value of the picture as a whole.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Story by Henry La Crossitt. Adaptation by Charles Logue. Dialogue and continuity by John Thomas Neville. Directed by George Melford. Photography by George Robinson. Film Editor, Arthur Tavares. Editorial supervision, Maurice Prvar. Sound supervisor, C. Roy Hunter.

Danger Island

Action

Here are the first three episodes of the new Universal serial, which features Kenneth Harlan and Lucille Brown. There is plenty of action, thrills and villainy in the story of buried treasure in the shape of a great quantity of radium discovered by an old scientist. He is attacked by savages and makes his escape from the island. Meanwhile, his daughter, the brother of the scientist and a wealthy yacht owner plan a rescue expedition in the yacht captained by Harlan. Nearing the island, they discover the dying scientist in an open boat, who gives the chart to his daughter before he dies. The owner has been conniving with the mate of the ship to secure for himself the treasure, but is meeting with opposition from Harlan, who suspects the treachery. A fight at sea, a hurricane which drowns the uncle, and a fight in a port cafe, in which the owner and mate attempt to put Harlan out of the way, by having him tossed into a pit of crocodiles, which is successful as the closing sequence of the third episode, highlight the serial from the action standpoint. The appeal to youngsters is undeniably here, with more than a little action entertainment for the older generation. Harlan handles his role capably and actively, while Lucille Brown makes an attractive and able heroine. The balance of the players are uniformly satisfactory. Running times of the three initial episodes are 20 minutes, 17 minutes and 19 minutes, respectively.

I said it once and I repeat that the fall crop of pictures is going to be the best ever sent from cinemaland to a bored and depressed world. Never before has every one in the movies from the top to the bottom taken his job so seriously. Economic pressure has proved a merciless weeder out and the survivors are on their toes every minute to hold on.

Baerenjagd in den Karpathen (Hunting the Carpathian Bear)

Good Photography

If the purpose of this picture was to produce thrills it has missed fire, but the photography, the beautiful mountain scenery, make up for any loss in the other regard. The picture was done on a Ufa expedition into Rumania and it concerns the killing of a bear which had carried off a sheep. There was no particular thrill in the spectacle of 15 or more men hunting the animal, nor in the shooting of it, but the camera's work in trailing the bear on his search for food and the pictures of the mountain side were engaging. Running time, 12 minutes.

Geheimnisse des Pflanzenlebens (Secrets of Plant Life)

(Ufa)

Fairly Interesting

Eccentricities and beauties of growing plant life are shown in this Ufa "Kulturfilm" and should win the interest of anyone interested in gardening. The theme in general has been done often, but the life stories of several plants unfamiliar to American gardens are unwoven, from the bursting forth through the ground to the unfolding of the flowers. Running time, 10 minutes.

Sax Appeal

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

Joe Penner, the Warner stuttering comedy star, as an amateur operator of the saxophone, plays very, very badly, but does succeed in having a great many things of all descriptions thrown at him. That works out very well, because Joe's father happens to be a junk dealer, and the gratuitous contributions come in very handy. An audience in a Broadway house, got many a laugh out of the really amusing Penner.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Gigolo Racket

(Vitaphone)

Fair

Helen Morgan, Broadway stage singer of the "crooning" variety, is the featured name in this short. Helen, as the star in a musical show, is induced to choose a gigolo in an effort to put over a publicity stunt. But she falls in love with the "gigolo" and it develops, as expected, that he is not, as it is expressed, "in the business." She is given an opportunity to sing two numbers, with fairly good effect.

The Gland Parade

(Radio)

Funny

Amusing situations and the humorous dialogue rendered by Roscoe Ates as the stuttering window washer, provide enough to make this a highly laughable short comedy. His amusement-provoking cracks are well spaced in the number. Direction was by Louis Brock.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Big campaign books available. . .

This attraction hits a current theme flush on the button. Fast, shrewd entertainment that starts with a wallop and never stops throwing in the punches.

See campaign book for tie-ups, hooked up with the title, which in itself is full of draw values.

SPECIAL NATIONAL ADVERTISING

RKO-Radio will run 1100 line ads in more than 300 newspapers to back up "Traveling Husbands" . . . These ads will run in the display columns where the flash will get over with a bang; not in the theatrical pages . . . J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Little Falls, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

You will likely expect us to say that this is the home town of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, but since you already know that, it will be no use to mention the fact. Every time we think of the Colonel we think of "Darius Green and His Flying Machine," a poem we used to recite at the literary societies sixty years ago, and the difference between the Colonel and Darius is that the Colonel flew from New York and landed in Paris, while Darius flew from the top of a cow barn and landed on a manure pile.

But Darius was not such a big goof as his neighbors thought he was. His theory was "The birds can fly, so why can't I," and that idea has been largely responsible for bringing about aviation, so while we are building monuments for the Colonel let's not forget Darius. Jules Verne wrote "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," and yet we will venture that there are a number of submarine commanders who never heard of Jules Verne.

"Great Oaks From Little Acorns Grow," and if it weren't for the acorns we wouldn't have any oaks, so let's not forget the acorns.

Little Falls is where the Colonel received his early education. We can't understand how he could, for he had to walk two miles into town right on the banks of the Mississippi river when the muskies and walleyed pike were just suffering for some one to show 'em a frog or minnow, and any kid who could acquire an education under such conditions is entitled to a front seat in the hall of fame.

This town made the same mistake that Wisconsin Rapids did: they built part of the town on each side of the river and then had to build a bridge, and bridges cost money. Not only that, but now the west side has to come clear over on the east side every night to see N. B. Smoot's shows in the Lowell theatre, and that's asking a lot of 'em, but it's worth it.

There is going to be a ball game here tomorrow between the Little Falls team and the hazelbrush boys of the House of David at Benton Harbor, Mich., and we are going to stay over to see it. We are not overly crazy about baseball—black bass and golf is our weakness—but we want to see this game because we know those be-whiskered ginks from the House of David like a Boston Bull mama knows her pups, for they are right from "Our old home town," as Ralph and Eddie say over the radio. And besides that, Grover Cleveland Alexander is going to pitch for the alfalfa boys and we want to see if there was any sense in several million fans yelling themselves hoarse every time he went into the box.

We look for this game to be a whiz bang, for the Little Falls boys have defeated the disciples of old Benjamin six times in succession, and they are the only team, we are told, that has been able to defeat them in this state, and this is a pretty big state. There will be a big time in Little Falls tomorrow.

The Minneapolis papers recently carried an announcement that the Federal Government had indicted Al Capone and 68 of his gang on 5,000 counts for violation of the prohibition law and a failure to pay income tax on an estimated income of $200,000,000 received from the sale of beer and alcohol. The Government's chief concern seems to be in getting part of the swag. If the Federal Government is as slow in prosecuting those 5,000 cases against Al as it usually is in such cases, Al's great grandchildren will all be dead before they get them all off the docket.

According to the Chicago press, Al is responsible for the St. Valentine's Day murder of six men, and innumerable other murders, and if this is true a Chicago grand jury ought to at least indict Al for playing solitaire on Sunday or fishing without a license, he ought to be prosecuted for something.

We wonder if you can figure out what word it is that has four esses and four i's in it. If you had seen this word on the end of as many bridges as we have from Lake Itasca to Hannibal, Mo., you would know what word it is. We will give you three weeks to figure it out, and that ought to be time enough. No, you are all wrong; it isn't "Ippississim"; that would probably be the name of some new picture or a new kind of limberger cheese. Try it again.

Some one has said that if the Government will manufacture 4 per cent beer and put a revenue tax on it they could wipe out the treasury deficit and have revenue to run the Government. All right, but whose pockets is this tax coming out of? We are in favor of the Government making and dispensing beer at actual cost and keeping the revenue tax OFF OF IT. When this is done it will put the kibosh on the bootlegger and racketeer overnight. Let's try a little common horse sense in this liquor business for a while; we haven't used any for some considerable time now.

A Reason for Kicking

Yesterday we called on E. A. Reynolds of the Strand theatre at Princeton, and we have been kicking ourself ever since for not calling in him before, for he's an all-right guy. We don't intend to miss him again. We also called on our two good friends of the Cosy theatre at Cambridge and they treated us just like we were their oldest son, and that made us feel pretty good.

Charley Parriso of Cass Lake has bought the theatre at Sauk Center from C. G. Mullens and C. G. has bought the Home theatre at Portage, Wis.

Isn't it astonishing what imagination some of these chefs over the country have when they take a day-before-yesterday's biscuit and put five or six strawberries on it and imagine it is a strawberry shortcake? The man who first thought of taking a hard, dry biscuit and putting a few strawberries on it and calling it a shortcake ought to be shot with his boots on and buried in the Boothill Cemetery at Tombstone, Ariz. And if somebody would do this, the next time we went to Tombstone we'd go out and plant Russian thistles on his grave, just to prove to him that we had tried to eat some of his shortcake.

Speaking of Flags

Did you know that 154 years ago on June 14 the Continental Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes as the national flag? Well, it did, and we'd like for you to remember it so it will not be necessary for us to call your attention to it again.

Sunday

We have just seen that game of ball between the Little Falls team and the hazelbrush boys from the peach belt, and Little Falls won the game four to nothing, which makes the seventh consecutive game they have won from this team.

We met Grover Cleveland Alexander and talked with him about shooting ducks in the marshes in western Nebraska. We both took a shot at the same mallard once and that old drake is still going as far as either of us knows. We were anxious to see Alex because he comes from our old home town. Well, not exactly from our town, but he comes from St. Paul, Neb., and that's virtually a suburb of Neligh.

They didn't put Alex in to pitch until the last half of the eighth and then only because the crowd made such a squawk for him that they had to do it. The Little Falls boys hit the first two balls he pitched and they got three men on bases with nobody out and that was as far as they got. That old corn-fed Nebraskan can still slough 'em over the plate like nobody's business when he wants to.

Mr. Smoots drove us out to camp Ripley today to see 2,000 rookies belonging to the state militia come into camp. After these boys have been under instructions from those hardboiled sergeants for a couple of weeks, they will march in better formation and will know more about war and less about religion.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 87

The question was: "(A) Is all sound film interchangeable in the sense that all may be reproduced and projected with the same equipment? (B) Explain, in full detail, just why it is especially important that sound reproduction and projection equipment be handled intelligently, adjusted with fine correctness and kept in a perfect state of repair?"

Here are the ones who got in under the wire: Herman B. Billings, G. E. Gage, C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, Alonzo Zerach, Philip H. Hadding, James Devoy, James Pendone, Leroy Bates, Dan Arlington, Wm. Borert, John Morgan, Mac Miller, T. Van Vaulkenburg, R. D. James, Pat O'Brien and Sam Henderson, "Chicago," P. L. Toeping, Ran Keddley, N. D. Garling, Robert Lester, G. E. Doe, Peter Danielson, S. Matterley, A. F. Boe, Robert L. Banning, Tom Jameson, D. T. Wyley, Harry Lidding, Frank Thomas, Richard Singleton, Dave T. Cass, Alex Tipping, John Williams, Robert Rose, James McGuire, Wm. Gibson, N. D. Garling, P. L. Toeping, Tom Turk, Charles Kane, D. L. Graves, James G. Petersen, L. D. Lansaw, D. Johnson, P. R. Rand, T. T. Tittling, James Adley, B. G. Anden, Seymour Carroll, H. Henry Drail, R. B. Whitnath, L. R. Sanders, D. Fausett, B. D. Grimes, L. L. Tanger, Alexander Tilson, H. R. Roth and B. Bates.

I have selected the answer of Messrs. Rau and Evans as perhaps best suited for publication. These gentlemen say:

"(A) Thirty-five mm. sound film, either of variable area or variable density, may all be projected with the same equipment. Although the sound tracks of the two varieties of recording have very different appearance, the amount of light passing through them and in general the effect is approximately equal. The location and width of both sound tracks is identical, hence the equipment suitable for the reproduction and projection of one is equally efficient for the other.

"(B) It is very important, indeed, that sound reproduction and projection equipment be handled intelligently, adjusted with fine correctness and kept in a perfect state of repair, for the reason that if this be not done then results as heard by the audience cannot and will not be perfect. Two senses, namely, sight and hearing, must be employed in the enjoyment of a showing of sound pictures, and the sense of hearing is even more sensitive to any fault in reproduction than is the sense of sight.

"For example, if the film be dirty or scratched, both senses will not receive satisfactory results. Sight will see the dirt-filled scratches in the picture and the sense of hearing will receive them in the form of ground noise. Both effects therefore will be marred, hence it is important that the projectionist keep the film as free from dust, oil and scratches as possible while it is in his care.

"Splices in film must be mechanically well made, with the sound track joint properly blocked out, so that when the splice passes the sound aperture there will be no objectionable click.

"The sound pick-up system, consisting of the exciting lamp, slit assembly and photo-electric cell must be in perfect alignment and adjustment and otherwise in good condition, which means that the exciting lamp must have a perfectly straight filament and a perfectly clean globe, and that its filament be in correct adjustment with relation to the condenser and slit. The outer surface of the condenser and slit assembly must be kept perfectly clean and well polished. The slit assembly objective lens must be so adjusted that the slit image is correctly focused upon the film sound track and sound gate aperture. The sound gate aperture must be kept perfectly clean, so that the passage of the light beam will be unobstructed and the sound track will not be scratched. The window of the P. E. cell must be kept clean.

"Should any or all the foregoing be neglected, the results will be made evident in loss of volume or (and) distortion, which latter means poor sound quality.

"The fader contacts and all electrical contacts throughout the entire system, from exciting lamp to horns, must be kept clean and tight. If they are not, then there may and probably will be "frying" and crackling noises from the horns, plus probable loss of volume.

"The vacuum tubes must be checked and tested regularly and any tubes which may be defective replaced, except that tubes producing microphonic noises may often be made perfect again by suitable treatment.

"Meter readings must be maintained exactly at the readings directed by the manufacturers of the equipment. Storage batteries must be kept clean, since otherwise we may expect the horns to advise us of the fault by projecting noises they should not. Storage batteries must be correctly charged and the proper electrolyte maintained by the addition of distilled water when required. Dry batteries (plate voltage, grid bias and photo electric cell polarizing voltage) must be renewed when necessary, otherwise there will be loss of volume and poor sound quality. Horns must be checked daily and kept in exactly their proper locations.

"Where disc reproduction apparatus is employed, the turntables must be kept perfectly level, the reproducers swinging correctly and the damping devices, if any, correctly adjusted. Otherwise there may and probably will be trouble with the needle jumping grooves, or injury to sound caused by wows and flutters.

"The projection equipment itself must be well looked after, the projectors kept clean, sufficiently but not excessively oiled and in good running condition. The working parts of the projectors, for excellence in results, must always be kept in as nearly a perfect state of adjustment as possible, with necessary renewals of worn parts made before the efficiency of the projector is lessened to a point where the damage becomes apparent to the audience. If the projectors be not well cared for (which term we believe is what is meant by 'intelligently cared for') there may be damage to the film, stops in the performance, unsteady picture, travel ghost, flicker, damage to screen definition and other faults resulting.

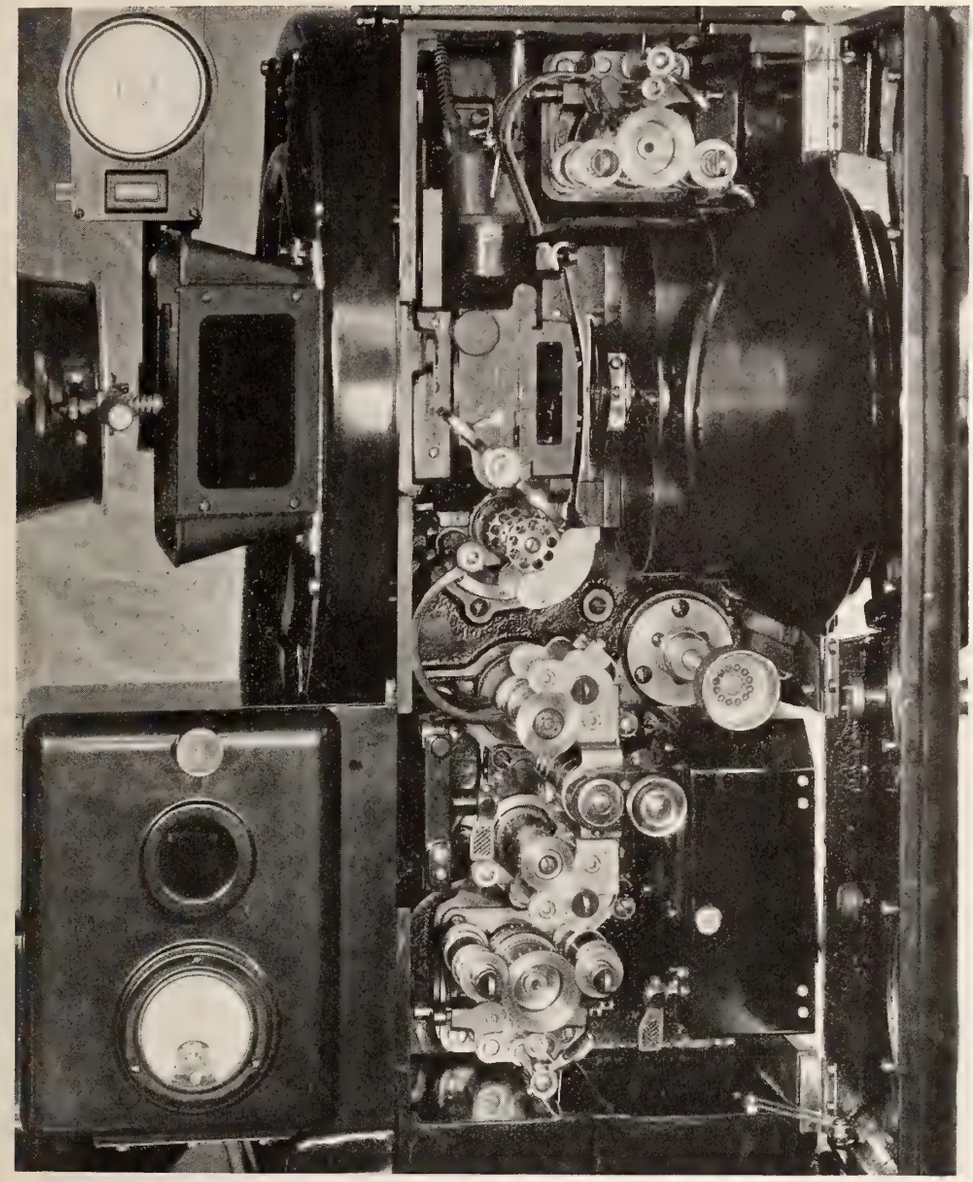
"The projector motors used for sound projection must have a constant speed of exactly 90 feet of film per minute, which necessitates the motors being kept in good condition and that the speed regulating devices be given careful attention. If this be neglected the result may and probably will be off-pitch in sound, flutters and wows.

"In conjunction with projector soundheads there are, in some installations, damping devices used in connection with the driving of constant speed or sound sprockets. They are for the purpose of removing any and all unevenness of drive imparted by the motor, or set up by back-lash in gearing. They must be kept in perfect adjustment or flutters and wows will result. Sound sprockets must be kept perfectly clean.

"The source of current supplying the projector light source, and so on, usually a motor generator set, must be kept clean and in good condition, which latter includes adjustment. It of course must receive adequate lubrication. In order to get the highest possible efficiency in screen illumination the motor generator must operate efficiently and the projector optical trains must be properly selected, correctly adjusted and kept scrupulously clean and well polished.

"In practical projection the projectionist must be always on the alert."



Head of new Simplex wide film projector.

A GLIMPSE AT FUTURE THINGS

By F. H. RICHARDSON

As many of you will remember, when I visited you last summer I described to you the 70 mm. projector then being built by the International Projector Corporation. I told you this projector would be in the hands of many of you within one year from the time at which I spoke.

That is what we all then thought, including the Powers That Be in filmdom. However, man proposes and sometimes powers even greater than himself dispose. Had not that interesting old sinner, Mr. Hard Times, grown to such outrageous proportions, what I told you would have become true, but the aforesaid Mr. Hard Times became a very great power. He put on the screws and tried to withhold the introduction of wide film.

Don't for a minute get the idea into your heads that wide film is out. It is still a very much alive proposition. Some big producers are now working hard upon it, though I believe the 70 mm. idea has been pretty well abandoned. At the present time, so far as I can find out, a compromise of 50 mm. is what we may look for. I know that one of the most enthusiastic proponents of the 70 mm. is now working hard on the perfection of 50 mm. film. In fact, one of the best engineers formerly engaged in the perfection of 70 mm. films told me that he had come to the conclusion that just as good results could be procured from the 50 mm.—an idea that I received, but sprinkled liberally with salt before taking. However, I believe that 50 mm. would be a very large improvement over 35 mm., and that it would sidestep most of the objections advanced as against the 70 mm. film. Nor would it have the excessive weight or be so hard to handle.

And now I am going to give you a look-see at the projector I told you about, but don't get the idea that this projector is available at the present time. It is not, and it won't do you one bit of good to write the company concerning it. It is ready for production all right, but it is not in production, so you could not purchase one, even did you wish to.

As a matter of fact, I had quite a battle with the International officials before permission was finally obtained to publish the accompanying pictures, or in fact to say anything at all about the projector. They feared it might lead to a lot of useless correspondence. The projector will be put into production only when wide film is finally ready for the market, and that won't be, in all human probability, until Mr. Hard Times has been captured, bound hard and fast and anchored to a solid steel mast with substantial handcuffs.

This is true for the reason that the introduction of wide film will cost so many millions of dollars that even the motion picture industry pauses. In fact, it has just plain balked, but as soon as things improve I believe we may safely assume that wide film will be with us, though of course just what the set-up will be in the matter of width no one yet is able to say.

And now take a look at the mechanism. Observe that the projector mechanism and the soundhead are both in one casing. Looking closely, with the aid of a magnifying glass, you may possibly see that each sprocket is really two sprockets in one. The inner, smaller diameter one is for 35 mm. film and the outer one for wide film. The mechanism certainly is a beauty, all right.

But again I warn you that it will be wasted effort to write International Projector Corporation concerning this projector. I again repeat the statement that it is not in production and cannot be had. I am merely giving you a glimpse of one of the things Mrs. Future holds in her lap, and will hand to you in due time.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

FIRST I WANT TO COMPLIMENT YOU on this "Voice of the Industry" department. I think it is much better than "What the Picture Did for Me." In this department, you can not only include comments on pictures, but send in ideas and comments on the business in general. There is nothing that can beat an exchange of ideas, and if the exhibitors over the country would send in their ideas and comments, this would be the most valuable page in your very valuable paper.

That is a swell article on the small town theatre in a recent issue written by Mr. Ainsworth, and there is one statement in it that is very interesting and valuable to all exhibitors, if true. He says that he can pick the pictures that he wants from all programs. I have tried to do this for several years and have not been able to do so, yet. Will Mr. Ainsworth please explain in these columns just how he gets about doing this? The managers and salesmen of the Texas exchanges insist upon my buying the entire year's block of pictures or none at all, and swear that it is a positive rule of the company, and is enforced everywhere. If Mr. Ainsworth has a plan whereby he can pick out the pictures he wants from the different companies, then he has a plan that would have kept many small town shows open that are now closed, and he owes it to the industry, especially the small town boys, to publish his plan.

In the past two weeks I have had to run two pictures that I knew I would lose on before I played them, Grace Moore in "A Lady's Morals" and "The New Moon," but I had to buy them and pictures like "Three French Girls," to get the Norman Shearer, Gilbert, Crawford pictures. Pictures that do not please, not only lose the theatre money on play dates, but many days afterwards, and therefore make them unable to pay higher rentals on the pictures, hurting the exchanges, too. Maybe the big boys will see it some day. Anyway, it doesn't hurt to keep hitting at it.—L. L. LEVY, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

Almanac An Asset

PLEASE ACCEPT MY THANKS FOR the 1931 Motion Picture Almanac. All those who partook in getting this Almanac up should be congratulated, as it is truly an asset to any motion picture office.—HERMAN STARR, Vice-President Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., New York City.

"Watered Vitriol"

FOR THE ATTENTION OF JAMES CUNningham. Hey, Coldfeet, stop rattling your fleshless members in the face of the British film industry.

The eight lines of watered vitriol, "BRITAIN'S TRIUMPH——?" in your issue of July 4th (note the date) are no credit to the British name you're carrying. Britain for a long time has given a big hand to your industry, and still does. If we copy your methods and try and keep a small part of our market for our native product we are paying a compliment to your methods.

If I read your excellent paper right, some good British product like "Sherlock Holmes' Fatal Hour" would be a godsend to some of your exhibitors. At present our trade papers are carrying full page ads for Quigley Publications. Get me?

If your paper is seeking international circulation, it seems to me they are looking ahead, and its writers will have to do the same by cultivating an international outlook.

Criticism—shoot it across, but don't play laughing up your sleeve.

In closing let me tell you I enjoy your "Asides and Interludes."—JACK PRENDERGAST, General Manager, Rialto Cinema, Ballroom Cafe, York, England.

Most Complete Volume

SINCERE CONGRATULATIONS ON THE new edition of the Motion Picture Almanac which came to hand today. It is certainly the most complete volume of its kind that I have ever seen, and has caused a great deal of favorable comment around the studio.—DON EDDY, Director of Publicity, RKO Studios, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.

On Exhibitor Reports

I NOTE THAT SOME OF YOUR readers are lamenting the passing of the old department, "What the Picture Did for Me." Personally, I could never see why you ran the department as long as you did.

Just how could an exhibitor be guided by these reports? For example, I remember where three or four different exhibitors submitted reports on the same picture, and each one was totally different from the other. One would say, "marvelous, did wonderful business"; another would say "a lemon, boys. Take my advice and lay off"; and still another would say, "a fair picture, if you buy it right." Considering the fact that you don't know the exact business done, how could you come to a decision after reading conflicting reports like that?

I think the statistical records showing the grosses of the pictures in different cities should help most exhibitors, as it is a criterion for practically the whole United States.—RALPH COKAIN, Indiana Theatre, Marion, Ind.

Never Mind Roles But Get Plenty of 'Em Players Told

There has been a very definite change in the formula of creating stars in Hollywood, within the past few years.

Once the slogan was, "Get one good picture and you're set."

Protagonists of this idea pointed, as examples, to the meteoric, overnight rise of such stars as Gloria Swanson ("Old Wives for New"); Wallace Reid ("Carmen"); Richard Barthelmess ("Broken Blossoms").

But it soon became evident that waiting for "the one big part" was taking pretty much of a long chance. Maybe that big part might be delayed in coming. In the meantime, what should be done?

Out of this dilemma arose the new slogan of young actors, "For your first year in pictures, don't worry about the importance of your roles—only be sure you get plenty of them!"

Studios today, seeking to establish personalities, strive to do so by putting new players on the screen as often in their first twelve months as is humanly possible, the theory being that familiar faces get a better "break" from the public when "The big part" comes along.

Protect 30 Cent House, Jack Harwood Proposes

Neighborhood theatres playing a 30 or 40 cent admission policy should have protection over the 10 and 15 cent theatres, says J. J. Harwood, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, agreeing with the views of M. B. Horwitz, general manager of the Washington circuit there. Present plans call for availability to all subsequent runs after 42 days. Exhibitors there also feel that theatres playing only single features should have protection over double-feature houses.

Patrician Pictures Formed; Camp Reported Backer

Patrician Pictures, Inc., has been organized by Walter Camp, Emil Jensen, Alfred Mannon and Fred Stokes, to make six pictures in its first year for independent release, at the Tec Art studio on the Coast.

Jensen is already in Hollywood, to prepare for the first. Camp is understood to be backing Patrician, partly, at least. Camp is president of Inspiration Pictures, inactive independent. Jensen, Inspiration general manager, will retain that position.

Ban on Studio Visitors Expected to End August 1

The ban on visitors at the Coast studios is expected to be lifted by studio executives, effective August 1. Originally intended to rid the plants of agents and solicitors, it was spread to include newspaper men which caused much resentment, resulting in the lifting of the ban.

Passes are to be issued under the system, revokable on violation of rules or confidence. Several Eastern newspapers are reported sending men to the Coast plants.

MUSIC AND TALENT

NEW POLICY FAVORS LOCAL TALENT

Saenger Tries Out Own Unit Production

Plan Results When New Orleans Theatre Is Dropped From the Publix Wheel

By ED DAWSON

To meet the demand for stageshows as a part of the regular motion picture program, the Saenger in New Orleans is now producing locally.

In the past this house had been on the Publix wheel. Withdrawal of the latter units however, left the theatre management in a quandary. Its problem was solved with the introduction of locally built programs.

That this policy may be adopted in many other spots no longer getting circuit bookings, is the confident belief of observers. Artists willing to migrate, as well as local talent, are placed in a fortunate position if this plan should spread nationally, according to those having their fingers upon the pulse of things theatrical.

This is but one of the several important changes currently in the stageshow field. Of prime importance, of course, was the abandoning of Publix production in favor of the Fanchon & Marco units. Also worthy of note has been the booking of individual, or barnstorming, units by theatres unable to stand the cost of local production or the overhead necessitated if circuit units are booked.

To give an idea of a Saenger produced unit, Lee Barton Evans, baritone, star of the act; 16 Helen Strakova dancing girls; Babette Lamont, acrobatic dancer, and Lou Forbes wielding the baton. The act is built around the song, "Chloe."

Fanchon Wolff, F & M Head, in St. Louis, Arranges New Units

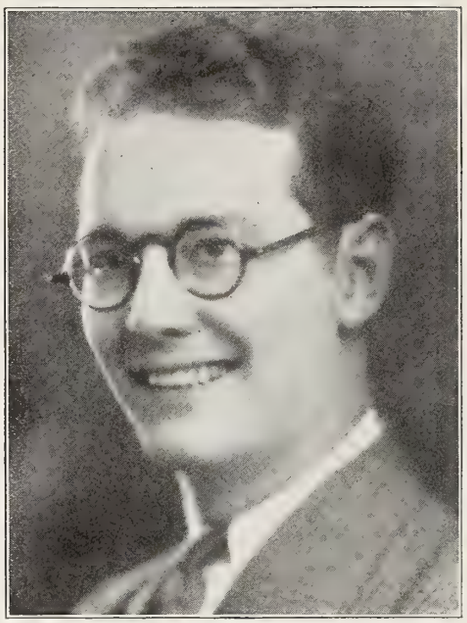
Fanchon Wolff, feminine member of the Fanchon and Marco organization, is in St. Louis personally assembling several new units made necessary by the recent Paramount-Publix deal. Gay Forster, assistant producer, accompanied her.

The first new talent audition was at the Fox on July 24. Seven shows will be produced there during the next seven weeks, making their first appearance as F & M units, following which they will go on tour.

Forms Publicity Department

Music Corporation of America, Chicago, has established a publicity department, with Frank Burke, formerly with RKO, handling the department.

Bob West



This is the "cheerleader" organist of the Fox theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. Just by looking at that happy, congenial smile on his face, one would know that he is plenty popular. Bob, who is billed as "The One You Love to Sing With" has in the past year, since he has been at this house, proved himself a box-office attraction and worthy of his title. We have all heard organ solos in which the audience's singing is supposed to be broadcast, but it was up to West to actually do it. For the past six weeks, every Saturday night the singing of the patrons is broadcast over station WFOX. You should listen in and hear how Bob controls the audience and really has them trying to make their voices louder than their neighbors'.

Radio Group on Stage

Captain Dobbsie and his Shell Happy Time Crew, radio entertainers, are appearing at the Paramount, San Francisco.

Joe E. Brown on Stage

Joe E. Brown, First National comedian, has been signed for a series of personal appearances in various Warner houses over the country, prior to his next production in September.

Polly Moran on Loew Stages

Polly Moran has been booked to make personal appearances in the Loew theatres before beginning her next screen assignment. One of her first bookings is the Capitol, New York, the week of August 14.

Musician Dispute Ends Stage Shows In Indianapolis

Because of the failure of the managements of the Indiana theatre in Indianapolis, and the Lyric in Louisville, Ky., and the musicians to arbitrate their wage differences, stageshows, vaudeville and orchestras will be abandoned in these houses beginning August 1.

Including both musicians and stage hands, this will mean unemployment for between 30 and 35 men.

The Indiana, which has been playing Publix units, has announced, with the end of stageshows, a reduction in admission of from 65 cents top to 50 cents. The Lyric has been using RKO vaudeville.

Music Publishers Add 10% To "Send Direct" Orders

The Music Publishers' Protective Association has made public a letter sent to the trade, noting that a 10 per cent charge for handling will be added to all dealers' bills when they request the publisher to mail merchandise direct to the customer.

The ruling was made following a survey, which indicated that the publishers were incurring considerable extra expense in filling these orders, and sometimes taking an actual loss on the transaction.

STAGE SHOWS

Baltimore Century

"Exit Smiling," with Bert Frohman as master of ceremonies, opened with full stage, Century band upstage on platform with railing, practicable stairs left and right, and back drop and sides representing fountain and modernistic lines. Herbert Bangs was directing the band. Chester Hale girls came on in song and routine steps in white derbies and vests with short red skirts and trunks, flesh tights, white slippers. Finished and off with Frohman on in single with band. Chatters about forgetting trouble and sings "Get Your Share of Happiness Today." Finishing with applause, he introduced the Novello Brothers, one from either side. Dressed in wide black trousers, and pea-jackets, with white shirts, wide collars and green ties, white spats, black shoes, red tans with pompoms. They go into routine acrobatic work and tumbling, playing violins at the same time. Laughs and good applause. Frohman next introduces June Worth, who goes into routine acrobatic work, dressed in short green velvet trunks, light green chiffon shirt waist with bishop sleeves, green slippers, all with silver figures and silver cloth waist band, hair fluffed. Applause. Then came Kay and Sayre, introduced by Frohman as a "Strange Interlude." They did routine tap work and solo steps in dark blue suits, white shirts and collars, black ties with thin white stripes, black shoes. Big applause and encore.

Then on came the 12 Chester Hale girls in a tap dancing specialty with solo steps by various girls at end. Dressed in wide black trousers, double-breasted velvet vests, with silver buttons and silver facing, low cut; green chiffon shirt waists with wide collars, narrow four-in-hand ties, bishop sleeves, green spats, black slippers, silver cloth berets. Applause and encore. Next Frohman sang "Roll on, Mississippi," with his own accompanist at the piano, on from the wings. Big applause, then sang for encore "Hike, Hike, Hiking Down the Highway." Big applause, calling for encore, he sang "My Baby Just Cares for Me." Though applause was still great, he finally got the Novello Brothers on again in their famous "Love Bird" act wherein they do all the conversing by whistling. Applause and laughs and then Frohman sang "On a Choo Choo Heading for Better Times." This was followed by the chorus in routine steps. Entire company on for the finale.

The Saenger patrons are enjoying stage productions even if Publix has cut this city from their visiting list, and be it said to the credit of the producers that these local programs, to a certain extent, measure up to many of the units that visited New Orleans the past season, both in point of stage settings and personnel of the performers.

This week Lee Barton Evans, baritone, brings something very interesting to the stage production. The orchestra plays "Chloe," and as the curtain rises on a scene of green swamps and purple shadows, the 16 Helena Strakova girls are seen as fireflys, whose dancing is quite effective. It appeared that they enjoyed it, and felt the rhythm of that throb-throb music. Babette Lamont, as Chloe, does a sensational acrobatic dance. The chorus is lined up back stage, and as they beat on small drums, a moving picture of Evans is shown, a worn traveler singing "Chloe" as he roams. The screen Evans fades away, and Evans in person rises from the ground at the back of the chorus.

Lou Forbes, as usual, presents a fine program with the orchestra, but it would be much more enjoyable if the gentlemanly director omitted many of his contortions during the presentation.

Herbie this week has a new stunt with the organ. Hats of every description are described, from the one Little Willie wore and smeared up with his sticky fingers to the "Hat Me Father Wore." From the array of styles it looked for a time as if the patrons were to be treated to a millinery display and were waiting the name of the dealer and the price.

The film this week is Peggy Shannon in "The Secret Call."

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending July 22

"A Concert in Miniature" is offered by the Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Glen Welty as a prelude to Fanchon & Marco's "Broken Dolls" Idea. Magda Schmidt, violinist, is featured in connection with this offering.

The opening episode features Franklin Record in the role of a singing toymaker. The chorus of 12 are attired in doll-like costumes and go through their paces. A feminine as well as a male dancer augment the first episode with some neat stepping.

Mowatt & Hardy juggle straw hats about with no mean ability and wind up their offering by tossing Indian clubs at each other. The skypiece juggling was good for plenty of laughs from the audience.

For the next episode a novelty dance number is offered by the chorus attired in red soldier costumes and making their way with crutches. Some high kicking is done by Charles Bennington, performing with a peg leg.

Charles Bennington and His New York Newsboys harmonica band adds an unusual atmosphere to the program. The boys play "The Rhapsody in Blue," "The Man I Love" and "Way Down Upon the Swanee River." Bennington tap dances with his peg leg to the tunes of his band as well as to the melodies of the orchestra.

Before the finale an adagio team of three whirls about in grand fashion. The finale finds the feminine members of the chorus attired in Dutch costumes with wooden shoes, while the male members appear with peg legs. Scenes appear very much like pictures from books of fairy tales and are in keeping with the Idea.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending July 29

This week's stage offering is prefaced in an impressive manner with the Fox Concert Orchestra, directed by Walt Roesner, presenting "Metropolitan Echoes" made up of grand opera hits. Poaquin Guarav is back from his vacation and sings "Let's Kiss and Make Up." This is first presented in regulation manner and then as it would be sung by an Englishman and an Italian. The audience would have had Joaquin run through the entire list of nationalities, but time did not permit.

The stage offering is Fanchon & Marco's "Hot Java Idea" and opens with the Sunkist Beauties appearing before a huge idol, attired as Ritzy waiters. They dance to the music of "A Cup of Coffee," handling their trays and napkins in a dextrous manner. Their leader wins applause for his high-kicking ability.

The Three Samuel Brothers, precision tap dancers, prove exceptionally well trained and conclude their act with a military number that gets a great hand. They dance to the music of "The American Patrol" and go off to the stirring strains of "Over There." It's good hurrah stuff.

A temple scene follows, with the girls in Javanase costumes drifting into the market place and presenting Oriental specialties. A man talks in the language of Java and translates it into English, saying that he will offer an imitation of Harold Lloyd, who is so popular in the Orient. Harold is shown running from a policeman and the imitation quickly catches the fancy of the house. Armanda Chirot, of the lovely soprano voice, appears in a ginrickshaw and sings an opera selection.

Comedy is provided by Weston and Lyons, who put on the broadcasting act for which they are famous, and which is kept right up to date. Correct time is given through the courtesy of the Helluva Watch Company and the program is sponsored by the Jewish Branch of the Knights of Columbus. Songs, purported to have been written by "What-a-Man" Hudson, are presented, with jokes too new to have whiskers. Miss Lyone demonstrates that she really has a good voice, singing "Beautiful, Wonderful You" and ends by presenting a rhythm dance.

The final scene has a great Buddha for a background and dancers are presented in gorgeous costumes. Noree, Arabian dancer, comes from her seat on the hands of the Buddha and does an emotional dance, clad largely in glittering beads. The pedestal of the statue opens and girls are revealed dancing, with others above them suspended by the feet, going through the same motions, an unusual mirror effect being produced. The act ends with all on the stage.

Denver Denver

Week ending July 29

The Denver orchestra, with Fred Schmitt conducting, gave the patrons an overture that was thoroughly enjoyable and well presented. The numbers were selections from different grand operas, such as "Tannhauser," "Faust," "Rigoletto" and "Evening Star." This house is the Mecca for music lovers of Denver, as this is the only theatre here maintaining an orchestra, and one is usually assured of splendid music from this group.

Milton Franklyn, new master of ceremonies, conducted the stage band and ran the show. As a novelty number the band played seven different melodies at the same time without hurting the tune of any of them and without discord. They were "Annie Laurie," "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," "Horses," "Humoresque," "Dixie" and "Varsity Drag."

Bernie, Veronica and Walker, a couple of comics and a girl, were featured, and their act went over in fine shape, it being the type liked by Denver audiences. Chatter and dancing. Mary Miles, with her silk pajamas, entertained with her novelty acrobatic act, her turning, twisting and hand walking going over very well. Anderson & Allen put on a good strong man balancing act and Fern Dale impersonated Marie Dressler and Will Rogers in true-to-life fashion. Wanda Allen was on her toes most of her time. Harry Stockwell sang a few songs and Chiyo Kadomatsu added a Japanese touch to the show with her dance and Jap chatter. Dorothy Welch entertained with her impressions of Galli Curci. Buddy & Gretel took ballroom dancing and put some life into it, speeding it up with fast steps and whirling numbers. Helen Ireland played the sax and Theal Nelson did a few tumbles.

The final flash was one of the best Fanchon & Marco has had locally. It featured a huge shell-like background made up of dozens of mirrors, with the stage band and entire company in front. Three attractive girls were holding up a miniature globe in the manner of Atlas.

ORGAN SOLOS

JOE STOVES (Jamaica Valencia) offered, for his introductory solo, an appropriate and entertaining solo which somehow conveyed the idea of coolness and romance and one which this audience reacted to very favorably. The title was "Moonlight Madness," and Stoves, with a chorus of "Get Under the Moon" for his opening song, got them underway for the singing of the following songs: "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "Hikin' Down the Highway," a special to "Wabash Moon," "For You," "I'm Through With Love," two specials to "Moonlight Saving Time," and a final chorus, regular, to the last named number. Stoves made a nice appearance and got a good hand.

BOB WEST (Brooklyn Fox) entitled his solo this week "On the Beach," and started his community-singfest with the song by that name. West, with his smart chatter, happy smile and peppy personality, had no difficulty in getting the audience to sing, though the house was but half full. The community sing was comprised of "Wristling in the Dark," "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "Love Is Like That," "Please Don't Talk About Me," an incorporation of three songs made into one, and "Roll on Mississippi." West is still the fair-haired boy of this theatre.

RUSS HENDERSON (Worcester Mass. Plymouth) presented a timely and most entertaining solo this week entitled "Sunburnt and Broke." The audience apparently enjoyed it immensely. Opening with gag lines about going to the seashore to the tune of "Just a Gigolo," next came the song, "What am I Gonna Do for Lovin'?" Then a special to the tune "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," a regular chorus of "Come to Me," special lyrics to "Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean," and into "One More Time" (No song ever was presented better in this house than this number). "Let Me Sing a Hymn," eight bars of "Broken Hearted," and closing with "Nevertheless." Before going into his solo this week, Henderson offered his own arrangement of "Bambillina" from "Wildflower," which also was very well received.

ADA RIVES (New Orleans State) offers "The Ball Game," an ingenious organ solo which is presented with her usual showmanship, but which evidently found the audience not in a singing mood, for it did noticeably little singing along with the slides. Miss Rives opens with some slides about attending a ball game to the tune of "Just a Gigolo," then the pitcher is razzed with "Oh, Donna Clara," and "Walkin' My Baby Back Home." When Babe Ruth takes the bat, the players inquire, "Would You Like to Take a Walk," and then the crowd for no good reason at all sings "Were You Sincere," closing with a parody on "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile."

MARTIN PFLUG (Milwaukee Warner) offers "A Trip Around Milwaukee." The introductory matter with words flashed upon the screen is played to the tune of "Dew Dew Dewey Day." Selections include "The Waltz You Saved for Me," "Moonlight Saving Time," "Dream a Little Dream of Me," "Million Dollar Baby," and "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile." Familiar scenes of Milwaukee are flashed on the screen in connection with the words to these tunes and the audience comes through in fine style. Martin has been playing in Milwaukee theatres for a number of years, including the Venetian, National and Milwaukee.

DESSA BIRD (Indianapolis Indiana) uses the sound equipment and gives the public a chance to sing through a "mike" this week. Dessa's husband, Ed Resener, leader of the pit orchestra, carries the "mike" out in the audience and picks out the singers. The numbers used are "I Wanna Sing About You"; "Wabash Moon," and "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." Then Loren Griffith, soloist in the pit orchestra, sings "Now You're In My Arms." After that the audience sings "There Ought to Be a Moonlight Saving Time." The audience seemed to appreciate the opportunity to sing through a "mike" and Dessa's work was applauded vigorously.

GEORGE LATCH (New York City State) entertained the audience here this week with an organ solo entitled "Moonlight Madness," a nicely constructed "summer" presentation, incorporating songs in which the moon was featured. Continuity was carried on throughout the solo with special lyrics written to the tune "Moonlight Saving Time." The solo is a singable one and opens with "Get Under the Moon" and is followed by "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "Hikin' Down the Highway," "Wabash Moon" (special), "For You," "Through With Love," a special to "Ro-Ro-Rolling Along," and a final chorus of "Moonlight Saving Time." The solo was well played (considering the old box they have for an organ) and Latch received good applause at the show caught.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) offered a novelty organlogue, called "An Auction Sale" of songs. Amber spot was thrown on Hornig as the console rose and after introductory with title flashed on screen and a few sentences about the sale beginning, he swung into the strains of "There Are Smiles" with words on screen; then the message was flashed that his next would be a newer song, for all to start bidding and he played "There Ought to Be a Moonlight Saving Time" and this was followed with words about an old church and a new church to the words of "Long, Long Ago," followed with "Little Old Church in the Valley." Next one, he announced via screen would be a treasure and played "Now You're in My Arms." After that the message was flashed saying that last, but not least, all should start bidding as the loudest voice would win and words were flashed as he played "It Looks Like Love."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Lend Me Your Ears!"

APPARENTLY we are not alone in our theory that a manager should be an active member of his local clubs. The Western edition of Fox's "Last Word" devoted the entire front page to the many valuable angles to this part of a real showman's community life.

Only a short time ago we took exception to a certain circuit's opinion that it was not advisable for their managers to become too interested in such organizations. We honestly felt that much good could result from this kind of activity and naturally we are now firmly convinced that our slant was right.

"The Last Word" suggests that its managers keep themselves informed on these local clubs; take an active interest in all of its doings; discuss whatever comes along that affects the theatre; points out the tremendous value of membership in local bodies and the resultant publicity therefrom.

The theatre is generally the pivot for recreation in any community and the manager is the contact man between the house and everything going on in the town. But there is only one way to accomplish successful co-operation between the two; that is, via an interested and active membership in all worth-while clubs.

The story goes something like this: B was handling a huge house in a pretty tough spot and handling it to perfection. BUT, here's the rub, he was getting over two hundred smackers a week. And he was worth it too. The home office told him he could stay with a sixty-six percent cut in salary. He walked out without a word.

Hurrah. The circuit saved money???? (Maybe.)

"Costless exploitation" is the latest phrase to be coined, but it should be remembered that good exploitation was always best when it cost the house little or nothing at all.

We can recall the "exploiteer" of a local circuit whose activities were being talked about as being so effective. Investigation revealed that his exploitation was costing each house about fifty dollars a day. Maybe it paid in the long run, but we doubt it.

The manager worked out a feature campaign suitable to his community. . . . His immediate superior turned it down cold. . . . Made him substitute something entirely different. . . . The picture went flat. . . . Home office put the house manager on the spot. . . . As a result he was fired. . . . The man responsible for the whole mess took a back seat and left the manager holding the bag. . . and never lifted a finger on his behalf.

A supervisor who is afraid to admit his own faults is hardly big enough to hold down a supervisory job. This man in particular is about ten times smaller than a flea. Hanging would be too good for him.

When several of the large national organizations declared a "back to the manager" movement in the operation of their theatres, it was hailed as a great forward step in circuit operation.

In order to live up to the letter of that declaration extreme care must be exercised, otherwise, by a slow and gradual process the house manager will once again become burdened with a terrific amount of home office detail.

As a suggestion to those who would really remove all those entanglements from the local house manager, they should erect a large chart in the home office where each and every detail requested of the manager must be posted. In this way they would soon know when they are piling it on.

Oh well, as this is being written our thoughts are concentrated on a muchly anticipated vacation. So, by the time you read this I ought to be many miles away from hot New York heading somewhere-or-other into Canada . . . and golf . . . !

HOT AND BOTHERED!

Martin Finger Gets Good Results With No Cost To Theatre

An example of "Costless Activity" is sent your Club by Martin Finger, acting-manager of the Paramount Theatre, Needham, Mass.

We have before us a copy of a flyer this house sent out 5,000 strong in connection with a campaign on "Front Page." It carries the title of the picture for masthead copy and a two-column head and picture theme follow. The balance of the page consists of three boxed stories written in newspaper style, calling attention to articles offered by three merchants. The entire cost was absorbed by the advertisers.

The above was in addition to "Front Page" contests with two newspapers, offering guest tickets and a newsboys' party, all without a cent of cost to the house.

We referred to this member as an acting-manager for the reason that he's filling in while manager McSweeney is in the hospital. Martin was formerly assistant-manager at the Colonial Theatre, Natick, Mass., but now that he's been on regular duty we'll hope that he will soon have a house all his own. And in the meantime, our well wishes to his boss for a speedy recovery.

14 Merchants Take Space In Co-Op Ad Put Over By Adams

A cooperative ad contest was one of a number of features employed in a Campaign on "Smart Money" by William Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass.

Fourteen merchants took part in the page display, each being apportioned 160 lines in an artistic layout. In each ad was part of a photograph of one of the principal players in the cast of the picture, the gag being to identify the part-photos. For the first twenty readers of the paper to correctly name the various players the theatre offered prizes.

As in similar contests the response to the above was such that the several merchants were more than satisfied with the expenditure they made for advertising space. And inasmuch as determining who's who is not an easy task the subsequent raid on guest tickets, etc., is light in comparison with the amount of publicity received.

McCuan Is Using Varied Methods To Boost Summer Trade

There's plenty of evidence in a recent communication from L. W. McCuan, manager of the Cameo Theatre, Mountain Grove, Mo., that this enterprising showman is keeping on his toes to boost business during the summer slump; in fact, he doesn't mention that there is any slump—just states that this period keeps a fellow digging but that conditions could be a WHOLE LOT worse.

In a summary of recent activities samples of everything from tin-can mats to a variety of tie-ups are presented. As far as tin-cans are concerned, he admits he used the gag 15 years ago but observes, "just imagine 400 kids, each dragging 10 tied-up cans from all sections of the town, a packed house and everybody happy."

There there's a hook-up with a local bakery for insertion of programs wrapped in each loaf of bread. A movie-gram contest (sentences made up of titles of pictures booked at theatre) is being run in conjunction with this tie-up, the baker paying entire cost of printing a weekly program bill.

Other stunts include the crashing of a baseball park with made-up employee bearing sandwich ad (all hand-bill ads being forbidden); a canvass of town to get birthdays of all school children, some 2,500, for purpose of mailing congratulations and pass and a free ticket stunt based on someone's name in house organ each week, tied in with name on card in merchant's window for which space is given gratis by merchant.

Enough to keep anyone busy for a while, we'd say, and here's hoping the good work is keep up right through the season, with more to follow. Glad to hear that you think the Club is getting better all the time—and it's you fellows that make this possible. More about your work next time you write.

A Juvenile Style Show Highlight Of Rideout's Campaign

A juvenile style show was the highlight of a campaign made on "Girls Demand Excitement" by Leo Rideout, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Denison, Texas.

Rideout promoted the Juvenile Style Show in celebration of National Baby Week through a local department store; they standing all extra expenses such as stage hands, mailing out 2,000 special heralds and running boxes in their regular newspaper ads advertising the special attraction.

Two forms of mimeographed heralds announcing the Juvenile Style Show were used. 2M of one form was mailed out by the store and 2M of the other form was passed out on the streets by children on the Saturday afternoon prior to the Monday's show.

The special heralds helped immeasurably in announcing the style show—and the style show, incidentally, also induced lots of people to come to the theatre that probably would not have come under ordinary circumstances. Twenty small models promenaded on the stage in new children's styles.

This is the first opportunity we have had to present an example of Rideout's work and we hope that this new member will find time to make many future contributions to these pages. Whatsay, Leo?

NEXT DOOR TO THE FIRE HOUSE!

Obliging fire laddie neighbors came to the assistance of Frank C. Goldquist when he played "Third Alarm" at the Web Theatre, Savanna, Ill., and donated the use of city department apparatus for a ballyhoo in an on-the-spot demonstration of modern fire-fighting equipment. The stunt proved an effective means of publicizing the picture.

Sol Krim Makes Up An Attractive Ad On 'Finger Points'

We are reproducing here one of the newspaper advertisements recently used by Sol Krim, manager of the Macomb Theatre, Mount Clemens, Mich., when he played "The Finger Points," and it seems to us it is an excellent example of how one mat can be brought up to a degree that it hits the reader square in the eye. This, with the use of varied type, border rules and a box, combine to construct an ad that is certainly bound to attract attention. Note also that despite the fact that it is his intention to let the feature picture have almost complete domination, he did not forget that he had an added draw in a Laurel and Hardy comedy, calling attention to it with a box in the lower left hand corner.

MACOMB Now!
(Matinee Wednesday)

We also notice that he employs the use of the reversed negative occasionally in order to change the tone of his display ads. Most of you, of course know, that this means the use of a black background instead of white, the copy appearing in white letters instead of black. These are, of course, prepared originally by the advertising departments of the film companies and the effect is quite striking when sufficiently large sized type is used for copy. If small, it has a tendency to blur to an extent that the message is not forcibly put across.

This particular picture has lent itself to many forms of advertising that was singularly effective on account of the title. Not long ago we published the reproduction of a double truck, featured by the insertion of a finger-pointing hand in each ad, that carried a strong appeal to both merchant and reader. If any other Club member has additional ideas to submit concerning the advertising and exploitation of this type of picture we'll be glad to give them the once-over.

Carlos Frias Ties With Largest Store To Sell "Indiscreet"

An excellent window display in the largest downtown department store was an effective publicity medium when Carlos Frias, manager of the Plaza Theatre El Paso, Texas, played "Indiscreet."

The window display consisted of silk negligee and other ladies' wearing apparel. In the center of display was cut-out of Gloria Swanson with another card advertising Gloria's "Indiscreet" at the Plaza. Also 8 x 10 black and white photos were used all over the window. This window display was most attractive and it helped immeasurably in putting over the picture.

We agree with Manager Carlos that displays of fine feminine wearing apparel can be nicely tied-in with this Gloria Swanson picture inasmuch as the star displays a wealth of fashionable garments in her picture. Frias' exploitation efforts are familiar to most Club readers and we will look forward to his next contribution to these pages.

Jacobs Style Show Has Strong Appeal For Jackson Patrons

A style show that carried a strong appeal to everyone in town was put over in rousing style by A. M. Jacob, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Miss., in conjunction with "Hot Heiress."

A special herald announced, "Jackson Charming Debutantes and Members of the Younger Set, with 50 People in the Cast, including Singers, Beautiful Models and Dancers." It also stated that the event was a complete musical revue elaborately staged and lighted—and gave credit to the business firms cooperating, and the newspaper that sponsored it.

Business was exceptionally brisk during the entire run of the show, Jacob advises, and that we can well believe, for it appears that a show of this nature nearly always makes a good showing in any community where it hasn't been worked to death. At any rate, he's passing along this tip as a reminder to fellow members.

Title Of Picture Suggests a Lobby Display For McKoy

A reproduction of the real articles suggested by the title was effectively used for a lobby display when "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" was played by James H. McKoy, manager of the Olympia Theatre, Miami, Fla.

Just inside the entrance doors, through the co-operation of a local store, there was arranged three rooms—a parlor, bedroom and bath. Each room was made up complete as a display in a store with connecting doors. Small beaverboard partitions were made up to separate the rooms. Each room contained a card stating the name of the room and they were in sequence like the title of the picture. A large panel sold the cast in connection with the picture title.

A similar display was in the windows of the store as the one in the lobby together with special theatre cards playing up the title of picture, cast, theatre and playdates. Three of the cut-outs from the 24-sheets were placed in the store after the picture opened with special copy on each cut-out, selling the attraction at the theatre.

The above would appear to a natural tie-up to make with any leading department or supply store if any one is looking for something novel in the way of lobby displays, for this picture and McKoy is to be commended for carrying out such completeness of detail. How are the mid-summer campaigns coming along down your way, Mack? Let's know.

BENDER COMPILES EXPLOITATION MANUAL

ROBERT BENDER, manager of the Northwest Division, has compiled a "Manual of Successful Exploitation," now about to be published, which is remarkably complete and excellently arranged.

The Manual is a managers' suggestion book. In his foreword, Division Manager Bender says:

"Few, if any, of the ideas herein are original. However, all of them have been used and were compiled over a period of years. The application of these ideas is entirely up to the judgment of the manager in a particular situation.

"In reading through undoubtedly many other ideas, more or less original with yourself, will be stimulated."

COUNTRY STORE—PRIZE NIGHTS

Country store and prize nights. Use these on the weaker pictures or in your second-class houses. If it is not against the law, hold a turkey night several days before Thanksgiving.

Try to get the merchants to donate prizes in exchange for advertising. Man on the stage should be able to put over some comedy remarks as the program continues.

Some managers use a large blackboard showing the seating plan of the theatre. Put a boy on the stage with a long pointer and the person occupying the seat the boy picks out wins the prize, the boy being blindfolded.

Other managers have used the lucky numbers on admission tickets. However, some comedy can be created by the boy with the pointer. If successful, this idea could be worked for several weeks.

FARMERS' SHOPPING DAY

Organize the merchants for a Farmers' Shopping day special splash. The merchants could either buy out your house for a matinee at a profit to you or could purchase blocks of tickets, the tickets to be given away by them with goods purchased, say, in quantities of $2.00 or more.

The newspaper should get busy on such a stunt and sell a double-truck tie-up with the merchants on which you should have a free ad.

Of course, the advertising by each merchant would have to say something about the theatre. The bus lines should be willing to cooperate for the extra business they would get. Try to make this a weekly event.

Make special effort to stir up the town with newspaper publicity. Possibly your newspaper has not been in the habit of giving you extra publicity. Explain to them you want to put your city on top in this great contest.

Try to put some civic pride in your arguments in an effort to plant some worthwhile contests. These contests, of course, will be prompted by the different pictures you have booked.

BUS COMPANIES

To spread your advertising better throughout the country, get after the bus companies who are working in and out of your city. Interest them in running special trips to your theatre. One bus company is running a special trip from several outlying towns for the first evening show, the return trip leaving the theatre shortly after nine o'clock in the evening. This is a well worthwhile stunt and word received in the home office is to the effect that the bus company is benefiting splendidly by the cooperation.

This is a good Friday night stunt.

You can also get the bus companies to carry advertising cards on each of your pictures. Do not let him make you buy the bus. The driver can be of great value to you. He, as a rule on a regular country run, knows personally many of the passengers he carries. Sell him the idea to announce your attractions to these people and to drive his bus past the front of the theatre, if the laws of the city will permit this.

By Robert Bender

Division Manager, Fox West Coast Theatres in the Northwest

DANCE HALLS

Hundreds of young people attend dance halls continually and although the halls are opposition they are going to do business no matter what you do, so get in with the proprietors and orchestra leaders for cooperative stunts.

Tell the manager you will give several prizes, either for the best dancers or for door prizes, and he, in turn, announces your show and allows you to put up neat cards in his hall. Watch for opportunities to plant the theme songs of your pictures and to have prize dances with them.

Robert Bender

Robert Bender, division manager for Fox West Coast in the Northwest division, is one of those men who "Just keep plugging along." Minding his own business, (and how he can mind it!) has carried him to the top and if it's possible to climb higher, Bob will make the grade.

In his own quiet and unassuming way he has been carefully compiling this Manual of Exploitation and, not unlike the Club material, you will note that he tells his readers that originality is not nearly as important as revamping one or more of these tried and successful stunts.

We are very grateful to Mr. Bender for his enthusiastic permission to reprint this story as well as to the editorial staff of "The Last Word" for their approval.

KID'S SATURDAY MATINEE

Give the kids something extra each Saturday matinee. Give them some fun-producing contest on the stage with some small prizes. You'll find the kids will enjoy this immensely and your box office will show the results. Such contests could include:

Peanut rolling across the stage.

Eating soda biscuits and whistling.

Biting wieners dangled on strings from a stick (when the stick is properly manipulated for a half a dozen kids at a time, a lot of laughs can result).

Blowing up balloons.

The old favorite pie-eating contest.

Have dog shows on your stage. If you could get a dozen or so kids on your stage with their muts, the audience ought to get a howl. Try to get the kids to have their dogs do tricks, etc., as they lead them across the stage. Applause could decide the prizes. This stunt should be a howl for an evening stunt.

Some of our theatres give away candy as a regular stunt at the Saturday matinees and find it pays. Possibly these candy matinees could be alternated with stunt or contest matinees to the advantage of the theatre.

For a series of Saturday matinees you could give away something the children would consider worth while, such as a pair of rabbits.

You could make this a lucky-number contest or could use it as the prize for the kids' club as noted above. Possibly you could promote a pup from some kennel or owner. In this the men and women would be interested. Other pets could be offered such as pigeons, guinea pigs, canaries, dolls, etc.

FOREIGN COLONIES

Watch your press books and the publicity department's campaign suggestions on your pictures. Where the picture offers a tie-up with your foreign element go after them in a real earnest manner. Such efforts have brought results.

SERIALS FOR KIDS

If you have a serial starting during the contest, go after it in a big way. Remember the kids are not the only ones who enjoy a serial, although many of the grown-ups may not like to admit it. A good serial, with a real start, can mean a steady increase in your box office statements.

ORGAN CLUBS

In several of our theatres organ clubs are working with distinct advantage to the box office. Mr. R. W. Thayer instituted a very successful one in the Eckel in Syracuse. He used newspaper advertising, lobby cards and his screen to tell the people about it, asking them to send in requests for the numbers they wished played on the Eckel organ. A very large following has resulted. Each night a list of names of people requesting the number to be played that evening is run on the screen. This pleases.

You should place a pad of paper in your lobby or foyer where people will write their requests and be sure to notify people when their request number is going to be featured. This is done by mailing them a post card. The Eckel, Syracuse, and the Avon, Utica, send out hundreds of these. Whenever possible secure slides for these numbers and encourage community singing. Try to secure the slides gratis through your organist or orchestra leader. If you find this impossible, communicate with the publicity department.

The organ club gives you an opportunity to popularize your organist and makes another personal contact touch between your theatre and the patrons of your theatre. It is well worth going after with a determination to put it over.

TIE IN WITH LOCAL NEWS

Keep alert to any local news breaking or campaigns you can tie up with to advantage

MANY VALUABLE AND TIMELY SUGGESTIONS

WATCH YOUR "SHORTS"

Analyze your complete show for tie-up possibilities. Often you will find something in your news and comedy that will offer an opportunity to get windows and other stunts, in addition to the opportunities your feature opens to you.

NEWSPAPER CONTESTS

Many different kinds of contests are possible on pictures. John Gilbert is good for a moustache contest, the girls saying whether or not they like that hirsute adornment. Essays of twenty-five to fifty words for passes.

LOVERS' CONTEST

Pictures with heavy loving can be promoted with two lovers' contests. The newspaper and theatre search for the oldest two lovers who have resided for many years in the city and county. These old couples are guests of the theatre.

Promote some jeweler or the newspaper to donate a suitable prize, such as a small cup, appropriately engraved. This can be worked on pictures other than the one mentioned and should be good for publicity.

FAVORITE COP CONTEST

Many crook pictures are on the market. Try the Favorite Cop contest on one of these. The newspaper, in cooperation with the theatre, conducts a voting contest to find out who is the public's favorite on the police force.

The newspaper publishes an explanation and a coupon every day, the coupons being returnable to the theatre or the newspaper or both. In smaller communities where the officers are well known this should work to your advantage and cause a lot of favorable comment.

Have a medal for the prize and try to get the mayor to present it, making a short address, this being done on your stage, of course, during the showing of your particular crook picture.

AUTO ACCIDENT CONTEST

In a crook picture where automobiles are used, particularly where one or more get smashed, your newspaper could conduct a short essay contest on "How to Reduce the Loss of Life by Automobile Accidents."

This is a question that is worrying many legislators, newspaper editors and others. Watch carefully for opportunities to conduct essay contests in connection with your features.

This is one good way to get right into your schools. Where a picture has a historical background, essay contests are often very acceptable and easy to promote.

Of course, it is better to have the cooperation of your newspaper, but if you can't get it, have the school principals and teachers forward the essays to the theatre and have judges the pupils have confidence in.

TREASURE HUNT CONTEST

The treasure hunt is a stunt that could interest both the children and many fun-loving adults. This could be worked on crook and detective stories, as well as others. This stunt can be made a real big affair, embodying many merchants, or it can be worked with the theatre alone. Try the big one first.

The merchants should be interested in getting people into their stores and that is the angle to sell them from. With a number of merchants interested, the newspaper should come along.

The theatre, the merchants and the newspaper should be willing to donate prizes for this event.

The following card explains itself:

Strand-Pocatello Merchants' Treasure Hunt

Copy
About Hunt

Clue No. 1 — Keep All Clues Complete Set Necessary

_____ Signature

Present this to.....store and receive Clue No. 2.

Give prize particulars.

If the merchants go along with you, you can have, say, twenty different sets of clues printed like the above.

The placing of prizes in a field, several good ones, and having people dig for them on a specified afternoon would make a real good flash. Make sure you give one clue at your box office.

IDENTIFICATION CONTEST

Many newspapers have cooperated with theatres throughout the country in such events.

Mats of a star from several of his or her successful pictures are run in the newspaper from day to day, and the person identifying the star and the pictures the mats depict receives prizes.

To make this of additional interest to the newspaper a section of the want ad page should be cut out by the contestant and mailed with the answer.

Newspapers are always trying to boost their want ad pages and anything you can do to help exploit that particular section should bring results to you.

MISCELLANEOUS CONTESTS

Popularity contests for girls, boys, mothers, actors, actresses.

Contest to find people who resemble stars.

Star contest. Cut up mats of stars of pictures and run them in cooperative page advertising spreads with passes for those piecing them together neatly, etc.

Dance contests in dance halls and on stage, also dance marathon for several blocks on street, weather conditions permitting.

Mysterious person on street. Contest to identify party. Tie-up merchants for a cooperative page ad, having party in the different stores at specified times.

Ad writing contests. This can be worked on almost any picture. Give passes for the best ideas for ads for a coming attraction, supplying materials for them to work on.

Boy Scout contests. Could run this for several nights, using the different Scout classifications for contests, such as the fire by friction, rope tying, first aid, etc. Get in touch with your scoutmasters. If this could be included in the regular Court of Honor, it would have an official aspect that would help. If you use the fire by friction, have a couple of fire extinguishers on the stage in view of the audience.

MAILING LISTS

Keep your mailing lists alive and interesting. Post cards can be put out on the rural routes announcing your week's program. These cards need not be addressed, but can be put into the post office in packages with the required number for each specified route. Use the box numbers. Be sure your rural clients get a letter from you occasionally besides the post cards. This will give added emphasis to whatever picture you are boosting. Make your letters snappy and to the point.

SCHOOL TIE-UPS

Get after your manual training teacher and see what you can do to help the interest in his class. Possibly the students would like to display their material in your mezzanine, or would like to enter a model airplane building contest for some of the airplane pictures you have coming. Such a display as referred to would help your box office.

WINDOW DISPLAYS

The large majority of pictures offer many opportunities for window tie-ups. Ofter managers go after these only on the real big ones, but if you can show the merchant where people will be interested in the display, you can sell him often.

Mr. Francis Gere, of the Glove, Gloversville, had difficulty selling the idea of window displays to a chain store until "The Singing Fool" came along. The merchant sold several hundred records as a result of the window and now he is staying sold on the idea, although three years have passed since then.

MUSIC STORES

Often merchants are willing to cooperate if you can show them something of an educational nature for their window. This section also includes the music stores. With the advent of the radio the theme songs of many pictures are getting quite a play over the air.

This creates a demand for the records and sheet music and you can well help the merchant to cash in on them. Let him know several weeks in advance what you have coming that will be of interest to him.

BOY SCOUTS MARATHON

Use troops from two nearby towns. Space boys half a mile or quarter of a mile apart and have a number of troops participate.

Race from one town to another.

Object: Goodwill and publicity for some particular picture. Finish will be in front of your theatre. Have the police and state troopers clear the roads and streets and give the prizes away on the stage.

This should stimulate friendly competition and you should be sure to make distances to be run by each boy short enough so they will not receive an injury from exertion.

The use of a doctor to examine all contestants before the start should be good for more publicity. The possibilities of this stunt are immense, with the spirit of rivalry growing in each community.

BASKETBALL ON STAGE

If your high school has a good basketball team have them stage a demonstration under their instructor on your stage. This should not be a real game. Rig up the baskets right and left.

Of course this depends to a great extent on sufficient stage room for action.

HIGH SCHOOL TALENT

Go after the high school talent for special nights, singers, musicians, etc. You'll be surprised at the real talent you'll discover.

RED HEAD MATINEE

This can also apply to blondes and brunettes, according to your picture. Use it on a matinee with the two admissions for the price of one.

SANTA CLAUS IN JULY? ? ? ? ? ?

Johnny Ely of the New Lillian Theatre in Clarksville, Tenn., cops the world's prize for this month's most unusual gag.

He secured a batch of Christmas trees for his lobby, dressed up a Santa Claus and erected a sign for the holiday display which read:

"Santa Claus is taking his summer vacation and is spending a few days with us."

As Johnny tells it, "Did this cause talk? You can bet your last shirt it did. Santa gave the kiddies ice cream, furnished by a local plant, and also accepted letters from the kiddies telling him what they wanted next Christmas."

Now we ask you, can you trump this one? If you can, come on and shoot us the details and we'll pass 'em along.

(Listen, Ely; we haven't overlooked your Joy Month at all; we've just been a little rushed, what with summer, vacations, golf and general laziness. You know how it is, we'll get around to it for one of our special stories soon. Oke?)

Selette Ties With A Circulating Book Store for Cover Ad

Certainly the logical course to follow when a man seeks circulation is to tie-up with some medium that circulates. And that's just what Edgar Selette, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., did to publicize the name and policy of his theatre. He went in to see the boss of a circulating library and arranged to supply him with brown manilla book covers, the front of the jacket bearing the name of the theatre and outlining its policy and the back giving credit to the book store. We are reproducing the front portion so you can get an idea what it looks like. The above seems to us to be a corking method of getting a message extensively circulated. Think of the number of hands a book goes through when issued from a circulating library! A reader will read most anything that's set up in readable type and it's not so much to state that there's ninety-nine chances out of a hundred that this front cover message was fully digested by many a member of the library. Most any library man ought to be receptive to an idea of this kind, if only for the fact that a good manilla cover will considerably help to preserve book bindings.

Our theatre is always cool and comfortable due to our system of ventilation; our windows are open all day assuring our patrons of real fresh air and comfort.

We are endeavoring to improve our theatre at all times, and always welcome suggestions and criticisms. Among the latest improvements we have made are the installation of new reflecting arc moving picture machines which gives the screen a clearer light, we could not improve the sound (which is the best in town) so we improved the light. New carpets, new lighting effects, have also been installed.

For the convenience of the Mothers who cannot attend our theatre without bringing the baby we have arranged ample parking space for baby carriages; just tell the cashier you have a carriage and she will have an usher park it for you.

Selette's been right busy since returning to Portsmouth. You will recall that this Club member was in Palmer, Mass., not so long ago, in charge of the Palmer and Strand Theatre. On the day he was recalled to Portsmouth he was confronted with a showing of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," combined with a personal appearance of the star, with no work done in advance. In one day he introduced the star to the Mayor, had a picture of the meeting taken, arranged for him to speak at a W. C. T. U. dinner and extracted promises from ministers that he might air his views on prohibition in local churches. Next time we hear from Selette he may be in some other city, straightening out some wayward conditions, but for the present we'll call Portsmouth his home and the above is a sample of the work he's turning out.

All for One and One for All!

Kiddie Club Idea Doubled Matinee Attendance — Hough

Attendance at Saturday morning matinees has been more than doubled owing to the organization of a "Young Timers' Club," writes Edwin Hough, assistant manager of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C. Ed admits his inspiration came from reading a Club account of Assistant Manager "Pop" Weaver's idea along these same lines and has worked out his scheme, adhering as closely as possible to Weaver's formula.

A reader from the local paper states that the "Young Timers" is designed to be a permanent organization, built with the idea of not only providing amusement but as a means of educating the youngsters and the notice particularly drew attention to the fact that there was nothing in the way of a stunt or exploitation connected with it.

Application blanks were printed with space for name, address, date of birth, school and grade and teacher's name. Underneath this is a section for approval of parent, another section for approval of school teacher and at the bottom a space for additional information concerning receipt of the local paper and as to how many of family attending the Rex theatre. All children between the ages of seven and fifteen years are eligible to join, providing they meet the conditions. Those above the age of twelve can attend any performance for an admission of 10 cents. On birthdays an additional free pass is given members in order that they may bring along a member of the family or a friend.

There are already 150 active members in the above club and we're sure that "Pop" Weaver will be gratified to learn that this off-shoot of his organization is bearing fruit so nicely. With a steadily increasing movement among managers to promote kiddie attendance we believe that all efforts along these lines will prove interesting and we're therefore passing them along.

Shoe Tie-Up One Of Feature Stunts Put Over By Morris

Several feature stunts on "Gold Dust Gertie" were recently put over to excellent box office results by Walter Morris, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md.

The highlight of the campaign was undoubtedly a tie-up with six department stores for the promotion of the sales of "Keds" (U. S. Rubber Co.) for a special Saturday morning matinee. Free tickets were distributed at the stores and in return the theatre received mention in each store's ads, calling attention to matinee and the regular current attraction. The wholesale Ked dealer was tied-in for a quarter page ad and the kiddies were also given an interesting little booklet, published by the shoe concern, containing a description of many games for the kids to play during vacation time. The photo on this page will give you an idea of the number of youngsters who turned out for the performance.

For distribution at prominent street corners, etc., 10,000 novelty envelopes, containing a small amount of gold dust, created considerable interest and for a counter card, one was made in the shape of a bag of gold, with a small block of wood attached at base for a stand. These were placed in drug and grocery stores, instead of window cards.

We almost forgot to mention that Morris also had one of his famous banners strung across a principal street in Baltimore. We have mentioned these banners before and we'll have to again state that it isn't every one who can get away with a regular display such as this unless they stand in pretty well among the powers-that-be in their community. Keep us posted on what's doing down your way during the summer months, Walter, and here's hoping you keep up the good work.

Civic Activity Is Great Help to Chas. Holtz at Del Paso

The importance of establishing oneself as a part leader in civic activities is evidenced about as strongly in the case of Charles J. Holtz, manager of the Del Paso Theatre, North Sacramento, Calif., as in any we can call to mind at the present time. That he is a successful manager goes without saying, as anyone at all acquainted with this genial showman of the West Coast knows, and not a little of his achievement can be attributed to his untiring efforts to become a recognized factor in public affairs.

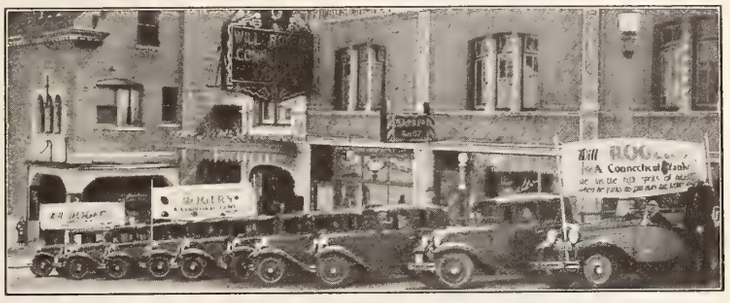
True, it takes a goodly portion of the limited spare time managers have to become actively affiliated with local organizations or assume leadership of some club, yet Holtz holds office in the local Rotary Club and is Scoutmaster of a troop of Boy Scouts. The Rotary Club is a most important organization in a host of communities and we have had occasion to note that whenever a story is published relating to doings of the North Sacramento unit, Holtz's name gets mentioned several times. And, where is there a section where the Boy Scouts do not come in for their share of concern from the public? Being a Scoutmaster naturally entails a few duties but then there is considerable publicity derived from holding such a post, plus the good will carried by the boys to their families.

In a future issue of this department, boxed because we think a yarn of this sort deserves display, will appear an account of the brand of courtesy served out to patrons by employees of the De Paso Theatre. It would seem that the Holtz spirit prevails throughout the house—from the manager down to the humblest employee. It also means that this manager is on the friendliest kind of terms with his newspaper editor and that any time a reasonable opportunity occurs for the paper to extend a break in the way of publicity, he gets it.

We're including one of the Del Paso programs along with this article to show how the back page is utilized. Note the space devoted to advertising a current attraction, the reminder that there is a give-away each Saturday and that a plug for the house itself is not overlooked.

We're not picking this member out as an isolated case of activity in civic affairs for there are many Round Tablers who literally shine when it comes to taking on their share of work in various organizations. This case is cited particularly to show that this manager's interest along these lines has won him an enviable reputation in and around his community and with his own circuit organization. For reports do get back to the home office—and how! The foregoing is merely passed along for the benefit of those who haven't yet reaped the rewards of taking an active part in local neighborhood affairs.

A VEST-POCKET AUTO BALLYHOO!



When "Connecticut Yankee" played the Broadway Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., C. R. Roediger, publicity manager, arranged for a two-hour parade of every Austin that boasted a home in this city. There were really thirteen but only twelve appeared owing to the fact that a mechanic let a monkey wrench drop on one the night before. The stunt proved a corking means of publicizing the attraction.

Pfeiffer Ties With Haberdasher For A Necktie Give-Away

It didn't take Jack E. Pfeiffer, present manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Hammond, Ind., long to start the ball rolling in his new berth for within a few days he contacted a local haberdasher for a tie-up on "Father's Son."

He issued a special coated stock herald on the occasion of Fathers Day and tied with the haberdasher for the give-away of 25 neckties to the first twenty-five Fathers entering the theatre accompanied by Son or Daughter. At the bottom of the herald credit was given to the storekeeper for his part of the stunt. Much interest was shown through distribution of the heralds and receipts at the box office were materially increased.

Many will remember Jack Pfeiffer's good work in connection with putting shows over at the Parthenon Theatre in Hammond and we know he's going to keep up to the mark in his new post.

Club Index for Month of July

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of July. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING!

Theatre advertising fields ranging all the way from the Pacific Coast to New England and Canada are covered in this week's articles.

Harold Kopplin, despite the fact that newspaper advertising is considered by his company far more advantageous than any other form, thinks the theatre's own screen surpasses any other method.

Over in Bristol, Conn., Alfred Weiss also believes that the theatre's own show windows, such as lobby, foyer and screen, can be made to yield greater returns than any other form of advertising effort.

Up in the Canadian region Pete Egan stresses the value of street advertising, pointing out that if concentrated in certain sections at certain hours of the day, a good snappy line of advertising reaches the public, including the kids, at all times.

Harold Kopplin Likes Theatre Screen Best Of All; Papers Next

About a year ago, I think, Fox West Coast Theatres decreed that their new advertising budget would be used to concentrate on newspaper space; that they were planning on eliminating the billboard campaigns as soon as their present contracts expired. I do not think this was done entirely; probably for various reasons. The billboard (or as we call it, the 24-sheet) has seen its best days as far as the theatre is concerned. Many cities have passed ordinances against their use in the best parts of town and many towns do not allow them at all. Then, too, in days gone by, the theatres were the only advertisers using this method of display (except an occasional circus) and even a few boards in town loomed out like a double-page ad does at the present time. And so, as time went on, other advertisers found the advantage of the 24-sheet until we were all but swamped into insignificance with our measly 10 or 20 locations. To buck this kind of advertising competition needs a campaign of more or less gigantic proportions necessitating an expenditure of more money than a four-day or a week's run picture can stand. There are exceptions, however, for a billboard campaign, but there are not enough "Sunny Side Ups," "Show Boats," "All Quiets" or "Cimarrons' to make it a steady diet.

Costless Advertising

I agree with Fox Westco that newspapers are far more advantageous to the theatre than 24-sheets. But I must disagree with their powers that be when they say that newspapers are the best medium of all. To my mind they are second in line and your own screen, WHICH COSTS YOU NOTHING AT ALL TO USE, is by far the most important factor in your advertising. True enough, a number of people will say that whats the use of telling your regular customers a lot of superlative bunk about the gala hits, etc., that you have in store for them—they'll come anyway . . . and that's true as far as it goes, but there are very few theatres (except neighborhood houses) that have this great list of regular patrons "that come anyway." Why would any national advertiser gladly cut a chunk off of his newspaper money to be sure of using the theatre screens to sell his wares? He sees the great advantage the screen has over other mediums . . . that the theatre patron has nothing else to look at but the screen and that if he can read at all, a little of his sales talk will sink in. A lot of us are blind to this medium because it's too close to us.

Other Selling Points

Most houses are using some sort of trailer service at this time, but this alone is not my point. Every theatre has something to sell except just pictures. You might have an anniversary coming in a month's time . . . it's too far away to start spending hard-earned money in the newspapers, but it's never too early to start selling it on the screen . . . you might want to impress the superiority of your refrigeration plant or your cooling system . . . you might have any number of things in the near future coming to our theatre—tell the folks about it with your cheapest and most effective medium.

To tie in with your screen advertising at the theatre itself make your lobby attractive with displays selling the same sort of messages . . . don't let it be said that one patron has missed a thing that you have for sale; and after you've sold him on the idea he knows that your theatre is playing this or that and he's sure he's coming. This sort of advertising, too, has another advantage over newspapers—it sells the attraction "at the point of purchase."

After this comes the newspapers, and don't think that they should be slighted even a little bit. Many of you readers will say that I'm plenty wrong when I put them second in line. And I admit that I am (if everybody who reads the paper saw your ad), but they don't and you know it, unless you are one of the lucky individuals who have a big allotment and can use a lot of space every day; and even then everybody won't see it, but it's better than my argument (that is, if you can write a damn good ad every day, and a lot of us need plenty of training in that direction, too).

The third in line is truck ballying. Naturally this can't be used for all types of pictures and shouldn't just be used with just a few six-sheets, but if you have an idea and a few helpers you can make an effective splash about once a month or even more often.

And then come the 24-sheets. If you have a few very good locations, use them, by all means—or if you can afford a big campaign on something you stand a chance of making some money use them, too. But don't snipe them at random; it would be better not to buy them at all and save the billposter cost and send that extra money to me. You'd benefit just as much all the way around. Thassall.

HAROLD A. KOPPLIN.

Theatre's Own Show Windows Considered Foremost By Weiss

There are various methods and ways of advertising a theatre and its attractions. Naturally different towns in various sections of the country do things in different manners and the size of the town or community has much to do with the methods used. Yet, with that thought in view there is one way, in my opinion, for theatre advertising that stands head and shoulders above all others. Our own show window, lobby and screen.

We all know that there are a certain number of people in every city that are consistent theatre patrons and these are the people that we must appeal to every day. The others, which come only to a theatre for some outstanding attraction or a favorite star can be reached in other ways which I shall try to explain later.

Keep Patron Sold

To appeal to the class which are more or less regular customers, I believe the way to keep these patrons coming to every change of program is to properly exploit your attractions in the theatre. I believe that any theatre should always have a new and attractive looking entrance, a freshness in its posters, and an appeal with catchy copy on its front banners, outside lobby and display frames. The same thing in the foyer and theatre, always bright and attractive (not gaudy), advertising and I think that the most trouble with a large percentage of us managers is that we don't pay the proper thought to that and to the use of our screen, silent, locally made and sound. Trailers should be watched by all means and given the proper consideration on a program as well as any short or feature and it is not a hard task to dress up a trailer a little with lights, masks, etc. In other words, I believe that a theatre is the most valuable form and place to sell its own attractions, "Lobby and Screen."

Other managers may have other methods, yet those are the ones I stick by and believe in. Other forms are necessary and valuable to create attendance, such as newspaper, posting and novelty heralds or stunts.

But, above all things, we must never forget our show-window, our Lobby and Screen.

ALFRED F. WEISS, JR.

Street Advertising Properly Timed Very Effective, Says Egan

I consider the most valuable form of theatre advertising, street and front advertising. Possibly in the big cities, you may say this is all "hooey" due to the fact that newspaper advertising is the nucleus of all advertising. I am not in any way trying to make out that newspaper advertising should not be used, but in cities in Canada, of say populations from 25,000 to 75,000, I have found that good street advertising is one of our best bets, due to the fact that in most of these cities, about two or three blocks are our main drag, and by good snappy street advetrising you are reaching the public at all times, if you work this advertising certain hours at noon and in the evening, you are bound to get the office staffs, and so forth, and on their way to dinner, or on their way home.

School Ballyhoos

Another thing in its favor, is that street advertising can be used in this city around the schools, and if you were to see the crowds of youngsters in our city who follow a street ballyhoo when it hits the school district, and certain inducements are given them for matinees and so forth, I know you would agree with me. And my contention is, that if you can get the children interested, you are certainly going to get the grown-ups.

Being a family man with three boys of theatre age, I can tell you that if they see something in the show line, that they like you can rest assured that the wife and myself are certainly dragged to see it by the family.

The kids are another form of advertising that never should be lost sight of; for if they like a show, the advertising they give out from mouth-to-mouth, and to their homes is invaluable.

Working in with street advertising is the front advertising, in these cities; and a good scenic artist can do as much as a manager in drawing the public, making the theatre front so inviting that the public will come in.

Don't lose sight of good street advertising, and front advertising! With proper looking after it can't help but be a winner.

WATCH YOUR BOOKINGS CLOSELY!

Make it a rule this season to pay strict attention to the booking of your theatre. All too often, after a show is projected on the screen, managers find that it lacks certain necessary entertainment values.

Working from the feature, newsreel, etc., you should be able to select your surrounding bill from the many fine short subjects now available.

By all means play those worthwhile shorts up in every possible way. In your newspaper ads, lobby displays, marquee lights, etc. You will find, as did many other showmen in the past, that these grand program builders save many a poor feature from ruining the entire show.

Whether you book your own house direct or through a booker in a home office, your opinions will always be well received. Passing the buck to some one else is hardly an excuse for a poor show.

Beehler And Cohen 'Hang' A Magician And Draw Big Crowd

The Earle Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., is fast becoming one of the centres of attraction in the Quaker City, due to a series of rapid-fire exploitation stunts being pulled by Manager Dave Beehler and Publicity Garnerer Artie Cohen, both press and public being kept on the qui vive for what's next!

One of the most recent thrillers that these two livewires put across was the "hanging" of Huber, the magician (who was billed on the vaude end of the program), by his feet from the top of the Earle Theatre building, from which point he escaped from a straight-jacket. Approximately 5,000 people jammed the streets and office buildings to witness the spectacle. The "escape" was made in exactly two minutes and seven seconds (record time) and resulted in plenty of publicity and excellent business.

No doubt at all that Dave and Artie are partly responsihble for keeping Philly awake these days with "hangings", etc., and this pair have a reputation for taking advantage of the presence of any personality which will circulate the name of the Earle Theatre about the town. Next time we wonder what they'll pull! Of course, stunts of this nature are only applicable for use in cities of a size which permit the booking of added attractions such as Huber the Magician and others of his ilk, or in cities that support a vaudeville house or a combination of big time vaudeville and pictures. However, it would seem that any time a personality such as the above can be persuaded to stage an advertising stunt in the vicinity of a theatre it is bound to reflect greater returns at the box office.

Gas Stations Help Kennebec Put Over "The Millionaire"

A free ticket and herald tie-up was recently effected with a chain of gasoline filling stations by Frank Kennebec, manager of the Le Claire Theatre, Moline, Ill., without a cent of cost to the house. The stunt was worked in connection with "The Millionaire," and resulted in a lot of valuable advertising.

He contacted the head of the company and sold the idea of giving one free theatre ticket with each greasing or oil change and further convinced him that the gas company should pay box office prices for the tickets. To advertise the distribution of the guest tickets, the service stations published a 15-inch ad in the local daily and paid for the distribution of 2,000 heralds carrying the same copy as published in the paper.

The above is certainly an example of costless advertising. Not only did Kennebec sell a block of tickets at regular rates but in addition received a lot of valuable free publicity, and the stunt can be pulled in connection with showings of any picture.

The stunt can also be adapted to the use of any picture. We're glad to hear from you again, Ken, and next time don't wait so long to send along your contribution.

Guy Kenimer Sold "Trader" With Plug On Romance Angles

Romance and adventure were stressed in the campaign made on "Trader Horn" by Guy Kenimer, manager of the Florida Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., rather than making a strong play on the animal angle. The reason for this, he states in his report, was that other animal pictures had not done so well at Jacksonville box offices. With this in mind, all advertising was prepared with animal and jungle features in the background and the soundness of Kenimer's judgment was reflected by the best business the house had seen in some time.

Both local newspapers generously responded to an advance call from the theatre and gave a strong plug to criticisms from nationally recognized writers. This was followed up with reviews from well known local celebrities, such as Ben Burbridge who filmed "The Gorilla Hunt" a few years ago.

Burbridge also contributed many trophies for use with an atmospheric front and lobby, a photo of which we are reproducing on this page. Palms, bamboo and native moss were all used with striking effect.

Other effort included tie-ups with schools for special morning matinees and permission from the Parent-Teachers' Association to make announcements in schools; street ballyhoos of truck with cut-out and strips for front bumpers of autos; radio announcements each day; bookmarks for library; window tie-ups; placing of cards on popular highways; 100 special three-sheets, and trailers on screens of all affiliated theatres in city.

The effectiveness of all the above stunts is attested to by Jack Hodges, who batted in this particular instance for Kenimer by sending along campaign material. Many thanks to him for remembering his obligations and much credit to his manager and associates for the way they put this one over.

Stonebrook Effects Ad Schedule Change To Sell Rogers Film

In order to establish "Connecticut Yankee" as an out of the ordinary attraction, Rollin K. Stonebrook, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Asbury Park, re-arranged his advertising schedule, using larger ads in advance of playdate and opening day and cutting down on current space, his expense appropriation remaining the same.

Other features of his campaign consisted of the distribution of 1,000 book marks, along with a display of Mark Twain's books in the public library; distribution of 2,000 envelopes, each containing a match and carrying the copy, "Can You Do Will Roger's Match Trick?" (Copy tied-in with picture incident); Window displays with book stores through cooperation from publishers; Display from manufacturers of the Camelot Game; distribution among children of 1,000 "Connecticut Yankee" buttons and several other minor merchandising activities along regular publicity lines.

When selling "Shipmates" prizes were offered for the best model boats and these were displayed in the lobby a week prior to opening. Life savers and signal flags were promoted and used in front of boardwalk entrance to theatre during the run.

Both of the above campaigns went over particularly well, the former resulting in hanging up one of the biggest grosses for this theatre in several months and the latter proving a most appropriate method of attracting attention in a shore resort city. Now that the season is in full swing down along the Atlantic coast we surmise that Stonebrook will be shooting along further evidence of his show-selling abilities down in Asbury and we'll be looking forward to a letter from him soon.

Ted Toddy Active Through South With 'Dirigible' Campaign

A whirlwind campaign on "Dirigible" through Florida and a section of Georgia was recently completed by Ted Toddy, exploiteer with a Columbia readshowing of this picture. Many effective tie-ups were made in the cities of Miami, Tampa and Atlanta, that of St. Petersburg being particularly noteworthy.

At least two precedents in the history of St. Petersburg picture exploitation history were established, according to claims set forth in his report from this city. One was the running of the first double truck, in the town's strongest paper, in which many prominent merchants participated with quarter page ads. This same paper also broke another long standing rule, it is claimed, by giving a complete art layout in which 5 stills were used and accompanied some with a one-column full story.

Other efforts included a special midnight show; a tie-up with the naval base; special windows from all co-op ad users, with 350 additional windows in town; distribution of 10,000 tabs; imprinted paper bags for grocery concern; puzzle tie-up with several concerns, using 10,000 "Dirigible" puzzles; 10,000 blotters for schools and libraries; tie-ups with Goodyear and Coco-Cola; Radio and Boy Scouts and an expensive use of paper, ranging from tack cards up to 24-sheets.

Inasmuch as the double truck figured in a history making effort we are reproducing a photo of same on this page and at the same time offer congratulations to Toddy for putting on such a thorough and result-getting campaign. He states that at all points the managers of every theatre gave him the finest kind of cooperation and they are entitled to a great share of the credit for the many highly successful engagements.

Schosberg Secures Plenty Free Space With Guessing Gag

One of the scene mats in "Up Pops the Devil" suggested the promotion of a guessing contest to Milton Schosberg, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., that netted him a large share of free newspaper space through his tie-up; the paper liking the idea so well that they donated 38 inches to the contest, theatre, star, picture and playdates.

Milt suggests the passing along of the guessing contest idea to other members of this Club and we believe he will be glad to contribute further information regarding the scene mat if any other Round Tabler will but take time to drop him a line. We'd gladly supply this information if we had it.

Halmi Is Clicking In New Mexico!

T. Z. Halmi, whose fine art work has been featured on these pages many times, has severed his connections with the RKO houses in Fort Wayne, Indiana, and is now looking after the art work for America's foremost Indian Theatre in Albuquerque, N. M., the "Kimo."

"Kimo," in case you don't know it, means Mountain Lion in the Navajo Indian language, according to Halmi. The theatre is designed according to Pueblo Indian style and is certainly unusual.

Interesting pictures of the house and the art work being turned out by this fine theatre artist will be reproduced in future issues. Send them along as fast as possible, T. Z. We'll be on the lookout for them.

THINGS TO BE DONE NOW!

This is a good time of the year to make sure that your heating plant is in good condition for next winter. Has it been carefully cleaned out, not only the grates and ash box, but the sections of piping on the inside? Are you certain that the boiler is full of water? An expert on furnaces tells us that the boiler should be filled to the top during the summer months. Then, in the fall, prior to starting the fire, it should be flushed with a washing soda mixture and drained before being filled to the operation level.

Another detail best handled at this time is the close inspection of all exit-panic bolts and other hardware to insure proper working at all times. Door-checks, hinges, door-pulls, etc., all come under this heading.

Neglect is responsible for 90 per cent of expensive repairs and replacements. You can materially reduce your overhead by making sure that each detail of your theatre's equipment is in good, workable condition at all times.

Additional Names Secured By Boucher With A Lobby Stunt

Publicity for his house and current attraction and many additional names for the mailing list were recently secured by Frank Boucher, manager of the Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, Md., in a tie-up engineered with a local shoe shop by assistant manager, Frank Schaeffer.

With "Svengali" playing, these two showmen arranged a "ladies' corner" in the theatre lobby, furnished with a desk, writing material, chair, lamp and a large autographed photo of Marian Marsh. A ballot box with cards was placed by the desk, a card reading, "Place Marian Marsh Applause Card Here." The cards asked that the writer express her appreciation of the work done by Miss Marsh and requested a signed photograph. Cost of cards and printing was absorbed by the shoe man, who also gave over a window for advertising received on the reverse side of card.

In connection with the every other week's showing of Bobby Jones' golf shorts, he promoted from a local sporting goods dealer a quantity of tees for free distribution in an envelope bearing ad of dealer on one side and name of theatre and playdate on the other. Arrangements have also been made with golf clubs to carry ads on score boards as to when Jones plays his theatre.

Thanks, Schaeffer, for keeping the Club informed as to what you and Frank Boucher are doing these days at the Maryland and don't forget to pass along some of those good hot weather stunts you're putting over these days.

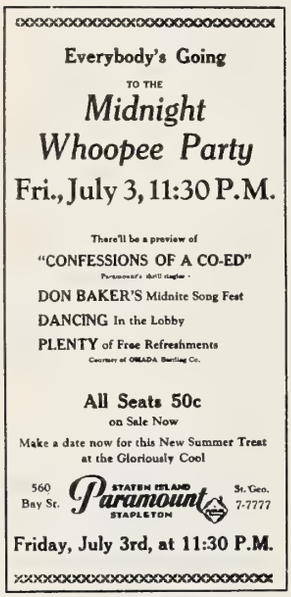
Coppock's Whoopee Parties Are Going Over In a Big Way

Something different in the way of Midnight Matinees has been tried out by E. S. C. Coppock, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Staten Island, N. Y., different in that this idea has gone over like wildfire and has been the means of increasing weekly receipts several hundred dollars at a comparatively small expenditure. It's called a Midnight Whoopee Party and now we're going to tell you all we know about it:

On Saturday nights he merely runs another complete performance, just a continuation of what has been running all day with perhaps a change in the organ solo to suit the occasion and the addition of a few novelty songs. If there is an act on the bill, that also does an extra performance.



Now here's where the real kick of the program comes in—the entire lobby is cleared of easels and set pieces so that it can be left free for dancing. A local orchestra is promoted for the publicity they get from the occasion and a ginger ale company also donates about 50 gallons of beverages for the same reason. This is served in paper cups at a large table in the lower floor foyer. About $5 is spent for balloons and serpentine.

After the feature picture is over, approximately 1:15 A. M., the audience stops by the refreshment table and then proceeds to jam up the lobby where hot music is turned out by the orchestra for about an hour. Coppock tells us that he received the surprise of his life when watching for reactions the first time the stunt was pulled off. Says it was a sight for sore eyes to see that lobby jammed with dancers and all really relaxing to a point of being themselves for a change. Of course, the members of the gang who did not dance picked out spots on the grand staircase or sat around the foyers, amusing themselves as they saw fit.

Naturally, the idea behind the stunt is to snap the audience out of a formal atmosphere which appears to exist in all playhouses of the larger type and let the patrons run the show themselves after the regular program is over.

In terms of dollars and cents the cost of these performances, including all advertising, overtime, etc., never exceeds $75 and when the box office takes in amounts such as $400 to $500, it leaves a mighty comfortable margin of profit.

Underlines are carried in all newspaper ads, a one-frame trailer is used on the screen and 200 one-sheets are sniped, plus the distribution of about 5,000 dodgers in autos and to people. Occasionally a few thousand paper napkins are printed, carrying Whoopee copy, for distribution in the little "drop-in" eating places along the boulevards.

In past references to the activities of this manager we have mentioned that he's a strong advocate of institutional selling but when taking into consideration the fact that the gross of this house has practically been doubled since he took charge, there must be something to it. One of his stunts along this line was the issuing of 4,000 free tickets for distribution among the music classes of the public schools for a Music Appreciation Concert during the period between afternoon and evening performances. The music advisor of the schools acted as master of ceremonies for the occasion. There was competitive singing between choruses of 100 voices each, group singing and a memory contest. The house organist played selections for the latter stunt. The entire performance lasted about an hour and one-half.

Other activities included a Saturday morning benefit performance for the United Parents' Association, whereby tickets were sold in schools for a show obtained at minimum rental on account of the occasion. The appreciation of this move was reflected later on through a theatre party given by this group that brought 2,000 people to the playhouse.

Another stunt which he claims has never failed to produce results is the filming of local events, such as the first ball game and other local news shots for presentation at the theatre. As a follow-up, organizations now come to him to make shots of local activities, perfectly willing to pay all expense involved for the pleasure of seeing themselves on the screen.

In the foregoing you have a few of the secrets which reveal why Coppock has proven such a popular and efficient manager of the Staten Island Paramount and why this house is now enjoying a business it never experienced prior to his taking over of the helm. It looks as though he's hit the nail on the head with a Whoopee party as a substitute for the old time midnight matinee. True, it takes a house of sufficient size to stage a stunt of this kind but there are many of them in all parts of this country large enough to try out the idea. Smaller houses might try the stunt on a smaller scale. Of the value of his institutional activities, we do not think we need go into any detail. Most every manager is fully aware that seeds sown in this soil yield bumper returns.

Poag And Kessler Turn Out A Fine "Front Page" Sign

It's always a great pleasure to get a line on what P. J. Poag and his able assistant manager J. W. Kessler are doing at the Princess and Casino Theatres in Del Rio, Texas. The pleasure is in the fact that these two fellows are in the habit of pulling worthwhile stunts which we feel sure will prove of interest to their many brother managers in this Club.

For example, take their front on "Front Page." At least, until credit is claimed from some other source, we will have to pin a medal on this pair of managers for producing something different or perhaps, original. Note by the accompanying photo that they tied with their local paper for the masthead display of this very well worked out front. This seems to us a corking good slant and one which could be profitably employed by anyone who has not yet played this picture. It not only captures local interest but gains the good will and cooperation from your local paper. Also note that in addition to copy in connection with the current picture space is devoted to "late news flashes" relating to change in price of admission, the showing of a special comedy and theatre news in general.

Poag and Kessler are going in heavy for the display of large cutout letters spelling the title of the current picture and from what we can glean by an enclosed photo these displays are put across with telling effect. Where the length of title permits the letters are generally strung the entire length of the lobby entrance. We also note that when playing a Keaton picture they painted a picture of the star in oil and had it frozen in a cake of ice for a lobby display. For a stunt of this kind oil is generally used for the reason that it will not run when put in contact with ice water. Additional publicity on a stunt of this kind can be gained through a tie-up with a local ice dealer to whom anyone must go in order to effect the freezing process. We are aware of several instances, recorded in past issues of this department, where a tie-up of this kind resulted in town-wide publicity for theatre and current picture.

Del Rio is not a great big city, having a population of something around 10,000 but we'll go on record in stating that there's a couple of big time showmen down there, judging from the calibre of their work. This is not the first time we've presented samples of their work and we hope it will not be the last.

Bair Active With Jones Series; His Ads Are Distinctive

We knew that E. E. Bair, manager of the State and American theatres, East Liverpool, Ohio, was still on the job out his way and a recent letter from him proves our contention and explains his delinquencies as far as contributions are concerned. In view of the fact that he's sent along an interesting collection of material we'll accept his apologies and proceed to let his brother members know what kind of work he's been turning out.

Taking advantage of the selling angles presented by the Bobby Jones series of shorts he worked up a couple of corking ads in cooperation with a local golf supply dealer and we are presenting one of them on this page for your inspection. Note the general attractiveness of the display and that the tie-up with the theatre is neatly gotten over to the reader. Both ads indicate forethought and ingenuity of layout.

Regarding his regular run of theatre advertising we'll venture the opinion that the utmost in display values are extracted by the methods followed in the placing of mats. Note the big display which is obtained without the sacrifice of white space. The ad is not at all crowded but at the same time really carries considerable copy. And whether you can see it in the reproduction or not there's a little piece of copy in the top border that takes the eye; all it says is, "It's the Pictures."

Not so long ago Bair states he "copped" the "Min and Bill" calling card idea from this department, using it with "Millie." Readers will recall that these cards were inscribed, "Recognized Your Car on Way to Blank Theatre—Hope to See You There—Millie," and were distributed in parked autos. In this case a rural actually came to the box office and asked for "Millie," leaving his telephone number. This was an actual happening and ought to prove a real inspiration for one of Dick Kirschbaum's popular "Lobby Laffs."

To illustrate the loyal spirit this theatre's service staff recently displayed, let us state that three of the six ushers in this season's graduating class at school acted as a unit when sending out invitations by signing all three names to a card with a line reading, "State Theatre Ushers."

Continue the good work, Bair, and remember to keep your Club informed more regularly on your work for we are sure that the samples you have submitted have proved beneficial to your brother members.

Clark Crashes The Famous "Rose Bowl" With Auto Ballyhoo

A most especially constructed brown derby must be placed upon the crown of Lester J. Clark, manager of the Fox-Colorado Theatre, Pasadena, Calif., for crashing the famous Rose Bowl—an unprecedented event—with a ballyhoo on "Seed" during the recent circus and fireworks show, an annual attraction of much importance in Pasadena and environs.

Fire crackers are not allowed in this city so about 30,000 southern Californians turned out on Fourth of July evening to witness the event. Just before the festivities got under way four autos, each bearing in front of the radiators a huge compo board letter of the title, paraded from the theatre into the bowl, around the track several times and back through the crowd. The machines were decorated with red, white and blue bunting and a strip along the front bumper carried the name of the theatre. The only cost necessary to put over the stunt was the outlay for the letters and the tissue paper.

No originality is claimed for the above with the single exception of winning permission to circulate a message among 30,000 patrons in a heretofore uncrashable public stadium. Clark is passing it along with the idea that some other Round Tabler may be able to adapt the idea to local conditions in connection with other important local events to be held in a stadium. Or, it might be an idea for some manager to spring on the City Fathers in a city where the promiscuous shooting of fireworks is prohibited. At any rate, it got the Colorado business—as did the additional use of a throw-away in the form of a page from the book "Seed," bearing the imprint of theatre, cast and playdates.

Bathing Suit And Pajama Revue Big Draw For C. J. Rose

Bathing suits and the prodigious popularity of those funny looking pajamas currently being displayed around beach resorts by the ladies, formed the background for a bathing revue staged by Manager C. J. Rose and assistant manager Wess Metzinger, of the Fox Colonial Theatre, Norwich, Conn., that resulted in capacity business on the night of presentation. And all at a cost of but $35 to the house.

The stunt was presented through cooperation of the local branch of a big mail order house and a jeweler. The stage setting, promoted from mail order house stock, consisted of beach tables, chairs, sun umbrellas, canoes, etc. The girls were carefully chosen by Rose himself and he drilled them so that the event came through with clock-like precision. The swimming suits worn by the girls were given them with the compliments of the mail order house and the jewelry store awarded a diamond ring in the senior and junior divisions who received the most applause from patrons. A local orchestra furnished appropriate music for advertising received.

In advertising the event Rose covered the city and surrounding communities with special heralds, window cards, theatre programs, three sheets and a special window display in the local mail order branch store. The stunt was worked in conjunction with the showing of "Gold Dust Gertie" but it will be apparent to all that it can be tied in with most any seasonable picture and we're passing along the suggestion in order that some other manager may wish to approach his Montgomery-Ward or some other store which would be receptive to the idea.

A THOUGHT FOR TODAY!

More Boosters For The Round Table!

DENNIS SCALING is in charge of the Criterion Theatre, Enid, Okla., and he's another Publix man to enroll in this organization for the purpose of swapping show-selling ideas with his brother members. Shoot them in, Dennis, and give the rest of the boys an idea of your brand of showmanship. And what about that photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY BEALL is the advertising supervisor of Publix theatres in Dallas, Texas, with headquarters at the Melba Theatre, and undoubtedly has had a hand in promoting a lot of the stunts we've printed in the past that originated from his town. Certainly Beall is in a position to give us the lowdown on all that's going over down his way and we take pleasure in including his name among the members of this organization.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RICHARD ASH has the job of managing the Academy Theatre in Waukegan, Ill., and we take this occasion to welcome him to the ranks of this great organization. Ash is a Publix man and we don't think we are making a rash statement when we say that he's going to prove just as good a contributor to this Club as a lot of other P. P. men.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HENRY PRECIADO manages the Nogales Theatre, Nogales, Arizona, and while we note that Henry starts a continuous show at 2 P.M. and runs straight through 'till 11 P.M., we have a hunch that he takes off enough time to get out to tell Nogales all about his wares. How he does it we'll hope to unfold in a future issue.

JACOB C. FRIESEN manages the Foam Lake Theatre, Foam Lake, Sask., Canada. He's over in Cincinnati right now spending a several weeks vacation before resuming his theatre duties and while there he caught the Club spirit and sent in his membership application. Said he ought to have done it before on account of having been a consistent user of Club material and felt it was about time he rendered an account of himself. Better late than never, Jake, and we'll be awaiting your return to Foam Lake.

ROBERT MARTIN WEITMAN is the managing director of the Brooklyn Paramount Theatre, the big 4,000 seat house across the East River in New York City. It takes a sharp man to garner trade in that highly competitive downtown section of Brooklyn and we are going to expect to hear some lively accounts of how this new Club member is doing his stuff. We've got your photo, Bob, and the first time we get a line on some activity of yours we will give your brother members an idea of what the photographer turned out. In the meantime, lots of luck.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. K. MITCHELL manages the Fox U. C. Theatre in Berkeley, Calif., and we've already had an opportunity to take note of the kind of work this new Club member is turning out in the way of boosting shows for his outfit. The U. C. is a first run house and we will look forward to hearing what Mitchell is doing to establish pictures in his zone. Send along a photo, W. K., next time you get in touch with us.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. E. HUGHES is at the helm of the Fox and Fox Temple Theatres in McCook, Nebraska, links in the Rocky Mountain Circuit, and we are glad to welcome this new Round Tabler to our ranks. Although in charge of two houses, and that means that this member has plenty to do, we hope that he will be able to find the time to tell the Club about his work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALLACE C. HARDING is the manager of the Reid Hall Theatre 'way down in Hamilton, Bermuda Islands. We'd like to take a pleasant sea trip down to his town and personally extend him a welcome to this organization but this little paragraph will have to suffice for the present. Wallace, what's the dope on show-selling down your way, and what are you doing about it? Let's know next time we hear from you. We can also use one of your photos if you have one handy.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GAY S. PINNELL has the job of managing the Orpheum Theatre in Marion, Ill., one of the Fox West Coast houses, and we take this opportunity to extend this new member a most cordial welcome to this organization of showmen. He's been reading about other member's activities for some time and now means to help his brothers out by passing along some of his own ideas. Shoot them along Gay and we'll do the rest. And by the way, we note that the Orpheum's exchequer will be expanding due to the fact that Sunday shows are now permitted there. Congratulations, Gay!

PAUL T. STONUM is in charge of the Capitol Theatre in Taylorville, Ill. He has just become one of the new members of this fast growing organization and we will welcome the opportunity to tell you more concerning his show-selling activities. His house plays both pictures and vaudeville and is one of the top-notchers in his section of the country.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FRED BEZOLD manages the Lotus and Orpheum Theatres in Sheridan, Wyoming, a total of about 1,400 seats which, we take it, keeps him plenty busy thinking up ideas on how to keep them all filled. In doing all of this we know he's got some good live selling stunts up his sleeve and his brother members may expect to hear about them in the near future. And how about one of your photographs, Fred?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BARNEY JOFFEE is in charge of the Fox-Uptown Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., a 2,250 seater in the first run class and from what we know of conditions out his way his fellow members may expect to hear some interesting accounts of show selling from this new Club member just as soon as he swings into action. And why not include a photo, Barney, next time you sit down to that typewriter?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. D. L'ESPERANCE is the manager of the Orpheum Theatre, a vaudeville and picture house on the Fox West Coast Circuit in the City of San Diego, Calif. He's an old subscriber to the Herald and has been following Round Table department pages for some time, recently "seeing the light" and the net result is an application for membership in this great organization of world-wide showmen. You will hear more about L'Esperance in future issues.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

F. P. LARSON, when last heard from, was at the helm of the Fox Theatre in Boise, Idaho, and from all accounts he's still there and very much on the job. We are in receipt of his application for Club membership and take pleasure in extending him a cordial welcome among his many fellow members. What was that last live-wire stunt you put over, Larson? Tell the rest of the boys all about it next time you write. And why not include a photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE C. LEWIS is the manager of the Wilday Theatre, Edwardsville, Ill., a Publix house in the middle West division. George is hereby welcomed to the ranks of this organization, among which is a large number of his brother managers on the same circuit. Soon he'll be exchanging show selling yarns with them through the medium of these pages and we will be looking forward to his first contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LESTER CLARK is the manager of the Colorado Theatre in Pasadena, Calif., and an example of this new Club member's work will soon make its appearance in this department. It is always a pleasure to extend welcome to a live-wire manager and now that Lester has started the good work we feel certain that he intends to keep it up for all time.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

INSULITE

CORRECTS ACOUSTICS

THE whole world has gone 'sound conscious'. No matter in what language a picture is shown, the public in that part of the world insists on good hearing conditions in a theatre, or stays away. It's the same in Podunk, U. S. A., or Alexandria, Egypt. Insulite Products are solving this sound problem in every section of the globe.

In the remodeling of the "Cinema Eden" in Alexandria, Egypt, Insulite was used both on the interior and exterior of the building. The Western Electric engineers over there state that the treatment of the interior of this theatre "produced an acoustical condition very favorable to our requirements".

Insulite Acoustile is scientifically designed to absorb excess sound energy. It is the ideal material for treating a theatre showing sound pictures, because it is more uniform in its efficiency over the entire frequency range than any other material. Insulite Acoustile eliminates distorting reverberations and dead spots, so that the clear notes of both voice and music carry distinctly to every part of the house.

The use of Insulite Acoustile is economical . . . it stops that loss of patronage due to poor acoustics. Expensive remodeling is unnecessary as it can be easily and quickly applied to the existing surface. Insulite Acoustile will enhance the appearance of any theatre and the pleasing texture of the material takes any desired decorative treatment.

The upper picture is a view of the entrance of the "Cinema Eden", Alexandria, Egypt. The lower picture shows the application of Insulite Sheathing to the exterior.

Alexander Smith CRESTWOOD Carpet, Pattern No. 1840-C in the lounge of The 77th Street Theatre, New York City.

This illustration gives you an idea of the luxurious atmosphere created by CRESTWOOD Carpet. But only an idea. To fully appreciate the beauty of CRESTWOOD you must see the carpet itself. Send for color cards and a quality sample and compare CRESTWOOD with any other carpet manufactured by the same process. Compare CRESTWOOD'S superior new patterns, and observe the clean-cut designs made possible by the use of high grade wool yarns—compare the density of weave and depth of pile—and you will understand why Fox, Warner Bros., Publix and the majority of successful theatres throughout the country use CRESTWOOD Carpet—the largest selling grade of carpet in the world. Here's The Proof

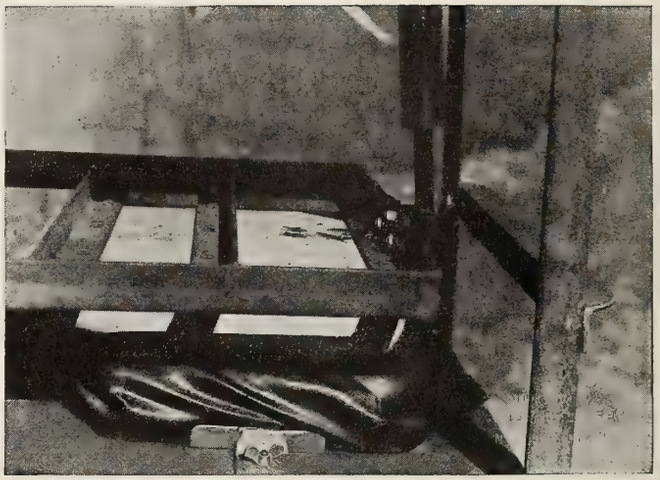
Here's the torture chamber! This special flexing machine was developed by DuPont Company and Heywood-Wakefield to test out the wearing qualities of the new fabrikoid used on H-W chairs. It creates a "bellows action" similar to that caused by patrons in sitting and arising from chairs. The seats tested were kept under a constant pressure of 200 lbs.!



Crushed 1,000,000 Times! The seat in the picture is upholstered in the new fabrikoid used on Heywood-Wakefield theatre chairs only. It was crushed, squashed, twisted, and distorted (as shown above) more than 1,000,000 times, yet it did not crack, chip, peel, or break. Seats upholstered in other materials of this type were unable to withstand one-sixth this amount of crushing!

The New Exclusive Fabrikoid on H-W Theatre Chairs Outwears All Others!

Note the terrific abuse handed out by the machine pictured above. It demonstrates how thoroughly every material which enters the making of H-W chairs is tested. NOW—theatre men are offered a new upholstery material on Heywood-Wakefield chairs. It is a new, high quality DuPont fabrikoid which will outwear all ordinary materials from 4 to 6 times. The new fabrikoid has a clean, dry-feeling, sanitary surface; it may be washed with soap and water; and it has better acoustical properties than any other type.

More than 1,000,000 Crushings — yet it will not crack or chip

The special machine pictured above crushed and distorted seats in this new material more than a million times per test, yet it did not crack or chip. Ask your nearest Heywood-Wakefield Sales Office about the new, long-wearing fabrikoid. Remember —it is available this year on Heywood-Wakefield theatre chairs ONLY.

¶ We have advanced a considerable distance toward the knowledge we some day shall have concerning artificial illumination. We have a very competent science of electric light control, and there is at least the beginnings of an illumination art. And all this probably promises more for the popular theatre than for any other institution. For one thing, there is a very definite quality of theatricalism in the play of light itself. Its assumption of varied forms and colors fascinates with its suprises and movement. When combined with other art forms, such as Music and Drama, mobile colored light —as to some extent we have already found—can interpret and reinforce those others emotionally. Valuable as such application of light certainly is, the use of illumination that has the broadest field and most general appeal (excepting, of course, its use as a mere means of dispelling darkness) is probably that for decorative purposes. Here again, illumination is a thing of the theatre, where its mechanisms, its emotional stimulation and its occasional spectacularity are most in place. But it is precisely in the field of decoration that we have concerned ourselves least. Why? Perhaps because until only recently—and the change is but little even now! —we have thought of decoration as a process in which we sought merely to conceal structural skeletons with something as much unlike them as possible—as though hiding a dark shame behind a blush. The idea is still too new, apparently, that decoration can be dynamic, current instead of static, continually alive instead of soon dead. But there are many who believe that we shall embrace the new idea generally before relatively very long, and as in most other activities, that time will be hastened by technical advances, which always demand application as soon after their development as possible. The significance in this connection of the increase in flexibility of light control claimed for the Cutler-Hammer system (Combining Dimmer Units for Increased Flexibility), lighting technicians—and possibly time—must tell. The engineer who discusses it, R. B. Hunter, participated in its development, and he regards it as a distinct advance in the control of mobile light necessary for its application aesthetically. It is, of course, merely an incident that the system is described in an installation that had nothing to do with the theatre. It would serve in the theatre the same purpose and operate in essentially the same way.

¶ The opportunity to give a thought to motion picture screens was warmly welcomed (Selection and Maintenance of Screens). Some time ago we asked an engineer who had had much experience in the manufacture of screens, to write an article on this very subject, but his attitude ostensibly was that with projecion apparatus highly proficient, the screen wasn't worth discussing to the length of an article. That was before sound, however, and perhaps today even his idea of the screen's importance in the theatre's economy has changed. Considerable experience in the manufacture of screens is also the possession of the engineer who discusses the subject in this issue, and in addition, Francis M. Falge is an illuminating engineer (why the profession refuses to refer to itself as illumination engineers, we don't know) who has worked in various divisions of the motion picture theatre. Following graduation from the U. S. Naval Academy in 1924, he was associated with Westinghouse and the National Lamp Works (Nela Park), joining the technical staff of Paramount Publix in 1928, as lighting specialist. He also taught illumination technics in the Publix Theatre Managers Training School. He is now on the engineering staff of the Beaded Screen Corporation, in New York. We recognize, of course, that some of Mr. Falge's views on screen selection are based on tests which by no means have been accepted as practicable. Any debatable points thus arising do not destroy, however, the general authority of his advice. The data on screen selection is the same offered by Mr. Falge in a paper read before the S. M. P. E., at its Los Angeles convention in May.

¶ The bit of scolding that Irving H. Bowman gives us, we believe is worth-while. Not necessarily because of the specific creations of this age that he would have us adopt at once, but because of the general thought behind his proposals. For example (to pick on other fields, for a change), air conditioning machinery is today entirely capable of giving us perfect control over perhaps the most important element of our daily environment—the condition of the medium in which we human beings live. Air conditioning machinery is probably already as efficient as the automobile, and relatively no more expensive. Yet many millions are spent for imposing, costly skyscraper office buildings, without facilities for the complete control over air conditions being installed. Hospitals are still going up with the same deficiency—even schools! Is this not neglecting to take advantage of our own progress? And that, as we see it, is really what Mr. Bowman means in Modern Theatre Construction. Mr. Bowman, of course, is an out-and-out Modernist. The Chicago architectural firm, Bowman Brothers, Inc., of which he is a member, designed the world's first all-metal skyscraper apartment building, recently erected in Chicago.

The department Modern Projection in this issue continues its series, The Prevention of Interfering Noises and What the Manager Should Know About Sound. P. T. Sheridan, author of the former, is a member of the engineering staff of Electrical Research Products (Western Electric). His third and final article will appear in the August 29th issue, as will a fifth article in the other series. Another Western Electric engineer also contributes to this issue's projection department, H. E. McFarland telling us about sound affairs in Malaysia, where he has been stationed for some time (A Strange New Voice in Old Malaysia). We are glad he remembered to include those asides on what a sound engineer sees over there after office hours—hoping no reader is overly shocked by the picture he also sent of the chap with the pin-cushion back!

¶ Leo T. Parker, who contributes in Law Bearing on Daily Theatre Affairs, another article in a regular series on legal matters as they pertain to theatre operation, is a Cincinnati attorney.

The other day a letter came to us from Walter E. Green, president of the National Theatre Supply Company, pointing to a slight commonly visited on the less spectacular branches of any field of human endeavor. Recognizing the justice in Mr. Greene's observations, we asked and were granted the privilege of using part of his letter

PROGRESS AND THE SUPPLY DEALER

Often, while listening to glowing tributes paid at some trade gathering to the wonderful progress made by the exhibiting and producing branches of the motion picture industry, I feel inclined to wonder if the part which the supply dealer has played in this development has ever been truly appreciated. Please understand that it is far from my purpose to undervalue the showmanship and business abilities of those who developed the humble store show into the luxurious palace of amusement of the present day, or to belittle the producers, who, commencing with short, extemporaneous comedies and slapstick riots (whose appeal lay in the mere fact that they were pictures which actually moved), have put into imperishable form the gifts of great actors, both audibly and visibly, and scenes from literatutre and history, which could never have been adequately presented upon the "legitimate" stage. But as I have glanced over the lists of a thousand and more items supplied by my own and other supply companies to both exhibitors and producers, I have often wondered just how far the development of theatre and studio would have reached, at the present time, had those articles of equipment not been forthcoming as the need for them arose.

The old studios up at Fort Lee are reminders of the fact that until high efficiency lighting equipment had been developed, the producer was obliged to wait upon the pleasure of the sun before his cameramen could go into action. And there was little incentive to get into the negative any more than the early projecting equipment and methods could bring out upon the screen and you know how much was to be desired in the rendition of what was produced through the projector lens.

As projectors, lenses, screens, and lighting methods improved, the exhibitor was enabled to give a better performance. The producer was encouraged to better his studio methods, the laboratory to improve developing and printing procedure, and the manufacturers of raw stock to develop formulas which would have been an absolute waste of effort in former days. And in this progress all along the line, for which equipment manufacturers should of course be given full credit, it was the supply dealer who occupied an honored place in the important process of distribution.

Without the supply house to gather innumerable items together, to solicit business and demonstrate new inventions and improvements, and to act as the local distributing point and warehouse from which stock might be drawn as required, few manufacturers, despite the merits of their products, would have made headway with the rapidity which changing conditions demanded.

To the exhibitor, the supply dealer has always been of even greater service. Instead of being obliged to purchase one item from one source and another from a totally different source, the exhibitor was enabled to give his dealer a blanket order for everything, barring the actual building, and then if not satisfied with the equipment furnished, adjustments became easily and readily possible.

But the greatest value of the dealer came, in my estimation, in alert and constructive service. No exhibitor, however far-sighted, could have been able to operate as efficiently as he does if there had not been a dealer who knew just what items to carry on his shelves for immediate delivery. Moreover, he established service departments to care for sudden emergencies, and it is to the dealer's credit that he is often the live reason why the performance may proceed without interruption.

I believe that as time passes, it will be realized more and more that the supply dealer has really been less a middleman than a skilled technical adviser. And as such, he has done his part, too—a difficult and important part—in making motion picture entertainment what it is today.—WALTER E. GREEN.

The Warner Theatre in Morgantown

Upper view: Section of the lobby, with walls painted in a simple but colorful modernistic pattern, illuminating fixtures of similar motif, and a terrazzo floor.

Lower view: Front elevation, showing the entrance with the box office in a shallow initial vestibule. Construction is in vitrified brick with stone trimmings.

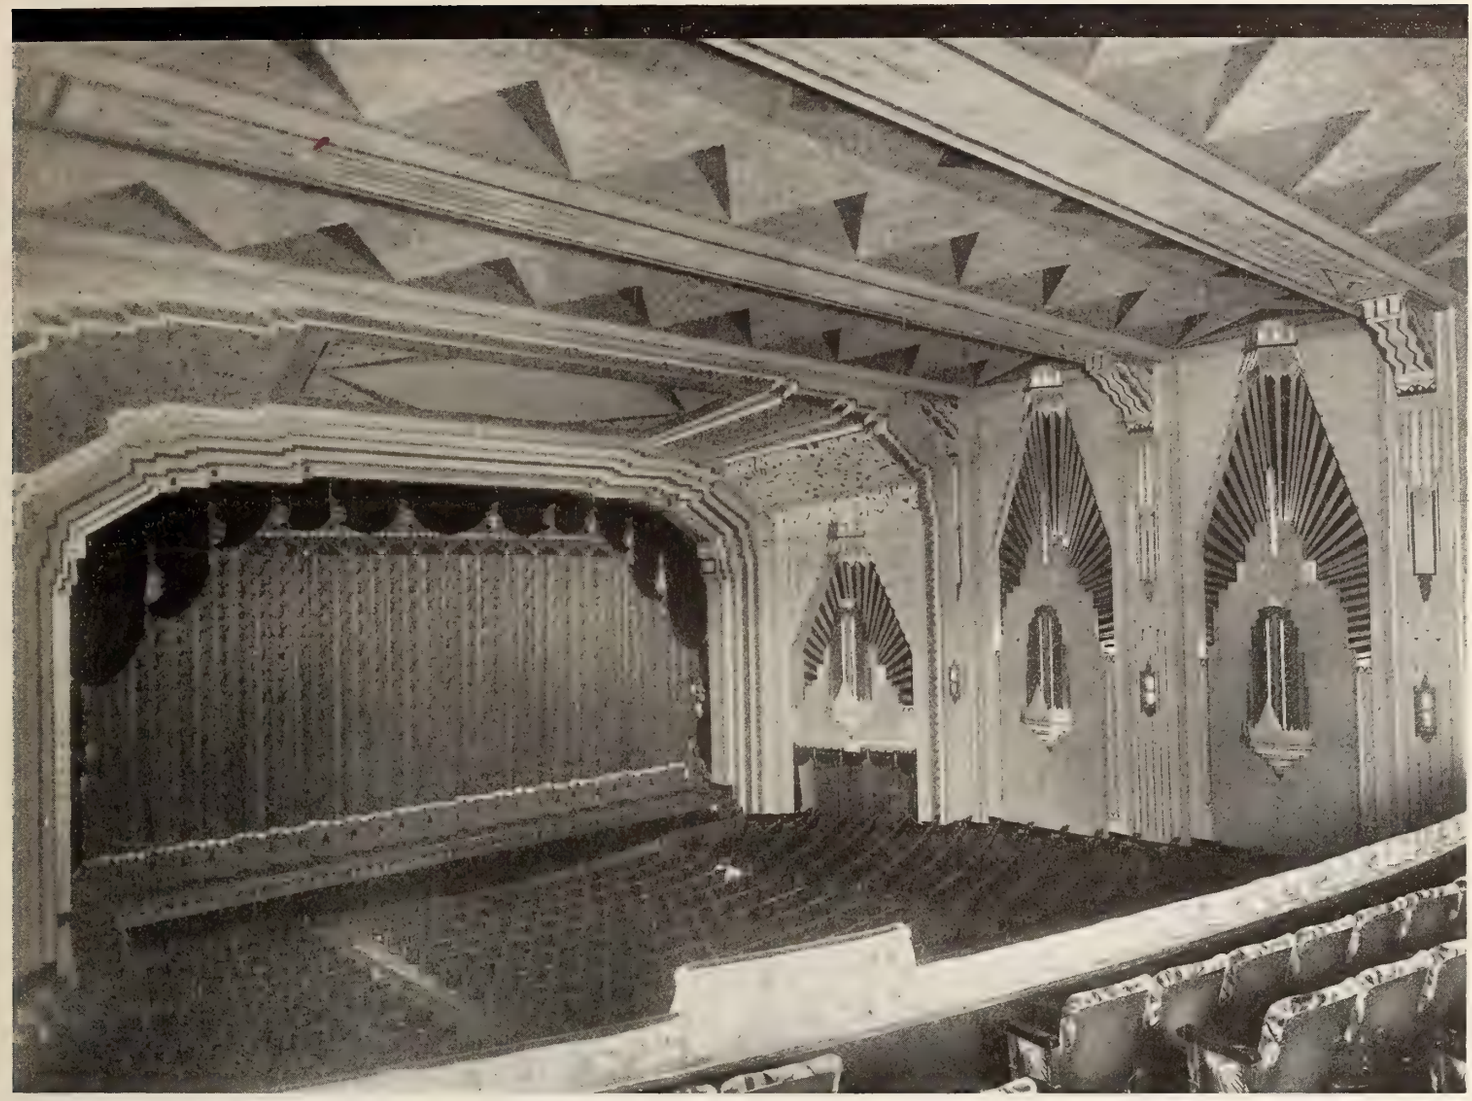
In which John Eberson, for years an outstanding exponent of the period atmospheric style of theatre architecture, strikes out along modern lines of his own —entirely non-atmospheric

NEW THEATRES are not only presenting indications that this is definitely a period of transition in motion picture theatre architecture. They are more and more crystallizing architectural thought in a direction which so far points to a style that while probably distinctive enough from similar motifs as applied to other types of buildings, will essentially rest upon modern aesthetic principles.

The new Warner theatre in Morgantown, W. Va., is a case in point. Designed by John Eberson, creator of scores of motion picture theatres, each one of which has been another exhibit of his faith in the efficacy of the period "atmospheric" manner for screen theatre purposes, the Warner in Morgantown yet has an auditorium devoid of simulated sky and stars, while throughout the building the basic pattern is at least more modern than otherwise. Of it the architect himself has said:

"The decorative scheme of the theatre is modern, but devoid of the bizarre, German or French overdone modernistic feeling."

The Warner in Morgantown is built on a lot fronting 87 feet on the main business street of that small city, and it extends back 172 feet to a private alley. A public alley runs along one side.



Besides the theatre, and the latter's auxiliary sections, the building contains three stores. The front elevation is of vitrified brick, with stone trimmings. The sign is vertical, triangular in shape, with each outer facet bearing the name of the theatre. It extends considerable distance above the cornice of the facade. The marquee is of metal and large enough for prominence without being too disproportionate. While the structure is now only one and a half stories high, it has been constructed to carry two additional stories when this area is needed, and the new portion can be built on without interruption of business.

THE VESTIBULE is 29 feet wide and has an island box office with two windows. It is floored with counter-sunk perforated rubber mats. Inside is a lobby, treated simply in modern lines and illuminating fixtures, and with a terrazzo floor of brass-strip pattern.

The floor plan is such that the lounge and retiring rooms are on the main level and directly accessible from the foyer. The mezzanine floor is also easily accessible from the foyer, as may be realized in considering the fact that the highest seat on the second level of the auditorium is only 20 feet above the stage floor level.

The service rooms, such as the manager's office, ushers' rooms, check room, etc., are also located on the main level, making for convenience in operation as well as economy of construction.

The auditorium decorative treatment relies principally on painted stencil effects and indirect illumination, but the wall surfaces are broken up at intervals by panels and niches. Both panels and niches are lined with acoustic silk and velours and are indirectly lighted on a three-color scheme. The general color scheme is composed of red, orchid, heliotrope and black —metallic effects have been deliberately avoided. There are 1,300 seats, 870 on the main floor, and 430 in a mezzanine-balcony.

The proscenium arch is 54 feet wide and 29 feet high. Velour and damask draperies are used here as well as at all arches, and these materials also form the valances in both the foyer and auditorium. Stage and house lighting is remotely controlled, as is also the curtain apparatus. Equipment includes an air conditioning system in conjunction with both heating and refrigeration.

THERE IS probably more of significance in a theatre of this type than a mere recital of its architectural features, appointments and facilities discloses. And this aside from the light it throws on an apparent endeavor of designers to arrive at a modern aesthetic attitude that yet is hospitable to a certain theatricalism, a spirit of fantasy.

It is a timely technique intended to provide the theatre that is necessarily smaller with facilities as good as the most pretentious house possesses for the processes of purveying screen entertainment, and with many of the latter's facilities for comfort and convenience. Interesting in this connection is the unconventional balcony arrangement of the Warner in Morgantown, which meets a local problem directly without recourse to accepted patterns, and thus contributes to theatre design in general an idea that is doubtless adaptable in many instances in these days when more and more smaller cities are becoming likely sites for fine theatres which necessarily will have to be of very limited cost.

COMBINING DIMMER UNITS FOR INCREASED FLEXIBILITY

An important move in the very direction that theatre illumination is most determinedly taking —the use of light aesthetically —is represented in this system here discussed by a research electrical engineer who aided in development of the method

By R. B. HUNTER

WHILE the science of electrical illumination for both aesthetic and utilitarian purposes has progressed rapidly in the last two decades, progress in means for controlling this illumination, especially for aesthetic purposes, has not gone forward at an equal rate. The reason for this undoubtedly lies in the fact that illumination control must be adapted to a great variety of installations, and that no one system of control will successfully meet the needs of all installations.

An illumination control system must, for example, be adaptable to flood lighting of buildings, to the lighting of theatres, churches, lodges, ballrooms and dining rooms, and to the illumination of purely aesthetic displays, such as fountains, formal gardens, lagoons, etc. Since illumination is now and undoubtedly will be in the future, almost wholly effected by electricity, electrical control means must be used, and control engineers have for the past several years been studying the problem with a view to devising means sufficiently flexible to be adaptable to all of these types of illumination.

This kind of experimentation has borne fruit in the perfection of illumination control units which may be combined in various ways to meet these requirements. An assembly of these units was recently made by Cutler-Hammer, Inc., for the control of the illumination of the formal gardens on the Longwood Farms Estate of Pierre DuPont, near Wilmington, Del., the specifications for which were, broadly, that an unlimited number of combinations of intensities of the various lighting units should be obtainable, together with means for shifting gradually from one combination to any other combination, the blending to be at all times harmonious and under control of the artist responsible for the illumination effects. Such a specification obviously covers by far the greater percentage of illumination control installations, whether for a garden, theatre, church or other modern installation.

This control system provides an individual motor-driven dimmer for the control of intensity of every illuminating circuit, with a wide range of speed for each dimmer, together with means for electrically synchronizing any or all of these dimmers when necessary, regardless of the rate of illumination change. For example, in the DuPont Gardens installation there are 70 motor-driven dimmers, all of which may be set to dim at a rate varying from two seconds (full-bright to black-out) to 60 seconds (full-bright to black-out). This speed range can readily be extended without additional apparatus to get a slow speed of as long as 20 minutes at a uniform rate. Furthermore, any number of the dimmers may operate at the highest speed, while the others are running at various slower speeds, and all of the dimmers which are set to run at the same speed will be in absolute synchronism at all times. Synchronization is obtained by means of an electrically energized escapement, the construction being such that the dimmer moves only when the escapement is released. The intensity change occurring each time the escapement operates is so small as to be unobservable, thus insuring flickerless dimming regardless of the rate of illumination change. Variations in motor speed can not affect rate of dimming. This is a very important feature of the design, since without it a slight variation in speeds of the individual dimmer motors would, at slow dimming speeds, result in very considerable unbalance of illumination effects.

There are no long master shafts, but each drive is wholly self-contained. Any type of motor may be used—direct current, single phase or squirrel cage, according to the requirements of the installation. By using a slow speed motor, practically noiseless operation may be obtained. The entire mechanism for transmitting power from motor to dimmer is immersed in oil. An extensive operating test on all the parts has been made so that the life of every part is equal to many years of operation under the most severe service conditions. In view of the importance of continuity of operation, especially in theatrical installations, very great care has been taken to insure easy and rapid replacement of every unit. One of the accompanying illustrations shows a front view of part of the motor-driven bank for the DuPont Gardens installation, while another shows a rear view. Either dimmer or drive may be removed in a few moments, the only tool required being a screwdriver.

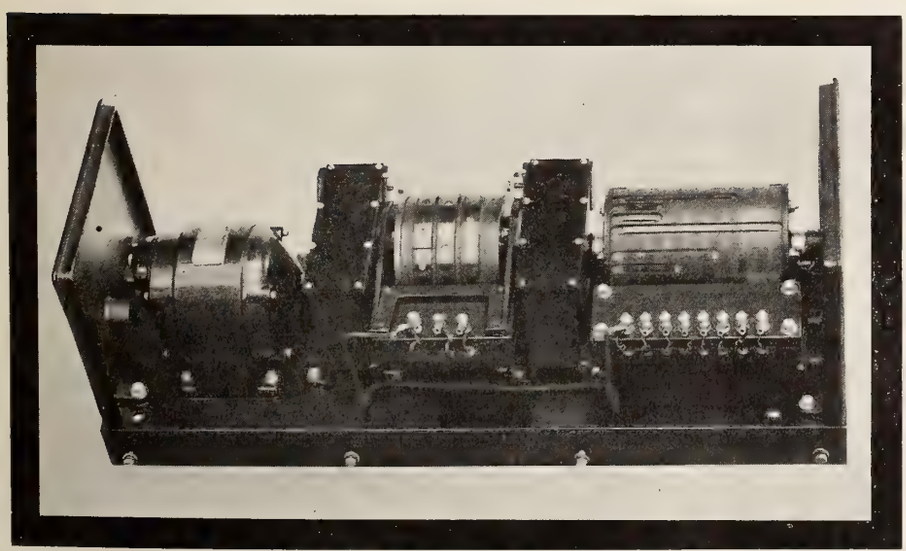
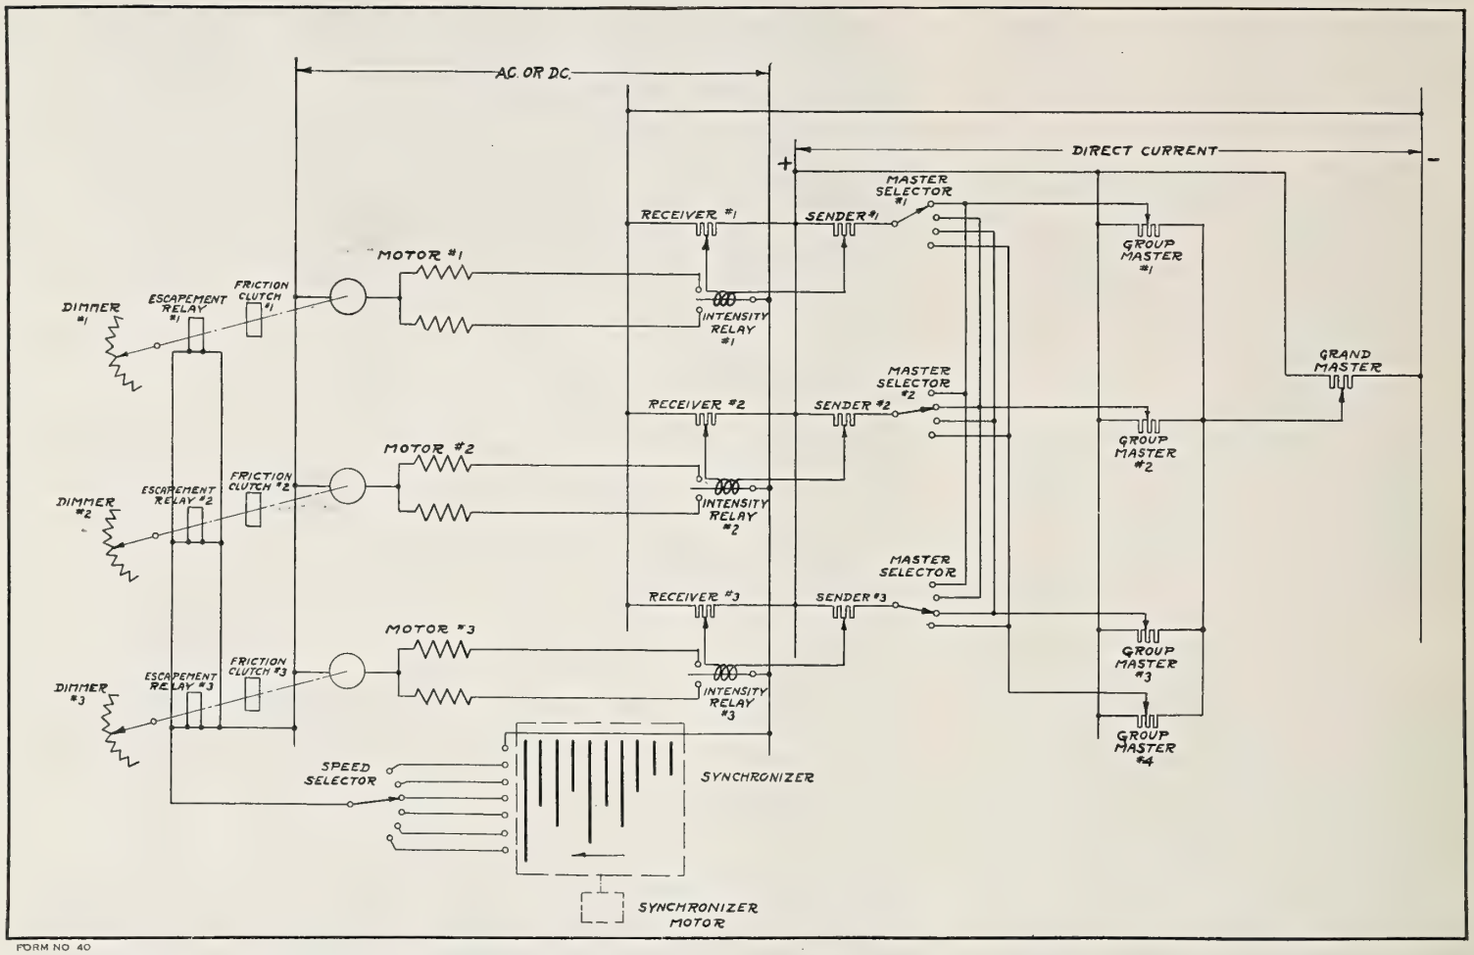
THE SUCCESSFUL development of a wide-speed-range, synchronized motor drive for dimmers is, however, only one part of the problem. Equally important is the development of a control system which permits rapid selection of speed ranges and intensity limits for each circuit or group of circuits. The illumination control system under discussion provides a remote control for each circuit whereby setting of a minature control lever predetermines immediately the illumination effect to be secured in the circuit controlled by that lever. Each lever controls the same circuit at all times, and a glance at this lever indicates the illumination effect obtaining in that circuit. A speed control lever permits the controlling artist to predetermine instantly the rate at which the predetermined illumination intensity is to be put into effect. One of these speed control levers may be provided for every circuit if desired, or the speed changes may be controlled in groups according to requirements. By operation of the speed control lever, the operator may select any rate of change varying from two seconds to 300 seconds (full-bright to black-out), or even longer if conditions should require. Easily read scales indicate relative intensities and speeds, and a cue-sheet may be used. Only one wire is required for each circuit between control board and dimmer bank, and an additional wire is required for speed control of each group. All of these wires are supplied with low voltage so that even for a large installation the amount of wiring is a relatively minor item.



The synchronizer for the motor-driven dimmers. This apparatus controls the escapement relays and the speed of the dimmer. Adjustable brushes are employed to assure sparkless operation. The synchronizer, encased during operation, is shown with covers removed.

By a system of electrical interlocks, any desired arrangement of master control may be placed in effect. For example, all of the blue circuits may be placed under one master control, and all of the red circuits under another master control, etc., so that all of the circuits under control of this master follow movement of the master control lever. In addition to color master controls, various other masters may be provided so that control of any of the circuits may be grouped at will. A grand master may also be furnished so that every lamp will follow the operation of one grand master control lever, the rate of dimming being variable between two seconds and three hundred seconds or more.

The various control levers have been designed to afford very compact mounting. Each control lever, whether for speed or intensity control, or master control, occupies a space one inch wide and six inches long, or a total area per circuit of six square inches. This compares with a space



FORM NO 40

DIAGRAM SHOWING SCHEMATICALLY OPERATION OF ENTIRE SYSTEM

The units labeled "Sender," "Master Selector," "Group Master" and "Grand Master," are located on the control board. Assuming that "Group Master" and "Grand Master" are at full potential position, then the potential on any intensity relay is governed by the relative positions of Sender and Receiver, to which the terminals of the relay are connected. When Sender and Receiver are at points of equal potential, no current flows through the intensity relay. When, however, the sender is moved in either direction, the current flows through the intensity relay, thus causing it to close so as to operate the dimmer motor in the bright or the dim direction according to the movement of the Sender lever. Both receiver and dimmer are driven by the dimmer-motor, so that the position of the receiver lever always corresponds to the position of the dimmer lever. Consequently when the sender is moved, the dimmer moves a corresponding amount and then stops. By means of the "Master Selector" any sender may be connected to any group master. This permits control by groups in any desired combination. If the sender is moved to full potential position then the group master controls directly the motion of the dimmer. If, however, the sender is at an intermediate point movement of the group, the master does not result in corresponding motion of the dimmer, but the dimmer follows to a point that is a resultant of the setting of the sender and the group master. By this means proportional dimming is obtained. Speed control is obtained as follows: The motor drives the dimmer through a clutch and the dimmer is restrained from motion by a detent. This detent is periodically released by the energization of the escapement relay. The frequency of energization of the escapement relay is controlled by the speed selector through a revolving drum, as shown. The synchronizer is preferably driven by a synchronous motor with adjustable brushes to obtain sparkless operation, using alternating current on the escapement relay. Only one speed selector is shown, but additional speed selectors may be provided up to one for each circuit if desired.

of 4x21 inches per circuit required for the usual dimmer control board, not including the contactor board. In other words, this control board requires less than 10% of the space heretofore required. This permits the control board to be installed in such a location that the operator can, without being conspicuous, view the entire illumination effect from the audience's position.

Of course, proportional dimming is always an inherent feature of this control and may be used when required, but "direct-control" dimming is also inherent and will be found of far more value than proportional dimming. With proportional dimming, the rate of intensity change in every circuit is fixed with relation to the rate of change in every other circuit, whereas with "direct control" dimming the rate of change may be chosen at will, and may be different for every circuit—two seconds for one circuit, 20 minutes for other circuits if desired. Obviously, proportional dimming (which provides a change of intensity without a change of hue) is of very limited application. It should be noted that the operation of the board is semi-automatic, in that once the operator sets the intensity and the speed for any given circuit the dimmer continues to move at that speed until the predetermined intensity is reached, then maintains that intensity without any further attention from the operator, although the operator may at any instant take direct control. This permits the utmost flexibility in control in that the operator is free to observe the effects he is obtaining and modify them instantly with the least possible effort. This, in fact, was the primary object of the designing engineers; namely, to relieve the operator of all physical effort and to provide him with the most perfect means for interpreting his artistic conceptions. Since practically every installation will differ in physical characteristics and in control requirements, no effort has been made to standardize on a single rigid control system, but the units described are combined according to requirements.

In order to effect by push-button a complete change in illumination according to a predetermined schedule, two methods are available. One method is the program plate system. This program plate is of the same size as the control board and fits over the top thereof. The program plate may be set in advance by means of movable stops (one for each circuit), so as to predetermine any intensity for any circuit and to effect the change to the new intensity at any desired speed from two seconds to 300

the turnstile idea in a new interpretation

WHEN THE Trans-Lux theatres made their appearance in New York earlier in the year, there was within the industry itself considerable recognition of them as first expressions of a new idea in motion picture exhibition that promised—or threatened, according to the point of view—to create a distinct class of theatre opposed in many ways to the type that the industry had at great cost and effort ultimately built up.

Characterized by extremely small seating capacities, a negligible investment in decoration and luxurious facilities, minimization of personnel and complete elimination of the pretentious trappings attempted in most of today's cinemas, this new class would in many respects reverse the method by which motion picture entertainment had been elevated in the public mind to importance as a dramatic medium. Although the Trans-Lux theatres exhibited only news reels and short subjects, the implication was that the showing of features was only a matter of time.

The idea has been adopted by the new and rapidly growing Hughes-Franklin circuit in its forthcoming Studio theatre in Los Angeles. And the opening will apply it to feature picture exhibition. The Trans-Lux system of projecting from the rear of the screen, the Hughes-Franklin house will not have, but it will employ the former's turnstile method of admitting patrons.

Consideration of the plans for the Studio theatre presents a number of points of comparison and contrast between it and the Trans-Lux theatres, permitting one to evaluate the extent to which the Studio theatre follows the former in the direction of the industry's early storeroom theatres, or continues present motion picture theatre values merely in the intimate form characterizing the "little cinemas" which have been with us for some time.

The Studio has been designed by S. Charles Lee, Los Angeles architect, who created the imposing Los Angeles theatre, which was opened last winter. For it a vacant store 30 feet wide and 100 feet in depth has been adapted.

The entire front will be of structural glass construction, executed in black and gray, with an illuminated glass ceiling and base. This adoption of modernistic motifs and the new materials, is continued throughout the architectural and decorative scheme of the entire house.

Bulletin frames will be of automatic changing type, carrying three different messages, and to be assisted with talking copy that whispers out through a grille in connection with the poster frame. The front street exit doors are also to be utilized as poster frames, giving a maximum display, even though a small frontage.

A portion of the frontage will be used for a soft drink concession that opens into the Foyer, serving both locations.

The box office will have disappearing glass sides to be used only in inclement weather. At other times the girl will be sitting at close contact with the patron at a glass counter. No tickets will be used. The cashier on making change, will operate a turnstile control. Change will be dispensed by a remotely controlled change machine and will appear on the counter automatically from the wall.

After entering through the turnstile, the patron will come into a vestibule and approach a door that opens electrically before it is reached, and remains open until passed, then closes. The foyer thus entered will be lighted with modernistic strips in the ceiling and be rather spacious in feeling. The commercial side will be played up in this foyer by having two candy vending machines designed to fit the architecture of the foyer. A penny weighing machine will also be included in the foyer equipment, while a drinking fountain in the foyer will be operated by the new electric-eye principle—when you bend over to drink, the water flows automatically from the faucet, your shadow having accordingly affected a photoelectric cell mechanism.

A chromium-plated handrail marks the stairs to a lounge and rest room on the second floor. Here will be an ultra-modernistic little room with candy, gum and cigarette dispensing machines, and also an automatic photographing machine.

The auditorium, with a capacity of 300, will have only two aisles. The floor will be bowl-shaped. Lighting will come from fixtures flush with the walls and ceiling surfaces. A system for refrigerated air will be located in the basement, under the sidewalk. It will be completely automatic in operation, and a glass panel in the sidewalk will give the public a chance to view the machinery as a novel exploitation stunt.

Embedded in the curb, in chromium plated letters, will be the words: "Parking Just Isn't Allowed."

The Studio's 300 seats will be entirely of the loge type. Because of the narrowness of the house, they will be located directly in front of the screen. Spacing from back to back will be 36 inches, instead of the usual 32 or 34.

There will be no ushers. In their place there will be a hostess. According to Harold B. Franklin, who is in direct charge of theatre operations for the circuit (Howard Hughes' first interests being those of motion picture production), the formal, military idea in theatre service will be entirely dispensed with. The hostess will never obtrude her services, but only volunteer them when she feels they are wanted.

Extension of the Studio plan and policy is already promised by the Hughes-Franklin circuit. One in Dallas, Tex., is promised as a forerunner of others there and elsewhere. If the public likes the type, it will be taken to the neighborhoods.

MODERN THEATRE CONSTRUCTION

an architect envisions today's advantages

By IRVING H. BOWMAN

A suggested foyer treatment in a theatre of all-metal construction, utilizing harmonizing furnishings of metal framework and modern design and upholstery.

TO QUOTE Edward Bernard Kinsila, architect and well known theatre specialist, in his book, "Modern Theatre Construction"—"The chief qualification demanded of them [theatre architects] by equally inefficient theatre managers or owners, is the ability to construct theatres for a maximum audience at a minimum outlay, providing just enough comfort to assure public toleration. Such considerations as ample seating space, accessible toilets, sufficient coat hanging accommodation, all of which are most necessary comforts, are stinted or sacrificed to satisfy managerial demands for more seats." And later in the same book he says, "To the mind of the average theatre owner the idea of promoting dramatic art never enters." The truth of all these statements is plain enough. It remains for those who can see these faults to do everything in their power to correct them.

Certain motion picture circuits are spending today millions of dollars on ornamentations of cast plaster, gold-leafed to imitate the hand-wrought work from which they were copied or adapted, and to pay for this gaudy extravagance they crowd seats to 19-inch widths, and the rows to 32 inches back to back. The very minimums required by law! They disregard the discomfort of the patron caused by the necessity of rising to allow another to pass by, and also the discomfort of a person sitting in a 19-inch wide seat between two obese neighbors—relying entirely upon the attraction of the picture or stage production to overcome these drawbacks.

Today the theatregoer is more intelligent. A new generation is demanding more. This new generation is accustomed to getting a great deal for a dollar. Most moderns can own an automobile, a radio, a telephone, electrical home appliances of every kind. In brief, it is an age that is gradually leaving the "muscle class" and arriving at a higher mental plane. They know how much a dollar is worth and demand more than their fathers did for their money.

Opera chairs of metal-framework, shortened back and non-soiling upholstering suggested as modern creations capable of adaptation to the theatre for increased comfort at low cost. Note the shortened backs.

WE ARCHITECTS, and you theatre owners and managers, have a great deal of responsibility upon our shoulders. Ours is the position of the patriarch; we have experience and wisdom. The public looks to us for specialized intelligence in the building of their theatres. In the theatre the patron has finished his day's work and is recreating himself. He has leisure, he is impressionable; his impressions influence his nature and taste. We have a great deal of power in our hands. We can improve public taste if we will; we can advance dramatic art if we will; give comfort that relaxes physically, forms and colors that relax mentally, both while watching the performance and while waiting in the lounges and foyers. We should improve the toilet facilities both as to sanitation and capacity and availability, make patrons' lives safer from fire, give them the advantage of the additional space gained by the use of thinner metal-insulated walls, making the seats wider.

By making seat backs lower, we can gain space between rows, due to the pitch of the backs. We can construct seat standards of wrought metal just as cheaply as the cast iron ones we are using so widely today, simply by taking advantage of mass production methods in fabricating them. We can eliminate the use of screws in the outside back construction—they are unnecessary and frequently tear the clothing when not properly tightened. We can use fabrics of such nature that they resist accumulation of dust and dirt, and for the upholstering covers, such as fabricoids, etc., avoid the use of welts.

Or we can ignore all these improvements and stumble along in the same old way until the comfort-loving new generation forsakes our theatres for television entertainments. The legitimate stage has lost business to the cinema, because it made no changes to stop it, and by the same token the cinema may lose to other entertainers if it does not keep up-to-date.

This century is so developed industrially that unheard of economies are being ef-

THE NEW FOX THEATRE IN POMONA, CAL.

Decorative treatment of the right wall of the auditorium, done in silver panels against ashes-of-roses background.

THE PROBLEM of providing a medium-sized theatre in a small city without sacrificing the appeal such a public building should have to civic pride, is frequently met by resorting to architectural and decorative superficialities that are almost sure to lose whatever effectiveness they originally have soon after the theatre ceases to be strictly new. The Fox West Coast circuit's new Fox theatre in Pomona, Cal., represents an attempt to attack this small city theatre problem somewhat more permanently.

Throughout this structure of modern lines, little decorative treatment not proceeding directly from the architecture, has been applied. Surfaces are warmly covered, here and there a slight embellishment is added to arrest the eye, furnishings are introduced to give an air of hospitality. But in the necessary avoidance of costliness, the architects, Balch & Stanbery, of Los Angeles, did not attempt an inferior show of splendor, but chose to let the architecture itself be essentially the building's own adornment.

Both exterior and interior are conceived in much the same spirit. The building converges at a street intersection, and there turns upward into a tower. With single-story shops along the street, the theatre portion beyond must rise above them, and above the auditorium portion rises even higher that part housing the stage loft. It is in the grouping of these masses that the exterior attains its basic beauty, with only slight ornamentation at cornices to relieve the eye and delineate better the masses themselves.

A DESIGN FOR A MEDIUM-SIZED HOUSE IN A SMALL SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CITY THAT KEEPS MERE DECORATION SECONDARY

View of the exterior at night, showing the illuminated tower with its revolving sign. Entrance is at right.

THE SITE has a frontage of 104 feet, and extends 196 feet to an alley. There are eight stores, two on one side of the theatre vestibule and lobby, one at the corner, and five on the adjoining street. The tower has a height of 81 feet and is surmounted by a 26-foot revolving sign bearing the name of the theatre. The structure is of reinforced concrete and steel, with the concrete constituting its facing.

At the street intersection, where the building rises into the tower, is a second story. This space is used for rest rooms and offices.

Next to the corner store is the entrance to the theatre. The vestibule, which is 34 feet wide, has an acid-stained floor, black marble base and tile wainscot. Here—and elsewhere throughout the building—white metal is used for minor embellishment over the doors and windows, contrasting deeply with black marble trim around the doors and store display windows.

From the vestibule five sets of double doors open into an entry-way, where similar doors open into the lobby. In the latter the use of mirrors adds spaciousness, while having both utility and decorative value. At the right of the lobby is the main staircase, measuring 15 feet at the base, which leads to the mezzanine balcony and promenade, and so to the auditorium balcony. At either side of the lobby is a black tile fountain, while added decorative features are chairs and divans, modernistic carpets and bits of pottery.

Entrance to the main floor of the auditorium is through another entry-way—so interposed so as to facilitate control of atmospheric conditions as well as to eliminate street sounds. Four double doors of heavy wood construction lead to the auditorium.

With the walls themselves (rather than a false wall of decorative character) forming the background, embellishment is worked out through a color scheme of delicate red shades, varying from pink in the wall lights to a dull orange tone in the upholstery. The walls themselves are done in a tint of ashes of roses, contrasting with which is paneling in silver. The organ screen is composed of delicate grille work executed in silver leaf, and this same pattern and treatment is continued at the proscenium arch.

At the dome of the auditorium, silver alternates with a rose tint. Though thus dominated by warm, soft rose shades, the color scheme admits a touch of green here and there at some of wall panels. Interior decoration is by the Robert E. Power Studios of Los Angeles.

The 1,738 chairs are of both opera and loge type. On the main floor are 858 opera chairs and 214 loge chairs. The remaining 666 chairs in the balcony are also of both types. The upholstery is of a figured material in dull orange shot with blue and tan.

Suspended from the dome are two large chandeliers, which are approximately six feet across and 12 feet in length. They contain 120 orange, blue and amber lights. Two smaller chandeliers of similar type are suspended above the balcony. There are also wall fixtures of rectangular shape, while beneath the balcony are modernistic fixtures which give a soft yellow light.

THE PROSCENIUM arch is 45 feet wide, while the stage is 20 feet deep. Footlights are in red, blue and green exclusively, and there are 18 spots of 1,000 watts each stationed along the balcony rail.

The stage has two primary curtains. The first, down only when the performance is not actually in progress, is of golden velvet, with an overlay of gold, green and red and trimmed with a fringe. The second, disclosed at the beginning of each phase of the program, is of brown velvet with an overlay design of gold tones, in the center of which are two figures, one representing Music, the other Drama. Curtains and rigging are by the Armstrong Studios of Los Angeles.

The screen, which is by Walker-American, is large enough for magnascopic images, measuring 28x50 feet.

Projection and sound are by two Simplex projectors and Western Electric.

LAW BEARING ON DAILY THEATRE AFFAIRS

as given in late higher court decisions

By LEO T. PARKER

ONE VERY IMPORTANT point of the law is that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron, unless the patron proves by convincing testimony that the theatre owner or his authorized employe negligently caused the injury.

For example, in the late and leading case of Tenbrink vs. F. W. (153 Atl. 245), a patron sued a proprietor for damages resulting from an injury when the former slipped and fell on an oiled floor. However, since the patron failed to introduce evidence showing that the employes were negligent in failing to properly apply the oil, the court held the injured patron not entitled to a recovery, and said:

"It was not negligence to oil the floor. It would have been essential to have proven that the oiling was improperly done and there was no offer of proof in this respect."

On the other hand, while it is well established law that a theatre patron is entitled to damages for an injury sustained as a result of negligence on the part of the theatre owner or his employes, the theatre owner is not liable for an injury unless his negligence is the proximate cause of the accident.

For illustration, in the case of Circle Theatre vs. Grant (32 S. W. [2d] 676), a patron sued a theatre owner for an injury. The patron testified that she attended the show and took her seat somewhere near the center of the building and that during the performance some one yelled "Fire," and that while people were attempting to make their exit from the the building she was knocked down and trampled upon because many people were standing in the aisles during the performance.

The counsel for the injured patron contended that the theatre owner was negligent in permitting large numbers of people to stand in the aisles of the theatre during the performance. However, since it was proved that as she reached the aisle some one behind her, who had been occupying a seat in the same row, tripped her or knocked her down, and that she was trampled upon by other people in their efforts to get out of the building, the higher court held the the theatre owner not liable, and said:

"We are of the opinion that this evidence was not sufficient to support a finding that permitting people to stand in the aisles was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury . . . Plaintiff was not injured because the aisles were obstructed, but because some one behind her, who had been seated, pushed or knocked her down."

What is Interstate Business?

VARIOUS STATES have enacted laws by which corporations from other states, and which transact intrastate business, are prohibited from filing suit against citizens of the state unless certain requirements are fulfilled, such as obtaining a permit to transact business, and file certain papers with the secretary of state. However, it is important to know that state laws of this nature are not applicable with respect to foreign corporations which transact interstate business.

For instance, in the late case of Alexander Film Co. vs. Ligon (36 S. W. [2d] 313), it was shown that a film company, whose principal place of business was located in Colorado, had an agent in Lubbock County, Texas. The agent did not have an office in Texas but merely was there to negotiate contracts with theatre owners for rental of films.

The agent and a theatre owner entered into a written contract which provided for film advertising, and authorized the film company to display catalog films for a period of fifty-two weeks in two picture shows in Lubbock, Texas.

Controversy arose between the theatre operator and the film company and the latter sued to recover $455 based on the above mentioned contract. The theatre operator alleged that the film company was not entitled to file suit because it had not obtained a permit to transact business in Texas, in accordance with a law of the state.

The counsel for the film company argued that, since it is well known that a state has no right, under the Constitution of the United States, to tax interstate business, that the Texas statute was not applicable because business transacted by the agent for the film company was purely interstate business. The counsel for the theatre operator argued that the fact that the film company maintained an agent in Lubbock County, Texas, was sufficient evidence to show that the completion of the contract in question was intrastate business.

It is important to know that the higher court held transactions of this nature to be interstate business, particularly because the agent had no authority except to make the contract and co-operate with the theatre owner. This court said:

"The plaintiff (film company) being a foreign corporation and not having obtained from the proper authorities of the state of Texas a permit to transact its business in this state, was the transaction sued on intrastate or interstate business? . . . It will be observed that while the film company had an agent in Lubbock county, who negotiated the contracts between the parties, it did not have an office for the transaction of its business in this state. Its domicile was in the state of Colorado, where it was incorporated . . . Of course the execution of the contract itself was the transaction of business, but it was not a transaction of business in Texas. It was interstate in its character, and therefore not within the prescription of the statute."

Verbal Contract Changes

THE LAW is well established that ordinarily a written contract cannot be varied by verbal or side agreements. In other words, a written contract stands strictly for itself and the court will not receive testimony of verbal agreements for the purpose of varying the legal obligations of the parties assumed in a written contract.

On the other hand, any written notation in a written contract, or on its margin, may be introduced as evidence to prove the intended meaning of the contracting parties at the time the contract was executed.

For example, in the late case of Horner vs. Esserman (157 S. E. 237), it was shown that a contract was executed by an agent to furnish a theatrical performance for one evening. The contract provided that the date inserted in the contract by the agent should not be binding until approved from the employer's office.

A date was inserted in a margin of the contract at the time the contract was executed. Later considerable discussion arose over whether it was permissible to introduce evidence tending to show why the notation was written on the margin of the contract. It was contended that introduction of testimony of this nature was inadmissible on the rule that testimony cannot be used to vary the terms

THE NORTOWN IN CHICAGO

The Paramount Publix circuit's newest neighborhood theatre in the Western metropolis, presenting an unique "maritime atmospheric" conception

[The following discussion of the Nortown has been prepared for Better Theatres by the architect, J. E. O. Pridmore of Chicago.]

THE MODERN theatre for screen entertainment is perhaps the most complex of all buildings erected today. Besides being planned to be convenient and comfortable, well adapted to its peculiarly exacting uses, and built with pleasing, lasting and sanitary materials, the motion picture theatre of today must satisfy many other requirements. For example, the Nortown theatre, the latest addition to Publix-Balaban & Katz's Chicago group, is also planned and treated for vision, for sound and for air conditioning.

Unusual care must be exercised to provide from every seat a clear vision of the screen, without distortion. With this in view, the Nortown screen is set well back in the sound chamber (the name now given to a converted stage.) The question of clearly distinct sound of sufficient volume makes necessary a special treatment of all wall and ceiling surfaces, and even the seats are subjected to severe tests so that sound may be properly absorbed to avoid reflections and blurring, which was common before acoustical treatment was understood and practiced. In the Nortown a special sound-absorbent material was used on all prominent wall and ceiling surfaces of the auditorium. Again, the architect and engineer have collaborated to study and plan for an agreeable medium of atmosphere in the playhouse. It must be regulated to an even and moderate temperature, to be warm enough in winter and cool in summer, and always in sufficient quantity and freshness so that the tired business man or woman will be able to relax and feel enjoyment instead of a headache. The air medium not only must be of the correct temperature, but its humidity must be watched and regulated because excessive moisture is objectionable.

In the Nortown, besides a ventilating system supplying fresh and tempered air to all parts of the house, there are also separate heating and refrigerating systems which supply automatically the kind and quality of temperature desired, and the air thus furnished is introduced at the ceiling of the auditorium and drawn out through the floor outlets so that there are no drafts and no annoyance from air movements.

SEVERAL YEARS ago I made extensive studies of the Classic and Renaissance theatres. This was the result of a visit to the ancient Greek theatre at Taormine, Sicily (on which occasion, I can now securely recall, I escaped by but three days an earthquake at Messina that took 200,000 lives). The Greek theatre masterpiece was located on the rocky shore of Sicily, and with its magnificent view of the sea and snow-capped Aetna, gave me an inspiration for an open air theatre. It was an idea that I later adapted to a Chicago "legitimate" theatre, the Cort, at Randolph and Dearborn Streets—which, being the first "atmospheric" theatre in this country, was the forerunner of hundreds of others designed on the same principle. For the Nortown I also chose an atmospheric treatment, but wished to depart from the usual form, and as a result finally hit upon a maritime atmospheric design.

The Nortown is designed as though built on a sea coast, and all details of the Spanish Main have been utilized to carry out this impression.

When one enters the lobby the ticket booth confronts him as a ship with port and starboard lights gleaming. Above, on the ceiling, is a Spanish map of the Spanish Main, in the antique style displaying ships, islands, castles, pirates and so on.

Atmosphere assumes an unusual importance in the Nortown, for the complete expression of the maritime decorative motif was paramount in the minds of the architect and designers. The intricate, colorful and ingenious decorating that gives the Nortown its distinctive marine atmosphere was done by craftsmen from the Mediterranean. Carrying out the architect's idea to make the theatre unusual in its decorative treatment, these artists have given to the Nortown a distinguishing scheme of adornment.

The entire interior of the Nortown reflects the marine influence, depicting mermaids, nymphs, seahorses, strange fish and other denizens of the deep. The inner foyer has been decorated to simulate the ceiling of an admiral's vessel of the famous Spanish Armada.

The auditorium is of the full atmospheric type, and the architecture typifies the courtyard of a Spanish Castle. Large mural paintings with maritime effects line the walls between the arcades of a courtyard. The proscenium arch, which is one of the prominent features of the interior, spans the dramatic scene and is suggestive of an ornate 17th Century Spanish bridge, a covered way with arched openings, as customary in those times.

The paintings show scenes of vessels at anchor in a beautiful sunlit harbor. Included in the side wall decorative scheme are lighthouses, with their warning signals flashing intermittently, and imposing Spanish fortresses, while above the stars of a Southern sky twinkle realistically.

NORTOWN THEATRE, CHICAGO. J. E. O. PRIDMORE, ARCHITECT

THE ARCHITECTURAL style is 17th Century Spanish, and all the equipment, hardware, lighting fixtures, drinking fountains, directional signs and even the drapes and carpets, have been specially designed from styles prevailing in this colorful period of Spanish magnificence. There are 2,200 seats on two levels.

The main lobby, which has a spacious balcony along one side and two ends, is exquisitely decorated and furnished in the eleborate style of Spain's greatest glory. The vaulted ceiling has a decorative treatment with nautical effects and forms a framework for a serial display of the signs of the zodiac, which cover the ceiling with their quaint allegorical figures done in blue, white and gold on a rich stone-colored background.

The men's smoking rooms, the women's boudoir and the main lounge are striking examples of decoration in which the artist has achieved an ultra-modern feeling, especially in the women's cosmetic room is this style carried out.

In the smoking room a floor of naturistic rubber tile in black and tan colors is offset by a mariner's compass in red, green and blue as a center piece. Convenient and spacious comfort rooms, telephone booths and a hospital and nursery complete the secondary facilities. Furniture in the Nortown is by Ketcham & Rothschild of Chicago.

The architecture of the exterior of the Nortown is also 17th Century Spanish, and even the great sign and the marquee have been carried out in the same style. A belfry tops the main theatre over the entrance. The materials of the exterior are highly glazed terra cotta, the panels being in face brick in a color to harmonize.

The Nortown is located in an outlying section of Chicago.

SELECTION AND MAINTENANCE OF SCREENS

calling attention to costs frequently overlooked

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

IF ONE WERE to enter a theatre, hunt up the owner or manager and tell him, "My good man, I fear that your screen may be losing you, in current costs alone, as much as $2,300 a year," one would probably receive in reply only that fearful, knowing expression that comes over people's faces when they abruptly find themselves confronting a lunatic.

Yet the intruder might not be a lunatic at all—that is, not necessarily. In fact, he could be an illumination technician who is quite an expert on screens—and a sane one, too.

The above figure is startling, I know, but it is often a reality, and does not even include carbon and maintenance costs due to higher amperage. The loss at the box office caused by a dull or streaked screen is a sizeable one. Unfortunately, it is not easily evaluated.

A good screen surface costs so little that its importance is often not recognized. However, the proper screen, properly cared for, not only makes money, but saves it for the exhibitor. A thought given to the huge expenditures, which go into the making of a small piece of film should remind us of the debt we owe. The screen may ruin the best photographed picture, or it can enhance it greatly. So important is the screen, both from the standpoint of economy of operation and returns at the box office, that the objective of every exhibitor should be to keep his screen as nearly like new as possible at all times. And, of course, his screen should fit his theatre.

How is this best accomplished? First, be sure that you have the proper type of screen for your house. Second, use the proper size of screen. Third, prevent dirt from accumulating on the surface of the screen. Fourth, replace the screen when it reaches the point where the current lost, because of its poor projection surface, costs more than a new screen.

Practical Limitations for Size of Screens

High Intensity	No limitations.

Mr. Falge's table of screen limitations according to light source.

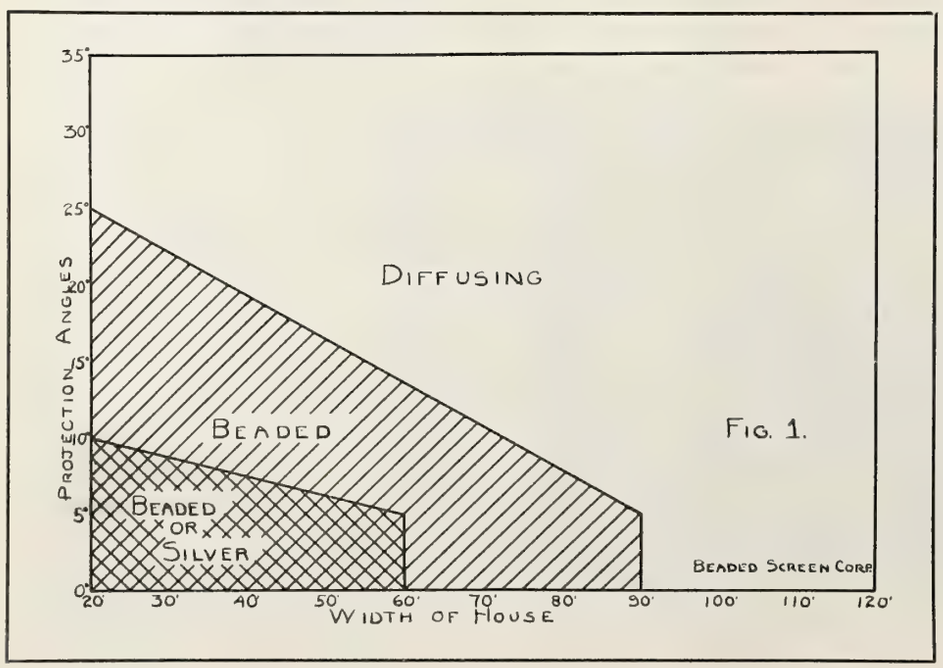

FIG. 1.

Chart demonstrating the author's theory of proper screen selection.

There are three types of screens—diffusive or mat (flat white), directive (beaded) and reflective or metallic (silver).

Diffusive screens direct light evenly in all directions. Their white surfaces are good for color picture projection, and a good white screen is very efficient. They are best for wide theatres or theatres with steep projection angles.

The directive, or beaded screen, redirects light into a beam back on the source of light. They are excellent for color pictures, provide a good balcony and rear row picture, and result in decided economies for theatres suited to them. They are best for theatres not too wide, and with projection angles not exceeding 20 degrees.

The reflective screens redirect light into a beam and at the opposite angle at which it enters, in similar manner to a mirror. They are not really as efficient as other types, particularly for color pictures. They are best for narrow houses with low projection angles.

The accompanying chart is a graphic method of quickly selecting the type of screen best suited, on the above basis, to a particular theatre.

IN EACH of these types, of course, the screen with the highest reflective value, the best surface, and with the guarantee of a reputable manufacturer, should be selected. A quick method of selecting the best of each type, is to place small samples against your present screen. This will also indicate the light lost on your present screen.

The choice of the proper screen size means much to the enjoyment of patrons. In the past this has largely been determined by the policy in vogue at the time,

Two Patrons

. . . Buy Your Carbons

THE modern theatre and its furnishings represent the acme of splendor. The staff is thoroughly trained. Managers carefully select pictures in accord with popular taste. This lavish expenditure to attract patronage. Yet, if the screen is dim or the light unsteady, valuable patronage will be lost . . . . . and two empty seats cost more than your carbons.

Light is the most important factor in the operation of a motion picture theatre. That is why National Projector Carbons are preferred by the projectionist. They are dependable. And the manager knows that, with good projection, patrons will return and bring their friends.

National Projector Carbons give the steady, brilliant white light necessary for the quality of projection demanded by theatre-goers today. Their uniform quality is assured by the experienced organization behind them. Two satisfied patrons will buy them.

THE PREVENTION OF INTERFERING NOISES

II.—Noises of Intermittent or Recurrent Nature

By P. T. SHERIDAN

This is the second of a series of three articles in which an eminent sound engineer (the author is a member of the staff of Electrical Research Products) endeavors to give practicable advice to the projectionist on his system noise problems, which have become of such urgent importance since the introduction of noiseless methods of recording. The concluding article will appear in the August 29th issue.

IN THE FIRST article of this series, noises were classified in three groups, and the first of these groups, noises directly transmitted through air from the booth, was discussed. Of the two remaining groups, namely intermittent or recurrent noises and steady noises, the former will be discussed in this article.

The sources of noise of an intermittent or recurrent nature are usually much more difficult to locate than are the causes of steady noises. The very fact that such noises come and go intermittently makes it difficult to know when the cause has been located. Preventative measures are therefore much more effective in dealing with such noises than are remedial measures.

The causes of intermittent noises may be briefly listed as follows:

Batteries (run-down, loose connections).
Fuses (corroded, dirty clip contacts).
Charging Panels (loose connections).
Amplifiers (loose connections, poor tube contacts).
Faders (dirty contacts).
Motor Generators (brushes, commutators).
Motor Generator Filters (loose connections).

As B-batteries (dry type) deteriorate, they tend to become noisy and should therefore be replaced when the voltage drops below the proper figures. This is especially true of the "C", or grid, batteries, which are used in some of the earlier type amplifiers. Spring terminals on these batteries should be kept clean and care taken to make certain that firm contact is maintained with the spring terminals inside the battery boxes.

The tops of storage batteries must be kept clean and dry. They should occasionally be wiped off with a cloth moistened with either a solution of bicarbonate of soda (baking soda) or ammonia. The connections should be kept tight and properly protected from acid fumes by the use of non-oxide grease. It is well to remember that immediately after batteries have been charged, gases will still be forming in the electrolyte. These cause slight variations in the internal resistance of the battery, resulting in noise being introduced through the amplifiers. Batteries should therefore be taken off charge at least 30 minutes before the sound system is needed.

FUSES sometimes become corroded internally, and frequently dirt collects or corrosion occurs at the ends where they fit into the clips. Either of these conditions may result in noise. This is especially true of the battery fuses in the 90-volt photoelectric cell and film amplifier circuits.

Connections and knife-switch contacts should be checked occasionally to reduce the possibility of noise from loose connections and poor contacts. At the time of installation, all connections are made secure. Subsequently, however, vibration may cause these connections to work loose, with the resulting possibility of noise. The switch-blade contacts on the battery charging panel should be kept clean and bright by occasional cleaning with fine sandpaper.

Amplifiers, especially, the first stages following the photo-electric cell or disc pickup, are very sensitive, and inspection of them at periodic intervals of, say, one month is good insurance.

Vacuum tubes should be removed in order to clean the contacts on the ends of the prongs and the spring contacts of the tube sockets. The eraser on an ordinary lead pencil is excellent for this purpose, but care is necessary to insure that none of the rubber particles remain on the contacts after cleaning. (Do not use a file or sandpaper for this purpose.) The spring pressure should be noted when the tube is replaced. Appreciable pressure is necessary to insure good contact, and if this pressure is lacking, the contact springs of the socket should be bent up to increase the pressure. All power should be turned off while work of this nature is done, in order to prevent shocks or damage to the equipment.

Grid leak contacts should be cleaned, and spring contacts should hold the grid leak firmly in place to prevent noise due to poor contacts.

THE PHOTOELECTRIC cell amplifier is suspended in a cradle by coiled springs so that it is free to swing without touching the metal amplifier housing. An occasional inspection is advisable to make sure the amplifier is swinging freely and that the springs have not become stretched. Incidentally, it will be noticed that some of these springs also form a part of the wiring of the amplifier circuits.

It is essential that the anode block associated with the photoelectric cell be securely fastened down and that the anode lead from the cell have sufficient slack to prevent the transmission of vibration.

The amplifier wiring should be inspected for signs of loose connections. If they exist, loose connections are quite likely to result in intermittent noises, the causes of which may prove to be exceptionally puzzling. Rheostats, potentiometers and keys should have their contacts cleaned occasionally. The time so spent will be well worth while in preventing noise from these sources.

Fader contacts will give little trouble if they are cleaned occasionally with chemically pure carbon tetrachloride. Ordinary carbon tetrachloride should not be used for this purpose. The chemically pure grade is easily obtainable at any drug store. After cleaning the contacts with tetrachloride, a thin coating of vaseline should be applied and the excess wiped off.

If a motor generator set is used for filament or plate voltage supply, it is advisable to make weekly check inspections of the condition of the brushes and commutator. If it is equipped with a filter, the connecting straps should be checked to make sure they are tight.

Particles of dust or dirt may occasionally lodge in the light gate and cause noise if they move due to machine vibration. Ordinary care in routine cleaning will prevent trouble from this source.

THE MODEL THEATRE

Serves as the Testing Laboratory for All Equipment Offered by Fulco

Every item of equipment necessary to the operation and maintenance of a modern motion picture theatre is submitted to the test of practical operation in the Fulton Model Theatre built and maintained at the headquarters of the E. E. Fulton Co.

Here the theatre owner, the architect and the technical man may observe demonstrations of equipment under actual operating conditions. Thus performance may be checked before final decision is made in the selection of needed apparatus or furnishings.

PROJECTION ACCESSORIES

The complete line of accessories now available for the well appointed projection room numbers many improved devices designed specifically to facilitate the work of the projectionist and contribute to finer results achieved in the presentation of talking pictures.

A check-up on the present equipment and comparison with improved devices now available may reveal the causes responsible for shortcomings present in the projection at your theatre—flaws for which inadequate equipment and not the projectionist are to blame.

One-Contract Plan Assures Satisfaction

Maximum efficiency at minimum cost results are assured every new theatre enterprise or complete renovation job engineered under the Fulton One-Contract Plan.

The One-Contract Plan means that all phases of the enterprise are carefully considered in relation one to another, not by a single specialist but by various experts and engineers, each working independently, yet co-operatively and with full knowledge and understanding of each other's activities.

Under the scrutiny of these engineers, faults of plan or proposed equipment specified in original plans are unerringly spotted and rectified in advance of installation.

Equally important to the completed job is the assurance of proper installation—your guarantee of proper performance from the right equipment.

Thus the One-Contract Plan offers a sure check on lost motion, wasteful purchases and insurance that real economy will prevail from start to completion of the theatre job.

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

POWER SUPPLY SYSTEMS

By A THEATRE SOUND ENGINEER*

This is the fourth of a series of discussions on sound equipment maintenance and modernization, prepared with particular emphasis on the individual theatre manager's need for knowledge that will enable him to judge better the quality of sound, the requirements of his projection department, and relative desirability of the various items of sound and projection supplies and equipment that he may be called upon to purchase. The fifth article will appear in the August 29th issue.

ECONOMIZING in power supplies for sound equipment is an exceptionally timely question at the present moment. There are two reasons for that timeliness. (1) The batteries which were an integral part of the older installations are now—in those theatres which were among the first to be equipped—close to the end of their active life, and now require attention. (2) The newest installations, and those now coming into the market, are using methods of power supply vastly different from those in vogue two years ago.

A broad and comprehensive view of the whole sound power question—one that will take into consideration present and past conditions, and the probable developments of the future—is necessary for the manager who faces a consideration of the power supply problem.

This broad viewpoint can perhaps be gained most easily through a brief consideration of the closely parallel development of radio receivers. The radio, like the sound system, requires A, B, C and H currents. The older radios, with their cumbersome mess of batteries, are now substantially obsolete wherever socket power is available. But the older sound systems will never be thrown aside as readily as radios were—they are too expensive. Many of them will continue to operate with batteries, or with one or another form of battery "eliminator." Many of the newer systems also will be revamped to some extent. All will doubtless continue to give satisfactory service, but the extent to which any given system may be modified depends very largely upon its age. Let us, therefore, review briefly all the stages of modification through which radio passed on its way to its present, comparatively perfected, form. The analogy will be illuminating.

I
The Analogy of Radio

THE EARLIEST receivers—neglecting the crystal type—were one-tube or three-tube affairs. The filaments of the tubes were supplied by a storage battery. The plates were supplied by dry B-batteries. C-batteries were not used, and the speaker was of the "magnetic" type, employing a permanent steel magnet that required no current.

The first step in advance was in the introduction of the one-quarter ampere filament—the 201A type tube, which supplanted the bright-burning, amper-and-a-quarter filament of the 201. This carries us back to about 1923. Five-tube sets became popular at once, since it was then possible to light five tubes from the same battery without running it down in a few hours.

The next step was the B-battery eliminator—a separate box containing a rectifier and a filter circuit. This replaced the older B-batteries and made the "power tube" possible. Potentials up to four and five hundred volts, which would have required an impossible number of B-batteries, presented no difficulties to the makers of B-eliminators. The power tube brought in the C-battery, since a high grid bias was essential to its operation.

With such filaments and the B-eliminator built into the radio as an integral part of it, the socket power set was almost complete. The C-battery, retained at first with such sets, ultimately gave way before an internal wiring arrangement which took the C-bias from the "A" or the "B" supply.

Dynamic speakers, employing electromagnets excited from the storage battery, had not been popular, because they drained the battery too rapidly. With the perfection of socket-power systems, the dynamic speaker field was supplied through a rectifier, and this type of speaker rapidly replaced its magnetic brother, As we shall see later, there is some reason to believe that in sound systems that last step may yet be reversed.

The earlier sound systems were almost completely supplied by battery power. The very latest models are almost entirely socket-supplied. Any of the intermediate steps found useful during the development of radio may prove to represent the final step desirable in any particular sound installation. Before proceeding to a more detailed examination of these, it may be well to inquire why batteries were ever needed, and what advantages they still offer, in spite of all improvements, for theatre operation.

Batteries

The plates, grids, and sometimes the filaments of vacuum tubes used as amplifiers, require supplies of pure direct current. Any ripple in their supply reappears in the speakers as a hum. Theoretically, the battery provides the purest direct current available. Expensive and cumbersome filters, all more or less likely to go wrong and cause trouble, are unnecessary where batteries are used.

The battery was highly objectionable in radio receivers because of the nuisance factor. Dry cells had to be replaced, and storage cells needed charging, watering, and cleaning. The nuisance factor, of course, is of less importance in theatre work, since the projection staff exists and is paid to take care of such things whenever necessary.

Battery Substitutes

From the point of view of good sound, none of the more modern devices can be counted on to do better than batteries. From the point of view of trouble-proof operation, the batteries again have many advantages. They seldom cause much trouble until they become old, and even then they nearly always give ample warning in advance, by failure to take a charge, lowered voltage, and often by noise which, slight at first becomes more and more serious over a period of time. Battery substitutes, however, need less attention than storage batteries. The latter must be charged, watered and cleaned, and though lack of proper attention will not often stop a show, it will shorten the life of the batteries and so add to their cost.

Considerations of immediate economy, however, often favor replacing, rather than eliminating, defective batteries. The battery substitute, in addition to its own cost, imposes on the theatre the charges due to its installation. More or less rewiring is nearly always needed—just how much depending on the layout of any individual projection room.

But considerations of long-run economy nearly always favor the battery substitute. A good rectifier or motor-generator will outlast several sets of lead-plate storage batteries. Either will require far less attention. They are always ready, so they cannot cause a bad show because the projectionist has neglected to place them on charge. They can, however, stop a show altogether if they go wrong—and they are somewhat more likely to go seriously wrong than a battery is—but this can very easily be overemphasized. Good generators, or good rectifiers, should work for years without causing trouble of any kind, and some projectionists believe they have found that the rectifier is, if anything, even more reliable in this respect than the generator.

Using the arc d.c. supply to replace batteries involves no particular danger, since if the arc current stops, the show stops in any case. However, with such a system, loss of arc current also prevents the playing of non-sync records and the use of the manager's sound system during the interim.

The particular advantages of changing from batteries to other power supplies are therefore these:

That motor generators or rectifiers do not wear out every two or three years and are therefore economical in the long run, and that on the whole they are much less troublesome to care for than batteries are. The disadvantages are: A slightly greater danger to the show, and, in some cases at least, a greater initial cost.

II

Improvement in Battery Operation

THEATRES interested in retaining their batteries can avail themselves of at least one device which simplifies the problem of charging and makes it almost fool-proof. This is the ampere-hour meter.

The ampere-hour meter is a clock-like affair. A glance at its dial ascertains the state of the charge of the battery. The indicating finger moves away from zero when the battery is being used, and back towards zero when the charge is replaced. At zero point the finger closes a contact which opens a relay and prevents overcharging. Where this contrivance is used the projection crew can "put the batteries on" with perfect safety before leaving at night. Both the noisy show due to run-down batteries, and the danger of shortening battery life through overcharging are effectually avoided.

Nickel-Alkali Batteries

The nickel-alkali, or Edison, storage battery, offers many advantages over the lead type, but has one drawback which has so far prevented its extensive adoption for sound use. The battery has a very long life, several times that of its lead-acid cousin, and it is almost fool-proof. It can be short-circuited without permanent damage, it can be left on charge indefinitely with no other harm than the waste of

Bell 35m.m. Portable Sound Film Projector—

The Complete Solution to the Sound Problem for Smaller Theatres—Highest Quality Performance with Economy, Adaptability and *Profit Plus

Primarily designed for portability, Bell equipment is in every respect truly professional in its optical system, sound reproduction and mechanism. It is the first equipment of its kind that has been designed to fulfill the requirements of picture projection and sound reproduction in a manner equal in every respect to the performance of the best of permanent theatre equipments.

For owners of smaller theatres seating up to 1,500, it offers the only logical solution to the sound problem, at a price within reasonable bounds. An owner equipped with Bell, is not irrevocably tied to his location. The change from semi-permanent installation to portable equipment wherewith to fulfill engagements outside the theatre is the work of a few minutes. This opens up a wide field for extra profit to theatre owners. The theatre owner who gets into the rental field through Bell equipment, can give the laugh to competition.

Bell equipment is engineered for sound, not adapted to it. The Tandem unit, illustrated above, as designed in right and left projectors. Can be set up with 18″ between lenses or 20 ft. apart. The exclusive Bell Uni-remote control provides for smooth "change over," and individual operation of each projector from one central point.

The exclusive safety features incorporated with Bell design, of which the automatic "dowser" which shuts off all current when film has run through, or parted, the rear shutter construction, the forced draft cooling system and fire proof mounting, are outstanding, make Bell the safest of projectors yet designed.

Film operating parts are masterpieces of advanced projection engineering. Drive mechanism consists of a large induction motor whch assures constant speed under the most adverse power conditions.

Lubrication is rendered automatic by immersing moving parts in a bath of oil.

All steel parts are chromium plated.

Standard lamp equipment consists of 1000 Watt lamp, but 900 Watt may be had if desired, and for semi-permanent installation arc lighting may be employed.

The projection lens mounts will take any type of lens of standard dimensions. Standard size theatre screens can be fully covered at 50 to 100 foot throws.

Bell sound reproduction is truly superb.

Bell equipment can be used indoors or out. No special wiring necessary. Operates entirely from 110 Volt A.C. house current.

The Bell Tandem Unit complete consists of two projectors, with lenses and lamps, one amplifyer and uni-remote control panel, in metal case, speaker unit consisting of two syncronized dynamic speakers, and baffle board in case, and one film magazine case.

Weight complete 215 lbs.

Price of Bell Tandem Unit, complete as above, $2,150. Detailed descriptive folder will be mailed upon request.

charging current, and though it costs somewhat more than the other type, its long life more than makes up for the difference.

The disadvantage of this battery is that its voltage, when first placed in operation, is unusually high. The excessive voltage lasts through about half an hour's use, after which a normal potential is maintained, dropping slowly and steadily with continued discharge, as in the case of any other battery.

The nickel-alkai battery can be used for sound work if arrangements are made to discharge it through a dummy resistance for half an hour before the show. After that it may be switched into ordinary operation and will prove entirely satisfactory. Whether or not such an arrangement is desirable in a projection room is largely a matter of the individual theatre and the particular projection staff involved.

Dry Batteries

Systems using dry C-batteries will retain them. They are inexpensive and not particularly troublesome.

Dry B-batteries for polarizing the photocell and its associated amplifier will also be retained in many theatres (although some of the newer systems no longer use them). Rectifiers for replacing these batteries are possible, and should prove an ultimate economy, but an extraordinarily smooth d.c. is required at this point in the system, and only a few manufacturers have thought it worth while, so far, to offer substitutes for polarizing the photocell.

III
Motor-Generator Systems

MOTOR-GENERATORS are used with many of the newer systems, and afford one means of eliminating batteries. The generator creates a reasonably pure direct current, which is filtered and supplied to to the plates and filaments of the tubes, to the exciting lamp filaments, and to the speaker fields. A motor-generator system of this kind can be added to almost any sound installation. Some rewiring will nearly always be required. The generator has the advantage of much longer life than may reasonably be expected of any batteries; thus, though it may cost more to install this substitute than simply to replace the existing batteries as they wear out, that first cost is the final cost. The motor-generator set is entitled to the careful consideration of any manager who contemplates replacing any portion of his battery system with something else.

A special application of the generator system is so simple, and so inexpensive, as to deserve more than a passing word.

Speaker Field Supply

Every theatre using arcs for projection is provided with some source of direct current. Commonly this is a motor-generator, though it may be a rectifier, or it may be a d.c. main. Fluctuations in the drain from this d.c. supply, due to lighting, trimming and distinguishing arcs, have thus far prevented use of the same current for more sensitive portions of the sound system. But the speaker field is one of the least sensitive. Drawing its supply from the arc d.c. is a growing practice, and a very economical one.

A filter is seldom needed. The speaker field circuit, being at the end of the system amplification, is not especially susceptible to current ripple. The fields themselves are excellent filters. Where the d.c. supply is extremely rough, or not wholly adequate to the demands made upon it, condensers are sometimes added to the circuit. This is not very common, but it is an inexpensive step.

A rheostat is employed to adjust the voltage of the supply to the requirements of the speakers. Commonly this is purchased ready-mounted in a metal cabinet, which contains also the horn switch and an ammeter. The field circuit is usually rewired so as to put all the fields in series and thereby minimize the heat loss in the rheostat.

It may not be inappropriate to add, at this point, that there is some possibility of complete elimination of all speaker field circuits. Several manufacturers are experimenting with a "magnetic" speaker for theatres, hoping by the use of some of the newer magnetic alloys, to develop a field of sufficient strength around a permanent magnet. There is, however, no very immediate prospect that these efforts will be commercially successful.

IV
Rectifiers

THE RECTIFIER is coming into increasing favor as a means of eliminating batteries. Together with the a.c. filament, it is incorporated as an integral part of most of the newer amplifiers. Photocell amplifiers, however, still rely largely on A- and B-batteries. The rectifier is capable of replacing the A-battery for this amplifier (and for any others that may still use it), of lighting the exciter lamp, and of supplying the speaker fields.

Rectifier tubes of the type commonly used for battery charging may be employed, or the copper-oxide, or copper-sulphide "dry chemical" rectifier may be preferred. The latter has the advantage of longer life than the rectifying tubes. A filter system is incorporated in the rectifier. Such a rectifier has this advantage over the generator set—that it has no moving parts—and is therefore not subject to mechanical wear. Generally, one rectifier, supplying both the exciting lamp and the amplifier filaments, will be installed for each projector. A separate rectifier will take care of the d.c. filaments, if any, in the system, outside of the photocell amplifier, and also of any signal lights, relays and so on, that were previously operated by battery power. A high-voltage rectifier, probably employing mercury-vapor tubes, can be used to replace B-storage batteries if these have been used to supply the system amplifier. Still another rectifier will excite the speaker fields, or these may be provided for out of the arc d.c. as previously outlined.

A number of rectifiers may thus be placed about the projection room, each located as closely as possible to the apparatus it is intended to supply, in order to minimize the cost of rewiring. In some theatres, again, the layout of the projection room and of the sources of a.c. available, may be such that it will prove more economical to place all the rectifiers in one central location—perhaps in the former battery room—and to wire separately from this location to the several portions of the system.

Motor-generator sets on the market at the present time are most often designed to replace all batteries at once, with separate filter for each circuit supplied. Rectifiers, however, are more usually constructed on the plan outlined above—a separate rectifier for each circuit.

One advantage of this flexibility of battery replacements is that it is by no means necessary to replace all batteries at once. Suppose the F-set to have gone bad, while the H's are still holding up fairly well. Rectifiers can be used to replace the F's, and at the same time any exceptionally good battery among them may be substituted for some particularly poor battery in the H group. Later on, when occasion requires, another rectifier, a generator or an arc d.c. rheostat panel, may be installed to replace the H's also.

V

A. C. Filaments

IN SOME instances theatres may find it profitable to rewire amplifiers in order to take advantage of the a.c. filaments and thereby eliminate filament batteries.

There are two kinds of a.c. filaments. One differs from the d.c. type only in minor details of ruggedness and of the current supply necessary. Such filaments are used in the larger tubes where an alternating current filament supply is less likely to cause a hum in the sound. The other type of a.c. filament, the "heater" type, is more complicated.

In any tube—in any electric lamp, for that matter—the heated filament emits electrons. The movement of these electrons through the vacuum of the tube is at the bottom of all amplification. In the "heater tube" an ordinary filament wire is coated with an insulating material. Over this material is laid the electron-emitting filament, or cathode. The heat-lag in the insulating substance keeps the temperature of the emitter constant and insures an even flow of electrons regardless of whether the current heating the inner filament be alternating or direct.

It is obvious that amplifier modifications to allow the use of a.c. filaments will have to be more extensive for the second type of tube than for the first type. The simpler tube requires installation of a transformer capable of supplying the proper current and voltage. If the grid bias is obtained from the voltage drop of the filament circuit, some small modification may be necessary if the change involves any alteration of voltage or current. That is all. The heater tube will require, in addition to these changes, the insulation of the cathode circuit from the heating circuit, which may

After all, it's what others say that counts!

WRIGHT-DECOSTER, INC.,

July 16, 1931

Gentlemen:

As you know, for the past several years we have been manufacturing and installing theatre sound equipment throughout the Northwest. During this time we have used a great number of your earlier model No. 107 speakers and the No. 9 horns. However, there have been many theatres where, due to lack of proper acoustic conditions, we have been forced to try out as many as four and five different combinations of baffles, horn lengths, etc., to obtain the desired results.

When you recently announced your new No. 109 horn and unit we were frankly skeptical as to your claims, and, particularly, as to the tone control feature on the unit. We, however, ordered a sample and installed it in an old local opera house where we had just put in one of our latest sound-on-film equipments, and where we had practically exhausted every resource, in an endeavor to obtain the proper distribution and reproduction. It is difficult to tell you the amazing revelation that the installation of this single horn and unit made without seemingly being guilty of exaggeration and misrepresentation. In all truthfulness, your new dynamic cone and horn far out distance any other like combination that we have ever used.

You are to be congratulated on this remarkable achievement, and we sincerely trust you will enjoy a splendid volume of business on this new product.

Yours very truly,

Socket-Power Systems

SOME OF THE newest sound systems available have simplified the power problem to a point almost comparable to the simplicity achieved in the modern radio. These may be taken, from the point of view of power supply, as being to some extent models for all attempts at modification of earlier types of equipment.

In a typical system of this kind a.c. filaments are used throughout. The amplifier is provided with two separate rectifiers, built into the same cabinet as an integral part of the unit. One supplies the plates of the amplifier tubes, and a branch circuit from this is used for polarizing the photocell. The second rectifier excites the speaker fields. As an alternative to the latter arrangement, each speaker may carry its own individual rectifier.

VII
Related Matters

A.C. Exciting Lamps

A. C. FILAMENTS have been perfected, but no experimenter has as yet succeeded in producing a satisfactory a.c. exciting lamp, although many have tried. Many are still trying, and the problem may be solved in the not too distant future. The question of power supply would be greatly simplified by such a lamp, since the comparatively heavy drain of the exciter and the sensitive position it occupies in the sound system, make it the most important single factor in the power problems of today.

Line Power Supply

Appropriate to a discussion of power supplies is the subject of fluctuating line voltages, experienced in many communities. Continuously high voltage is likely to burn out valuable apparatus. Very low voltage often makes poor sound. In sections where only high voltage is experienced, a cabinet containing a rheostat and a voltmeter constitutes a very inexpensive means of adjusting the supply to its proper value. Where the voltage varies between too low and too high a transformer can be added to the cabinet. By means of the transformer the voltage can first be raised to compensate for any drop in the line, and then be adjusted to the exact value desired by the rheostat. When the line voltage is high the transformer may be shorted out and the rheostat used alone. Or the transformer may be provided with a tapped primary, allowing for several variations of step-up and step-down compensation, the rheostat used for adjustment, as before.

Any such cabinet, however, requires attention on the part of the projectionist, who can never move fast enough to keep up with sudden surges which may be dangerous to the equipment. An automatic line regulator is another of the almost innumerable improvements in power supply that may reasonably be expected in the near future.

VISIBESTONE

THE PERFECT FIREPROOF SOUND SCREEN

K & M Ambler ASBESTOS PRODUCTS

The moral and financial risk of fire and consequent panic is ever present in theatres using inflammable or so-called "fireproofed" motion picture screens. It is too vital to be overlooked—frequently fatal to disregard. . . . No screen made of combustible material, regardless of chemical "treatment," can be permanently fireproof. But here is a Sound Screen that is everlastingly SAFE—yet none of its effectiveness as a perfect sound screen has been sacrificed to Safety. Visibestone is basically fireproof—asbestos cloth specially woven—and pronounced by authority the PERFECT SOUND SCREEN. Note its features at left. Approved by E.R.P.I., for use with Western Electric Sound Equipment.

FEATURES

1. Fireproof
2. Free from distortion of sight or sound
3. Acoustically perfected
4. Eliminates "sound pockets"
5. No glare—restful to the eyes
6. Easy to clean—lasts longer

The Visibestone Screen is sold by National Theatre Supply Company—all branches. Ask or write them for samples and prices or communicate direct with the manufacturer.

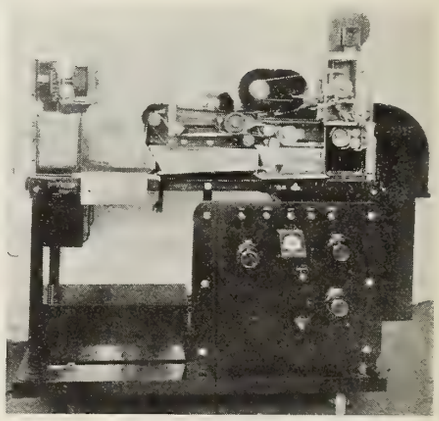
● Another new contribution to the science of acoustical analysis has just been made, and like many another, it has come from the A. T. & T. organization. The Bell Laboratories have developed the recording oscillograph to the point where Electrical Research Products, Inc., is using it extensively in the work of its acoustic consulting service. From them I have the following account of the operation of this device (and likewise am indebted to them for the accompanying illustrations):

"The rapid record oscillograph fulfills acoustic research requirements in the form of a permanent photographic image of any sound picked up by the associated microphone. Pure tone or complex frequency from 30 to 6,000 cycles is recorded on a graduated strip of paper, 35-mm. in width, the co-ordinates of which indicate directly the frequency, pressure and duration.



The rapid record oscillograph developed by the Bell Laboratories and used in Erpi acoustic consultant work.

"In its application to sound analysis, the output of the associated microphone is impressed on the string of a specially designed galvanometer. The string is of duralumin less than .001-inch in diameter stretched between the poles of an electro-magnet and tensioned to a definite frequency. Suitable attentuation at the point of natural resonance results in uniformly linear response. Transient currents from the microphone passing through the string cause it to vibrate in proportion to the amount of impressed energy. Three such strings provide means for simultaneously recording data from as many sources, but any of the galvanometer strings may be used independently of the others.

"By means of a very simple optical system and a tungsten lamp as a source of light, the shadow of the vibrating string is projected upon a moving strip of sensitized paper. In a similar manner, abscissa lines are projected on the oscillogram from a screen of parallel lines engraved on the optical system. Ordinate lines are obtained from the projected shadow of the spokes of a synchronously rotated wheel and represent time intervals of .001-second. The shadows of the strings and co-ordinate lines appear on the developed oscillogram as white lines, strongly contrasting with the dark grey of the portions which were exposed to direct light.

"The photographic mechanism is essentially a complete camera and laboratory where the sensitized paper is exposed and passed through the developing and fixing solutions automatically. The speed of the paper through the light beam may be set within very wide limits, but at its maximum approaches a rate of 15 miles per hour. As this is much more rapid than the permissible rate of processing, it was necessary to provide intermediate storage for the exposed paper. This is accomplished by a light-proof storage tank where it is loosely folded until automatically withdrawn by the conveyor belts leading it through the process tanks.

"The average oscillogram is available for inspection within one-half minute from the time the exposure trigger is released, and if it is wanted for further reference or enlargement may be completely dried within fifteen minutes. Extreme sharpness of the image makes possible enlargement to four or five times original size for minute inspection where desired, but this is seldom found necessary.

In the study of sound, the rapid oscillograph has proven extremely useful. It has simplified the scientific analysis of interference phenomena and distribution of sound energy because of the ability to record simultaneously the initial sound at its source and the resultant sound energy received at widely separated locations in the auditorium. It thus becomes an instrument with which the acoustical engineer may qualitatively inspect reverberation characteristics while relying on the reverberation meter for a more complete and detailed study.

"Absence of distortion and extreme simplicity of operation have developed useful applications of the rapid oscillograph in many fields. For investigation of sound recording and reproducing equipment, amplifier and tube characteristics and in all research where oscillograms of audio frequencies are desired it has proved most useful."

SPECIAL LIGHTING

● Almost 325,000,000-candle power illumination for the shooting of an industrial motion picture! In these days of scientific marvels, we are apt to pass over a figure like that without the thrill really due it. Nevertheless, that amount of illumination is just about one of the greatest we have contrived to generate for other than experimental purposes—and it is to be used merely to obtain full details of objects for a picture produced to educate the employes of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Edison Company.

The lighting outfit consists in Hall & Connolly search lights of 180 amperes, each of which is equipped with a burner of 100,000 c. p. It is when these burners are working in connection with U. S. Navy standard parabolic 36-inch diameter reflectors, that the 325,000,000 c. p. illumination is achieved.

NEW SAFETY DEVICE

● A new fire prevention device has been developed which incorporates a number of interesting principles in safety engineering, and it is expected that it will soon be ready for the market. It is called the White Safety Control, Model Sc101.

It consists in a main control box housing a starting switch, vacuum pump, vacuum-electric switch and solenoid magnet, upper loop valve, lower loop valve, sound head valve, relay assembly, lifting rod assembly for the fire shutter, and tubing from the several valves to the vacuum pump.

The main control box is fastened to the projector head by the two bolts that secure the upper magazine to the head. A hole is drilled in the top casing of the projector head, through which passes the lifting rod connecting the solenoid magnet with the fire shutter. The base of the main control assembly is also drilled to accommodate this rod.

The lifting rod is secured at the lower end on the inside of the projector head to a lever that engages the governor lifting lever at its original fulcrum. The lifting rod lever is fulcrummed on a plate that is securely held by the large screw in the projector that holds the cast iron webb that supports the operating mechanism of the projector.

The vacuum pump is of the Chamber Crank train type consisting of four blades of a special oil-impregnated wood operating in steel ways and maintaining a constant pull of vacuum through centrifugal force against the walls of the pump. This pump creates and maintains a vacuum of 4 inches of mercury at the standard speed of 90 feet per minute film projection.

The electrical circuit is open until closed by the action of the vacuum-electric switch. The vacuum switch is constructed with a sylphon bellows operating contact, movement of the bellows being accomplished through the medium of the vacuum developed by the vacuum pump.

The solenoid magnet is constructed with a cast iron frame. It draws approximately 300 milli-amps in operation. The magnet, due to its construction, is very quiet in operation and will not make any objestionable noise when operated on alternating current, and will not affect sound equipment. It is carefully engineered to be well under the heat rise listed as standard by the Underwriters' Laboratories.

The upper film contact valve is fastened by two screws on the rear casing of the projector head forming a shim under the valve. The upper film contact valve is composed of an apron curved in a manner similar to the upper film loop and is suspended about half an inch above it. Any irregularity or upward movement of the film loop will immediately operate by displacing this apron and releasing the vacuum. Suspended below the upper loop is an arm attached to the apron part of the valve which will release the vacuum should any irregularity or loss of loop in a downward manner occur as the film is passing through.

The lower loop contact valve is fastened to the sleeve on the crank shaft of the projector and operates with a rotary motion from an arm with spring tension riding the film as it passes from the projector head. Lessening of the tension on the film or the breaking of the film at this point releases this arm and opens the valve.

The sound head valve is fastened to a valve entering the lower magazine operating substantially in the manner of the lower loop switch on the tension of the film passing into the lower magazine. These two latter valve arms contain rollers that are finely machined and designed to ride only the sprocket hole parts of the film thereby insuring no injury to the photographic and sound section of the film.

Connections from the various contact valves are carried through three-sixteenth of an inch of copper tubing with a one-eighth-inch hole. Compression fittings are used throughout.

The relay is a Dunco of ample capacity and is listed as standard by the Underwriters' Laboratories. Incorporated in the relay assembly box is a cut-out switch so connected that the entire safety device is disconnected for emergency purposes.

The control is designed to detect any irregularity of the motion picture film in passing through the projector or sound mechanism. It is also designed to detect any mechanical irregularity, such as binding of gears, freezing of shafts in bearings or other similar accidents that might occur.

The control is designed to operate by first cutting off the light through the medium of the fire shutter. The machine projection is stopped by the interruption of the electrical current before any possible damage can occur to either film or mechanism.

A NEW GENERATOR

● Motor generators for replacing storage batteries in theatres have been developed by the Electric Specialty Company of Stamford, Conn. These machines supply low voltage direct current for the fields of loudspeakers and for the exciter lamps of the sound equipment.

A simple filter system is used when they supply power to the exciter lamps, but filters are not used with the horn fields. The machines are furnished complete with filters, when required, and they may be connected in place of the storage batteries.

ELECTRO-DYNAMIC UNIT

● An electro-dynamic speaker has been brought out by the Fox Engineering Company of Toledo, O., for use in theatre sound and public address systems.

A particularly interesting feature of this unit is an interchangeable "voice coil cartridge," which may be removed for the purpose of substituting a new one (instead of purchasing an entirely new unit) by merely removing one "master" screw.

The outer bowl is stamped from one piece of heavy alloy. In this bowl rests the "field coil" for supplying the magnetic energy. This energy, which is of six volts, can be supplied by either an ordinary 6-volt storage battery, or a specially designed dry rectifier also made by the Fox concern.

INCREASING AMPERAGE

● A trend from projection lamps of lower amperage to those of higher amperage is reported by the Ashcraft Automatic Arc Company, basing its observations on the trend in its own sales.

Among them were a high intensity lamp to Paramount Publix, another to Continental Theatre Accessories, while two Ashcraft C-70's (high intensity reflectors) were ordered by the Western Theatrical Equipment Company. An order from National Theatre Supply Company specified two air-blast high-low models.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● C. E. Carraro, radio engineer well known throughout the Southwest (where they call him Jack), has joined the sales staff of the Arcturus Radio Tube Company of Newark, N. J.

Something more should be forthcoming later concerning this—a shield designed to prevent oil from dripping into vital parts of sound apparatus. It is reported to be the invention of H. L. Newton, a projectionist at the Orpheum theatre in Neosho, Mo. The device is designed for use with Western Electric universal bases.

GOOD SHOWMANSHIP

Good showmanship consists of pleasing the public. The wise theatre manager realizes that the heart of his appeal is the character of his projection facilities.

The new Super Cinephor Lens and Condenser System is revolutionary. The lens is the first true anastigmat ever offered for projection, giving a great increase in image quality and covering power. The condenser system supplies from 50 to 100 per cent more light than any other condenser system now available.

Watching the Trend of Today

In this period of readjustment, the motion picture theatre is moulding its future. This is an inevitable phase of growth. Many have commented on a general tendency to resist any remoulding . . . then when resistance proves futile, the tendency to let the future shape itself. But the destiny of any human activity is largely in the hands of those whose lives are linked with it. The theatre manager . . . the architect . . . the engineer who is not content merely to wait blindly for whatever happens, will watch now each day's trend and endeavor to appraise its meaning. . . . Better Theatres is dedicated not alone to the purpose of giving direct practicable service, but to offer guideposts to the future, by reflecting the trend of today in theatre creation and operation.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

F. H. Richardson

THE STANDARD PRINT AND THE ACADEMY

IN A RECENT issue of BETTER THEATRES, I addressed William C. deMille, in his capacity as president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, in an open letter published in this department, the burden of my message being the difficulties met by the projectionist because the Standard Release Print is not being administered properly.

I now have something further to say to the Academy on another phase of the Standard Release Print matter, and I hope for considerate reception of these comments, having had such assurances from Mr. deMille in his reply to my first open letter.

In responding to that message, Mr. deMille wrote, "I have read your very interesting letter and have turned it over the the Technical Bureau for action. Of course, the question at issue is really an exchange and producer matter, rather than an Academy matter, but the Academy can and will act in bringing it to the attention of the proper authorities."

The present letter I wish to address to Mr. Lester Cowan, manager of the Technical Bureau of the Academy.

My Dear Mr. Cowan: May I most respectfully draw the attention and thought of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences to the fact that the failure to send out productions mounted on 2,000-foot reels is doing a very great deal to minimize the beneficial effect of the Standard Release Print in all except first-run houses.

I think I am safe in saying that the great majority of theatres are now projecting films on 2,000-foot lengths and must therefore "double up," which means injury to, and frequently the ruin of, the Standard Release Print at the end of each odd numbered reel. This injury is inevitable because of the fact that in the process of joining, the tail pieces must be removed from the first reel, and whatever leader there may be from the second reel, which, of course, means the loss of two or three frames of reel each time, and a loss of two frames at rejoining. Sometimes, if men are careless, the loss may be as much as four or five frames.

This you will, of course, realize, is inevitable in the "doubling up" process, and in a relatively short while it operates to ruin the Standard Release Print for those who do project on 1,000-foot reels.

May I suggest, My Dear Mr. Cowan, that inasmuch as the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences gave us the Standard Release Print, it automatically becomes the duty of the Academy to do everything possible to make it a success, and one thing it can do is to induce producers to release their productions in 2,000-foot reels instead of in the now obsolete 1,000-foot reels.

In further reference to Mr. deMille's reply to my original letter, I should like to say that I cannot agree that it is altogether an exchange and producer matter.

The Academy itself brought the Standard Release Print into existence, and as the parent of the child, the Academy has a duty to take care of it until it can take care of itself. This is not the duty of any one group, but of the Academy as a whole, for the Standard Release Print represents an interest belonging to the whole industry, from the producer right through to the projectionist—and, of course, finally to the public.

THE PHOTOPHONE A.C. AMPLIFIER

RCA PHOTOPHONE has released an a.c reproducing amplifier which they claim to be largely fool-proof. The equipment is a device for the reproduction of sound in synchronization with motion in theatres having a seating capacity of not more than one thousand. The company has been working hard developing this apparatus during the best part of more than two years. It operates directly from 60-cycle, alternating current power mains. There are no batteries, rotating machinery or other auxiliary equipment in connection with it.

This, the company claims, makes for a reduced first cost. The company also very reasonably claims that maintenance costs are reduced and that the care and operation of the equipment is also considerably simplified.

The entire apparatus is enclosed in a ventilated sheet-steel casing, which is 20 inches wide, 11 inches deep from front to back, and 64 inches high. It will therefore be seen that it is small enough to be installed in almost any projection room without any alterations being necessary. Also there is no space required for storage batteries, since, as I have said, there are none.

Elsewhere is a schematic diagram of the working of this element, the main connections of which I think you will be able to trace out. At least you may do so by means of a suitable magnifying glass. I hesitate to print such a diagram because of the fact that with such a mass of wiring, it is only easily traceable on a drawing much larger than we are able to set forth in print.

This apparatus is what is known as the "unit panel type." This means that the various units are mounted on separate panels and the panels then enclosed in a suitable sheet steel casing, usually, as in this case, one above the other.

The front covering of each one of these various panels may be removed for installation or service, or any of the various unit panels may be easily taken out from the front of the rack. This feature is of particular value in that it permits of the installation of the device with its back against the projection room wall, thus economizing on space and at the same time permitting necessary operations being performed without the necessity of disturbing

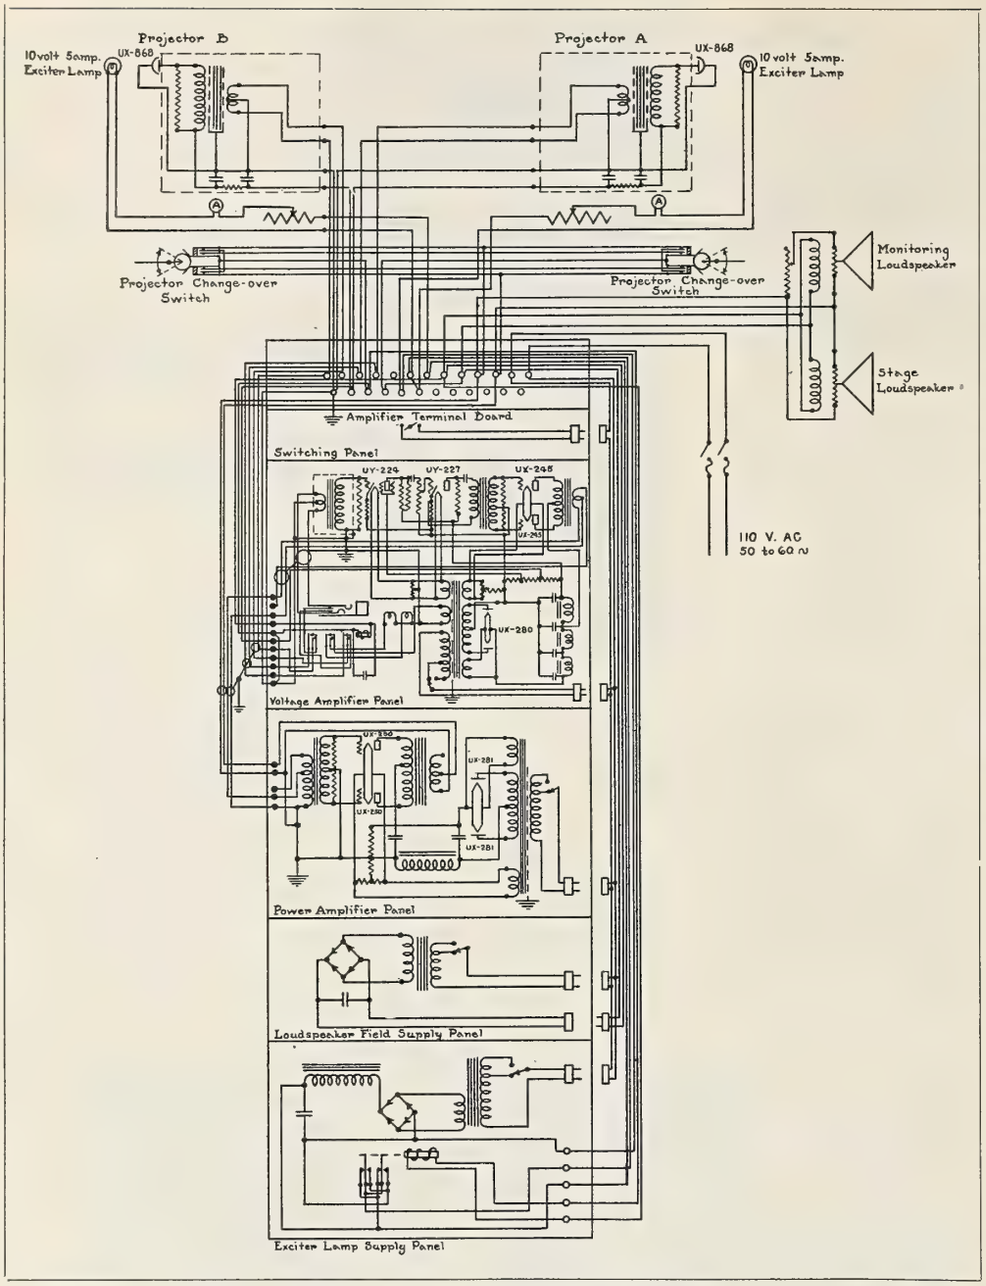
MAJOR FA SYSTEM TRADE MARK



Photophone a.c. amplifier wiring scheme.

There are five separate panels. At the top is the switching panel, beneath which is the voltage amplifying panel. Next comes the power amplifying panel, then the loud-speaker field supply panel, and under them all is located the exciter lamp supply panel.

The front cover of the voltage and power amplifier units, or panels, are made in two sections each. The lower section is solid, but the upper is perforated to permit ventilation and to permit the projectionist or engineer to observe the tubes.

The tubes are readily accessible, but are protected against possible injury. The perforated panels above named may be quickly removed for access to the tubes. Each of the five panels above named is entirely self-contained, including its own power supply unit.

At the top of the rack is the main terminal board, upon which is mounted the single tumbler switch controlling the power supply for all the various units. The voltage amplifying panel immediately beneath contains the transformers, tube sockets, capacitors, resistors, etc., besides a complete power supply unit. Some of the units of this panel such as reactors, transformers, etc., are "potted" in, compounded in individual steel cases located behind the panels with terminals projecting into the interior.

Each photoelectric cell has its output stepped down to match a 500-ohm impedance. This is accomplished by means of a transformer in the sound head. This current is then carried along a shielded line of 500-ohm impedance to the changeover relay, which is mounted on the voltage amplifier panel. This relay is controlled for the purpose of changeover by a switch mounted in location convenient to the projector. There the switches have an "off" position provided, which may be used for the purpose of eliminating certain parts of the sound at the demand of censorship.

Four radiotrons in three stages are supplied in connection with the voltage amplifier. The in-put transformer is mounted in a steel container, which latter is in its turn mounted in another larger steel container. This larger container is designed to have the effect of affording increased magnetic shielding.

The first stage employs a screen-grid radiotron (UY-224), which is surrounded by a cylindrical metal shield. This stage is resistance coupled to a UY-227, which is in turn transformer-coupled to the last stage, using two UX-245's in push-pull. The designers assert that the use of heater type radiotrons in the first two stages, serves largely to reduce michrophonic disturbances, so that cushioned mountings are not necessary.

The gain control is in the form of a voltage divider located in the grid-circuit of the second stage. It has a large number of steps, each one approximately equal to one decibel. This sort of control provides a smooth gradual variation of gain over a wide range. The stages are self-biased, meaning that the grid-bias is obtained across a resistor in the cathode return lead, designed to correct bias on each tube, notwithstanding possible variations in tubes, in main voltage or in other things.

The voltage amplifier power supply is an integral constituent of this panel. It consists of a power transformer, one UX-280 rectifier tube and a filter of three sections. This particular unit supplies all power required by the photoelectric cell, pilot lamp and radiotrons.

Below the voltage amplifier panel is the power amplifier panel, the mechanical assembly of the two being very similar. The latter panel contains two UX-250 radiotrons in push-pull. This supplies a maximum power output of about 10 watts. Two UX-281 rectifier tubes and a suitable filter supply the power for this stage.

The loudspeaker supply panel is in the form of a power transformer, dry-oxide (rectox) rectifier and filtering capacitors, the whole being rated at 0.35 of an ampere at 110 volts d.c. It supplies power to the fields of two-stage loudspeakers, to one monitor loudspeaker and to the changeover relays.

The exciter lamp power panel is very similar to the loudspeaker panel, but the rating is different. It rates five amperes at 10 volts. Its elements are a power transformer a high-current rectox unit, a filter reactor and a large capacitor. The capacitor is of the dry-electrolytic type. Mounted on this panel is a novel feature in the form of the exciter changeover relay, which automatically turns on the exciter lamp of the projector to which the amplifier now is connected, at the same time extinguishing the other one.

All of the interpanel connections are cabled. The signal leads are run in grounded shields on one side of the rack. All a.c., an rectified a.c. leads, are run on to other types of power supply.

Normally, amplification is furnished for operation on from 105 to 125-volt, 50 to 60-cycle a.c. It may, however, be attached to other types of power supply.

This amplifier is not regarded as sensitive to ordinary changes in line voltage. A line voltage drop of 10%, for example, will reduce the value of gain of the whole system by only one decibel. The hum level is unusually low for an a.c. amplifier of high gain, for at the heighth of its gain it is approximately 60 decibels below maximum undistorted power output. The hum in the entire equipment, including the photoelectric cell and the exciter lamp, is somewhat greater, being approximately 40 decibels below maximum undistorted power output at maximum gain, and from 60 to 70 decibels below at normal gain.

A point of importance is that no special tubes are required for use in this amplifier. The tubes are regular stock radio tubes, which may be procured from any dealer in radio equipment.

PROJECTION RECOGNIZED

IN LOOKING over the address at the recent Hollywood S. M. P. E. meeting delivered by J. I. Crabtree, president of the Society, under the title, "Aids and Accomplishments of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers During the Year 1930-31," I note several important recognitions of projection. Mr. Crabtree says:

"The subject of projection has been given special attention by the Projection Practice, Projection Theory and Projection Screens committees. As a result of their efforts, recommendations for Standard layouts of projection rooms of various sizes have been made, and data secured for formulating a tentative standard for screen brightness. . . .

"If I were a producer, before participating in the threatened revivals of musicals, I should pay a great deal of attention to the subject of projection. Most producers are likewise exhibitors and realize that it is foolish to spend millions on a production and have the artistry of the picture destroyed by imperfect projection. The projectionist is one of the most important cogs in the complex motion picture mechanism, and he should be encouraged and educated. . . .

"The theatres of the future must have larger projection rooms to accommodate the increasing amount of apparatus which will be necessary—manned by men who will watch over its operation with the skill and care of a conductor directing an orchestra. Such equipment may include machines for reproducing sound from a separate film record with multiple sound tracks to permit of sound perspective and special effects, with sound equipment having adequate reserve power to simulate every type of natural sounds, and with projectors capable of giving depth to the picture. Relief projection without the aid of auxiliary devices has been recently demonstrated, and these experiments have revived the hope for the ultimate production of stereoscopic motion pictures."

I am especially gratified by the statement of President Crabtree, that "most producers are likewise exhibitors and realize that it is foolish to spend millions on productions, only to have the artistry spoiled by imperfect reproduction. The projectionist is one of the most important cogs in the complex motion picture mechanism. He should be encouraged and educated."

I read that statement by the president of the leading engineering body of the motion picture industry, with much gratification. It has seemed an almost childishly simple proposition to assume it to be foolish for producers to work like galley slaves, besides often expending huge sums of money, in an effort to perfect a production, then when it is finished take little or no interest in the matter of its being properly placed before its ultimate purchaser, the public.

There still are plenty of abuses in projection matters in a goodly percentage of our theatres—yea, in a very goodly percentage indeed—though they are no longer to any considerable extent chargeable to lack of knowledge and ability on the part of projectionists. At least the percentage of competent projectionists is very, very much higher than it was a few years ago. The trouble now lies largely in lack of energy or ability on the part of theatre managers to realize, or rather know, that productions are not being placed upon their screen or through their horns at maximum amusement and entertainment value. There is also a lack of ability to determine the causes and apply proper remedies.

In very many cases the fault may be charged to projection equipment in imperfect state of repair, often amounting to near-delapidation. In many cases the cause has its seat in just plain laziness, often superinduced, to greater or less extent, by the fact that the management gives very slight evidence of appreciation for high-grade work. The projectionist in such cases may have ample ability, but little or no incentive to put it to use.

Again I congratulate President Crabtree. He evidently understands the situation. Incidentally, under his able leadership the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has made remarkable strides forward. He is a hard working, very capable man. And he who says that has not always agreed with his methods. He has few peers in the engineering field. More power to him!

POPPING SOUNDS IN ONE PROJECTOR

A LETTER from Steven Bertelson, manager of the Ephraim theatre, at Ephraim, Utah, says:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: First I want to say that I have been a constant reader of your department and articles, from which I have learned a great deal. However, the trouble we are now having has not yet been commented upon.

"We have Phototone equipment, both film and disc, though we do not now use the disc. We just recently installed the new type Visitron p.e. cell, instructions for which, as you know, call for as low a voltage as will give sufficient volume. They advise starting with 40 volts and working up not to exceed 90 volts. We use 22½ volts, but still have trouble holding our volume down. The fader which came with the equipment has what I think you would call a dummy fader in it, which, when received, was connected on the disc side. We ran it that way all the time until we received the new cells, after which we could not keep the volume down at all. We then connected this extra resistance on the film side, which enabled us to hold the volume down, but it seems to spoil tone qualities. By that I mean we seem to get much better tone when the volume is too loud. We are at a loss to understand this. We usually run our fader at one, and never over two.

"We have a popping sound in one projector which we are unable to locate. Have changed cells from one projector to the other, changed tubes, checked up on all connections in both fader and head amplifier, but still we have the popping, which comes and goes. It will quiet down for a while and then will get noisy. We are inclined to think it is a weak condensor or resistor in either one side of the fader or the head amplifier. Would you recommend a new fader, and if so, what would you think best for our equipment? We have the two-stage head amplifiers."

I forwarded a full statement of this trouble to the Phototone Equipment Corporation of America, who immediately wrote to Manager Bartelson as follows:

"It is difficult for us to go into details regarding your trouble without knowing the exact layout of your wiring. From your description, we take it that your plate 'B' lead and your cell 'B' lead may have become reversed, so as to put more voltage on the one cell than you really think is there.

"Another suggestion would be that your wiring is correct, but that the plate 'B' voltage is leaking over into the cell 'B' lead. This occasionally happens. Due to bad, dirty connections on the back side of the pre-amp terminal strip, the 'B' leaks across from No. 5 to No. 6 post.

"If the wiring is correct and no leakage occurs, the cell should operate very satisfactorily somewhere between 67½ and 90 volts 'B.' The popping noise can be eliminated by replacing the 30-ohm center top filament resistors with new resistors."

I may add to the above by saying that the Ephraim theatre has old style Phototone equipment. The new type makes it extremely unlikely that these troubles could occur—in fact, it seems impossible.

I am publishing this for the benefit of the other theatres using old style Phototone equipment who might have this same trouble.

THE NEW B. & S. REAR SHUTTER

THE REAR shutter of Basson & Stern equipment has been redesigned. I have heard no complaints of the action of the old type Basson & Stern attachment, but a good many complaints were based on its rather rough appearance. It didn't match up with the projector in the matter of finish. This trouble, I think, has now been eliminated entirely.

The design of the shutter blades and the air currents they induce are shown in Fig. 1. It will be observed that the action of the shutter is such that the air is not blown against the film. Instead it is away from it. This is very important, indeed, because of the fact that blowing air toward the film commonly means also the blowing of dust against it, and we all know that is not at all a desirable condition.

The rear shutter performs three separate duties. First, it keeps the film free from dust and dirt and prevents the entrance into the lamp-house of a current of air which might disturb the light source. The shutter (as shown in Fig. 2) is reversed. the side you see being toward the film. The two angular air-moving blades are fronted by a flat blade equal in size, as measured in circular degrees, with the angular blades.

A minute expended in study of this will show you that the effect is to divert the air current set up by the angular blades, and throw it outwards at right angles so that it cannot reach the lamp-house. The shutter as shown attached to the projector, is with the back shield removed. In this the flat air-diverting blade is shown.

The second office of the shutter is that, as compared with the old shutter, it reduces the heat at the aperture by (manufacturers assert) 70%.

The third office of the shutter is to render negligible the effects of buckled or warped film. As to this third item, I cannot undertake to vouch, but Mr. Basson has assured me it really has this effect, and I have always found Joe Basson's word to be dependable.

The installation of this device is very simple. Any projectionist of ordinary ability can, without drilling or cutting anything, attach the shutter to the mechanism. It is not even necessary to remove the mechanism from the stand to install the attachment, nor is it necessary to add any gearing to the mechanism. It may be used on any single- or double-bearing mechanism. The attachment includes an eye shield, a framing device, a cooling plate, a framing light and a shutter device.

ONE WAY TO DO IT

A SCHEME is set forth by Geeorge Thompson, projectionist of the De Luxe theatre at Bucklin, Kans., which he has evolved for correcting record faults when when the fault is near the beginning of the record.

Recently he had a record in which there was a re-track in the ninth groove. Using a needle he made a tiny hole in the bottom of the tenth groove. He then placed the needle in this hole, which became the starting point for the record. He then figured that while the record turned 100 times, the film would run 270 feet, since it runs 90 feet per minute and the record rotates 33⅓ times in a minute. Since he had set the needle 10 rounds from the start, and since 10 is one-tenth of one hundred, he measured off one-tenth of 270 feet of film, or 27 feet from the old starting mark, and with the needle in the small hole in the tenth groove of the record, made the start. He says:

"It is true we cut out 27 feet of film, but it was on the start of a comedy, and we lost only a part of the title." Presumably he found the synchronism to be okay.

This is printed merely as an interesting stunt. I am not so certain the thing would be exact enough to make synchronization perfect, though, after all, I am inclined to think it would be. At first glance I didn't believe the thing would work very well, because each groove is a little smaller in diameter than the last one. However, as Brother Thompson says, the record turns 100 turns while the film travels 270 feet, so the size of the groove would not make any difference, and so I guess the thing really is all right. Admitting that as fact, it may help more than one projectionist to "fix" a record having a re-track near the beginning.

ARMSTRONG ANSWERS MYERS

HERBERT L. ARMSTRONG, of Allentown, N. J., writes: "In June 6th BETTER THEATRES, I made note of the inquiry of a Mr. Myers of Shelby, Mich., concerning a flicker he had encountered since the installation of rectifiers. I have had some trouble of this kind myself. I have found to to be just about unavoidable. The current supplied by rectifiers is far from being true direct current. It might be if it were properly filtered, but without filtering there are pulsations, and these pulsations set up an effect very similar to those caused by using a.c at the arc. Whether or not a filter could be constructed that would satisfactorily remedy this trouble, I do not know. My own impression is that the motor generator is the true solution.

"As to the hum picked up in the sound system, I know of several cases where this ise remedied by removing the rectifiers a greater distance from the equipment, as you suggested. I hope this may be of some help to you and to Mr. Myers.

"I shall continue, as of old, to read our department because of its interesting discussions, editorial comment, etc."

Many thanks, Friend Armstrong. I presume possibly a filter might be effectively applied, but probably only with considerable loss. I of course know that rectified current has considerable pulsation, but did not believe it to be sufficient to provide flicker, but perhaps you are right. At any rate, Friend Myers should give the matter consideration.

This machine will detect everything there is in the way of mechanical fault in film, except "rain," of course. It will ever detect a crack in the film extending from the sprocket hole to the outer edge, even though absolutely no film be missing, and it does this at the remarkable film inspection speed of 350 feet per minute. At the same time, it cleans the film.

By cleaning the film, however, is not meant that it will remove all dirt, oil, etc., from the films that already have been allowed to become filthy. However, if the machine be used in an exchange and prints are run through it at inspection periods during the course of the film's life, the print will doubtless be kept free from oil and dirt.

The general appearance of the device is shown in the illustration. The little tank at the top contains a solvent cleaning fluid. The film comes up out of the magazine on the right-hand side (as you look at the illustration), passes through the inspection device (marked X) and so on across to the other end of the machine, where it is run through drying tapes over a side idler pulley and on down to the magazine.

When the film having any kind of fault such as improper splice, passes through detection device X, the machine is instantly and automatically stopped, the faulty part stopping in front of the attendant. The machine may be so set that it will stop at every splice, regardless of whether it be a faulty one or not. This, however, is at the will of the attendant. If a certain switch is thrown in one direction, it will do this. If the switch is in the other direction, it will stop only when there is a faulty part in the film.

The ordinary speed at which this machine works is about five minutes to each 1,000 feet of film.

The cost of cleaning is less than half a cent per reel, and considering the quality of the work turned out, the output per day per inspector is very much greater. By this I mean that if an inspector did the same quality of work the machine does, she could not inspect the same amount of film in any where near the same length of time.

Excellence of film inspection is a very important matter, indeed. Excellence of inspection operates to very materially reduce the fire hazard. It operates to reduce the number of faults appearing upon the screen. High class inspection is, in fact, highly desirable from any and every view point.

As to the cleaning end of it, it is a deplorable but well known fact that unless the films be cleaned regularly and completely, they become literally smeared with oil and dirt, the oil, of course, helping in the process of collecting dirt and dust. The results are very harmful to both the image and the sound. Therefore, it is but reasonable to assume that the use of these machines in exchanges would materially improve the results on the theatre screens.

LICENSING PROJECTIONISTS ACCORDING TO ABILITY

THE PROVINCE of Ontario in Canada has adopted something that appeals to me as being highly valuable. Viewed from some angles, it seems to be something not only of high value to the profession of projection itself, but also of very large value to both the motion picture industry and the public.

I refer to the re-examination recently held there and to the fact that the Province now issues graded licenses to the motion picture projectionist, one of which I am able to show you through the courtesy of Brother Elliott, vice-president of the Toronto local. Mr. Elliott was good enough to give me a photostat of his license made for the purpose of publication.

It is barely possible that the making of this copy constitutes a technical transgression, but if so, I am very sure the authorities of Ontario will forgive the sin in consideration of the purpose.

You will observe that Brother Elliott's card is a Grade A. In other words, the highest grade issued by the Province. There were a large number of Ontario projectionists who, because of their refusal or failure to heed my warning through years past, were unable to secure a Grade A license—and here is the big point: In the very nature of things, all these men want a Grade A license. Therefore the net result is going to be that the men holding Grade B licenses are going to work and study hard until they can enter Grade A. Within a very short while, projection in the Province of Ontario will be very largely in the hands of Grade A men, who, by the very fact that they are Grade A men, will be considered as first class motion picture-sound projectionists.

It has been pretty tough on the Ontario men. This re-examination came upon them like a bolt out of the blue. It set them really working and studying, as I have said before, but if you had made note of the pride—justifiable pride—with which Brother Elliott has exhibited his Grade A, you would have understood that in the end Ontario men are going to be well pleased, indeed, that the thing came about.

I have said, and I again say, that the Ontario officials responsible for the re-examination and grading of license cards deserve the sincere thanks of the industry. It is an act which should be emulated by authorities in every province, state and city in which motion picture projectionists licenses are issued. Incidentally, by the way, you will note that this is not an "operators" license, but it is a motion picture projectionist license that has been issued—another evidence of the progressiveness of the Province of Ontario.

ONE—OR TWO PROJECTIONISTS?

I AM in receipt of a letter from the general manager of a Canadian Amusement enterprise, operating a large chain of theatres, in which I am requested to supply information concerning, and supporting, the theory that one licensed projectionist, with an apprentice, is sufficient to take charge of a projection room. I have replied to this gentleman by mail, but feel it is right and proper also that, without divulging the name or location of his company, I deal with the matter in the department, because it is one of large importance.

Granting that where nothing but motion pictures are shown, the equipment consisting merely of two or three projectors and the necessary sound equipment, it is physically possible for one man to handle the equipment, I nevertheless hold that unless the sound equipment be very simple, one man cannot possibly do the work efficiently, either in the matter of upkeep or in results produced. As to an apprentice assistant, I do not consider that as of importance, except, perhaps, in the last part of the apprenticeship.

If an apprentice be trusted to do things with which he has had but slight experience, and of which he presumably has very little knowledge, in the very nature of things it follows that he will not do them in the best possible manner, and in the projection room there is only one right way to do things, and that is the best possible way. If things are not done in the best way, the results will inevitably be damaged.

Down in Pennsylvania some years ago, a young man named Samuel Rothafel started a small picture theatre over his father's place of business. Right at the beginning of his career as an exhibitor, Samuel Rothafel adopted, almost as a religion, the idea that anything but the best was taboo. If a thing cost $100, and there was another thing available that cost twice as much, but which would produce either higher class results, or results more efficient in up-keep, Rothafel paid the price and got the better article.

From that little room, Samuel Rothafel carried that idea to Broadway, and literally all over the country. He never, so far as I know, receded even so much as an inch from this plan, though men aspiring to be his rivals ridiculed his so-called "prodigality." Today Sam Rothafel has become the world's highly respected "Roxy."

Gentlemen, I have set this forth as evidence that while, of course, anything in the form of waste should not be tolerated, still it is not necessarily evidence that a thing is expensive that its cost is high. It is just plain horse-sense to assume that two men in a projection room in which sound apparatus is installed will give better service and better results than one man could possibly give. It also is fair to assume that two competent projectionists will give better service than can be given by one man and an apprentice, particularly in the earlier stage of the apprenticeship. It is only commonsense to assume that the equipment will be much better cared for, hence the cost of the up-keep will be less and its length of life prolonged, to say nothing of the certainty of better results.

In all this, please understand that I am not referring to small theatres having very simple sound equipment. There is room for the application of reason and commonsense in all things, and it is hardly to be expected that the very small theatre can employ two projectionists. The possible patronage may be too limited to justify the expense of employing a second man, except an apprentice, whose pay is presumed to be partially taken care of by the knowledge and experience being acquired.

DIDN'T KNOW HOW BUT HE DID IT!

FROM Elman Wood, projectionist of Bovill in the northern part of Idaho, comes a letter setting forth certain facts concerning an invention of his which seems to be new and novel and to have possible value. He says:

"I am a small-town projectionist who started shooting things at the screen at the mature age of 14 years. Am 26 now, hence have a dozen years' experience, all of which was 'silent' until last fall, when friend employer decided to install sound.

"For reasons of economy in cost, sound on-disc was selected, the equipment being purchased from an exhibitor who had replaced it by sound-on-film equipment. At the same time we acquired two Motiograph DeLuxe projectors. And right there Old Man trouble raised his head, snorted at me and began to snap at my heels. Although I had never even seen one, I was elected to install the outfit, and that, too, without instructions of any sort, or even a wiring diagram.

"Well, Friend Richardson, I knew all I could do was fail, so being a fairly good electrician and having some knowledge of radio, I mentally spit on by hands, rolled my sleeves far above my elbows and tackled the job.

"I first removed the old projectors and all wiring. Then I rewired the room, set up the new projectors, turntables, amplifier, etc., installed the screen and horns and draped the auditorium. It certainly was one tough proposition. Often I nearly had to pour water on what few brains I possess to keep them from burning up.

"Well, finally things were finished and we previewed and projected out first sound picture, Al Jolson in 'Big Boy,' on December 5, 1930. It seems incredible, but believe it or not, from then until now we have received many very sincere compliments on our sound. So far as we know there has not been even so much as one complaint, while some who have visited theatres in Spokane, Wash., our nearest large city, tell us our sound is equal to the best they have heard there. My one ambition now is to be a first-class sound projectionist. How much experience must I have to be that, Mr. Richardson?"

I cannot answer that question intelligently, Friend Wood. The time necessary to attain success in any line of work depends upon (a) individual capacity to learn, which varies widely in different men or women, and (b) the intelligence and energy with which the job of learning is attacked.

Some men learn very quickly. Other individuals would never become proficient in any line of work requiring high skill, did they work at it for 100 years. They lack capacity to learn.

However, if you can do what you say you have done, certainly you have capacity to learn and should make very good progress, indeed, if you have the necessary energy and stick-to-it-iveness.

Knowledge — real knowledge — is not merely a matter of knowing that if we move a certain lever, certain wheels will revolve. The man who has real knowledge not only knows the wheels rotate, but also knows exactly how and why they rotate, what is accomplished by the rotation and precisely how it is accomplished. The man who merely knows that when he closes a certain switch certain vacuum tubes light up, has next to no knowledge at all. The real man will not be satisfied with that. He will want to know, and soon will know, just why and how these tubes function, and all details of the results of that functioning.

CONFIDENCE AND COURTESY

RECENTLY I wrote to the authorities of each Canadian Province asking for samples of their projectionists' license cards. I requested that these cards be made out to John Doe, and if necessary, they be marked "sample." They reported as requested—all but Alberta, which sent the card shown herewith.

This courteous act displayed a confidence in me that I deeply appreciate.

However, I am not showing you this card merely on this account. I want you to take note of the inscription, "First Class." All Canadian licenses are now graded. To get a first class license, the applicant must, I am told, pass a good stiff competent examination. There is also an apprentice card issued.

I have communicated with G. P. Barber, chief inspector of theatres, suggesting that the wording of the Alberta license be altered to read, "is hereby licensed under the 'Theatre Act' to project motion pictures and to handle synchronized sound equipment or other similar apparatus in conjunction therewith."

As you all know, I have always objected to the phrase, "operate machines." The term suggests that the man is merely a mechanic, whereas I hold that a competent motion picture sound projectionist, or even a competent motion picture projectionist, is very much more than that.

SUPPRESSION OF COMMENTS

RECENTLY in conversation with an official of one of the great corporations engaged in sound work, I was impressed by a remark he made. It was a simple one, but nevertheless I cannot name the officer who made it without danger of involving him in serious trouble, for be it known that some great corporations will permit no employe, or even any officer (save the very head himself) to talk for publication, or even to express any opinion regarding sound apparatus or other matters having to do with reproduction and projection. Were I to quote the remark in question and name the official who made it, there might be trouble in store for him.

I mention this partly by way of explanation as to why I frequently refuse to print names, or tell just where I got certain information.

There are two basic reasons for this attitude. First, it admittedly might lead to more or less confusion if a corporation employing hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of men permitted them to talk indiscriminately and unrestrainedly for publication, or to express opinions which might mistakenly be accepted as by authority of the corporation itself. That much must be admitted.

However, there is a secondary reason which most emphatically is not right. Some great corporations gradually, with their enormous growth, seem to acquire the idea that they are entirely self-sufficient. They are so great and so very wise, they reason, that they should be permitted to run just about everything their own way, without advice, let or hindrance. They resent Richardson or any one else attempting to do what they call "butting into their affairs," failing to remember the fact that others besides themselves are on the job helping to build up the motion picture industry and might have been on that job years before the corporation was in the business. Some such concerns fail to take into consideration the fact that if this work, a large proportion of which was done absolutely without payment, had not been done through the years past and gone, they certainly would have had a very much harder time introducing sound and making it popular.

The remark cited was very simple and very obviously true. The man said, "Mr. Richardson, there is far more damage done to sound results by faults in projection and by failure to keep projection and sound equipment in a good state of repair, than by basic faults in sound equipment itself."

Sound equipment and projection equipment put out by reputable manufacturers is now almost invariably good. Much of it is capable of delivering results that both the exhibitor and the projectionist may well be proud of—that is, it is capable of doing that when in a perfect state of repair and adjustment. But the sad fact remains that only a relatively small percentage of equipment is kept in perfect repair and adjustment. This is not so much the fault of the projectionists (though they cannot be held entirely blameless) as of theatre managers who fail or refuse to supply those things necessary to proper maintenance.

As a matter of fact, it would be useless to deny that projection equipment, including sound, of course, is sometimes in a rather shameful state of disrepair for no other reason than that the management will not permit of repairs being made by repair men, or will not even supply replacement parts requested by the projectionist.

I have many times said, and again say, that such a policy spells financial loss. The management proposes to sell something to the public and then proceeds to make it impossible to place the goods before the public in the best manner. Put in another way, the management proceeds deliberately to reduce the value of the goods it has for sale by forcing a reduction in the beauty of the picture or a reduction in sound values, or both, all to save relatively a few dollars in "overhead."

Gentlemen, the man we started talking about was wholly right. The equipment itself is all right. It will deliver the goods, provided both the projectionist and management does its part. If either fail, then the box office will be the goat, and I don't mean maybe, either!

With the advance that equipment designing and manufacturing has made, it is perchance a pretty safe bet these days that when the sound is wrong, the apparatus at fault is walking around on two legs instead of being attached to the floor. And if not two-legged apparatus in the projection room, then the blame probably lies at the door marked "Manager." And if not there, then at the door of the higher-up, who, mayhap, has ordered cuts in overhead without pointing out the less important spots in the theatre where economy can be safely made.

COPPER ON REFLECTOR

A LETTER from Walker Baughman, manager of the Grand Opera House at Circleville, O., says, "I am stumped! Have a Hertner Transverter—a double 35, supplying two Peerless reflector arc lamps. Use 200-mm. diameter positive carbons, and 200-mm. copper-coated negatives. Using 18 amperes of current.

"I find particles of copper on the reflector, which same I am unable to remove by any process of cleaning I know of. Have looked all through the Bluebooks but they don't tell me how to do it, so far as I can see. Can find nothing strong enough to dissolve the copper particles. Please tell me how to get them off."

The Bluebooks don't tell you how to do it for the very simple reason that it can't be done, save by scraping—and if you do that, you will find the surface of the reflector under the spot to be ruined as to reflective power.

ARTICLE NAMED WRONG CITY

IN THE ARTICLE in the July 4th issue, entitled "A Theatre That Two Boys Built," the city in which this "theatre" is located was given as Jersey City—by what curious process I know not. The home of George and Morrow, Jr., Applegate, who created the unique little show place in the basement thereof, is in Brooklyn. Of course, the information concerning their interesting venture is not affected, only it is but fair to them that all statements regarding it be true. You who read this article, please make a mental correction as to the city in which the Applegate boys' "Dewey theatre" is located—Brooklyn, N. Y., not Jersey City, N. J.

A STRANGE NEW VOICE IN OLD MALAYSIA

a sound engineer writes from Singapore

By H. E. McFARLAND

TALKIES BOUGHT this writer's ticket to Malaysia, and Malaysia it will be until contracts for sound system installations stop rolling in. But the orders continue to come in, and theatres in the "S.S.," "F.M.S.," India, Japan or China, to open with sound in elegantly ceremonious style.

Consider, for example, the Capitol theatre, Malacca, which was recently equipped by the writer. For two nights preceding the opening the theatre was given over to a Chinese benefit show. The proprietor and sole owner of the Capitol is Mr. Tan Soo Sim, a member of the oldest family in Malacca and reputedly several times, a millionaire. The benefit was given to aid The Repatriation of Chinese Destitutes Fund. In between the opening sketch and the play, Mr. Yeo Joay Tee, on behalf of the Seng Cheong Society, thanked Mr. Tan Soo Sim for the loan of the theatre and made him a presentation of firecrackers, besides other gifts, and also presented a beautiful basket of flowers to Mrs. Tan Soo Sim. The Malacca Guardian reports the opening in the following manner:

"He [Mr. Tan Soo Sim] signalized the event—certainly an event of note in the history of Malacca—by holding an 'At Home' in the afternoon, to which were invited his many friends in and about Malacca. . . . Tea was served from 3 p.m., and guests were accommodated at tea-tables laid on the ground floor and top floor verandahs. . . . The first public show in the new theatre was timed for 6:15 p.m., but long before that, crowds began to flock in, and the ticket offices were kept busy. When the curtain opened and the first film flashed on the screen, a good house had assembled, and for some while after there was a constant dropping in of 'late-comers.' . . . The second show, commencing at 9:15 p.m., drew on Saturday night a bumper house. . . . At this show the Phoenix Aerated Water Company served free their products to the audience. . . . We have a similar tale to tell of the houses which the Capitol drew on Sunday. . . . A representative of this paper moved about the house during the performances to 'see and hear.' He sat in the various classes of seats and in different parts of the hall. And he was satisfied with the projection and especially pleased with the color effects introduced. As to the reproduction of sound, he declares that he heard clearly and that he has not seen and heard better talkies in any other theatre in Malay, India or Burma. Indeed, he says, 'Malacca's Premier Talkie House' is better than many he has been in."

The Capitol in Malacca.

The largest and most elaborate installation in all this vast region is probably the Capitol theatre in Singapore. This house is completely equipped with both synchronous and non-synchronous equipment and an additional amplifier which may be used to operate a horn in the cafe during the show by a switching arrangement from the non-synchronous reproducers. The projection room is 80 feet wide, 12 feet deep, and 15 feet high. All the projection equipment is of the latest design, as far as it is known in this part of the world. In the Federated Malay States, cab tyre-sheathed, and lead-covered wire is used instead of conduit and is run along the walls on wood battens and held in place by lead tape. The room also houses a lighting effect machine. The auditorium has a seating capacity of 1.612. Acousti-Celotex covers the dome. The small portion at the top of the dome may be slid back on clear nights. The screen is 22 feet wide but may be automatically enlarged to 27 feet for special color ensembles and choruses.

Joe Fisher, who is manager, has given Singapore something in the way of entertainment that was undreamed of a short time ago. Included in the theatre building is a first class restaurant, elevators, a modern ventilating system and two bars, not to mention a dance floor and midget golf course.

Another theatre recently opened is the Ritz in Singapore. Its program carries greetings from the Roxy and Ritz theatres, with every good wish for "A Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year to our present and future patrons," and goes on to say, "The late Apollo theatre Geyland removes its present Talkie Equipment and installs the Western Electric Sound System equipment which will be here from America by air mail today."

This announcement, it might be noted, was the first intimation we had that a direct airway between Singapore and the U. S. A. was being established. The Ritz opened on January 1, 1931, the installation having been started on December 26, and completed on New Year's Eve. This established a speed record for Singapore, former installations taking anywhere from 10 to 15 days.

At the present writing, Singapore is completely Western Electric sound-systemed. Six equipments are now operating and another one is being installed. All told,

Western Electric has 32 equipments in theatres in this territory. Sixteen of them are in Java, five in Sumatra, and 12 in Malaysia. Six locally hired engineers service these theatres. Troubles which were considerable at first have been reduced at a minimum through experience gained with local conditions.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WILL YOU oblige me by giving me the following information at your earliest convenience, because the lease which I have on my present theatre runs out within the next 30 days and as I want to renew my lease for a long period, and the owner is willing to remodel the theatre, I would certainly appreciate it if you would let me know what can be done with the present house to enlarge same.

The seating capacity is only 640, which is entirely too inadequate and should be at least 1,200. The owner feels that should he expend a large amount of money, the results of the remodeling should be so effective and the capacity so large that he should not have to be afraid that any other operating company would be induced to build a new theatre in this city. While this is a good show town, a house having 1,200 seats would be all that is necessary, and the town is not large enough for two theatres to make a profit. The present house is 52 feet wide, and 200 feet deep, alley in the rear and on the left side and exit court to the right. The lobby is only 12 feet wide. There are two stores 80 feet deep. The stage is all right, but the biggest trouble, I think, is the low ceiling in the auditorium, which is only 18 feet high. We do not use the stage for anything else but for the horns and screen.

Enclosed find rough sketch of floor plan which I hope will be clear enough for you to interpret.

Could you plan a balcony in the house and could we increase the seating capacity of the auditorium? The owner is willing to spend about $40,000. Can it be done for this amount?

I have to equip the house. need new projection machines, screen, etc. Will $15,000 cover the cost of equipment, including electric light fixtures, carpets and new seats?

I hope you will pardon my long inquiry and trust I have not overstepped the privileges extended to the subscribers of your magazine, of which I have been one for a great many years.—H. L. F.

The Answer:

ACCORDING to your letter head, I notice that your theatre is located in Ohio, and we must follow the Ohio State Code. If we install a balcony the house must be of fireproof construction. If there is no basement under the auditorium, and the floor is of concrete, you will have no trouble, as we have to raise the roof anyhow. Therefore I suggest that if the present roof is not fireproof you build up the side walls to the required height, build in a new fire-proof roof and then demolish the present roof after the house is enclosed.

Incidentally, I have a similar proposition in my office now and it works out very satisfactorily. You can increase the seating capacity to 900 on the auditorium floor by cutting the depth of the store rooms to about 40 feet. This will leave you enough space for foyer, women's and men's rooms, offices and stairs to balcony between the back of the stores, and the auditorium standee wall.

I notice on your sketch that the store to the left is 22 feet wide. Why not use that room for lobby and make a small store out of present lobby? Build your new balcony fire-proof, with a seating capacity of 300 seats, as this only requires two exit stairs, one on each side of balcony. Over the foyer, which should be about 12 feet wide, you will have ample space for your projection room. You must, of course, figure on an entirely new plumbing system, and your heating system (if boiler has ample capacity) can be extended by placing new radiators where necessary. Generally the boilers are large enough, but you may take the matter up with your local heating contractor.

The present electric wiring system will have to be removed and an entirely new system installed. I believe that $4,000 will take care of this remodeling at the present time, as prices are very low now, and do not forget today is the buyer's market. As far as $15,000 for equipment is concerned, I am afraid your figure is too low, as the seats, for instance, alone might run about $1,100. I suggest that you consult a theatre architect, as it requires quite a little study to obtain the best results for the least amount of money.

The Question:

I AM thinking of purchasing a lot in the center of our town to build a new theatre. The best lot obtainable is 66x135 feet, with an alley in the rear, and one on the left side.

I want about two store rooms and one large room for rental purposes on the second floor. I do not want a balcony or stage but a large platform for the screen and speakers. Will you tell me how many seats I can get in the auditorium and how large the stores will be? I will be very much obliged to you for sending or publishing this information at once, as my option on the lot runs out soon. Please tell me what the lowest cost of such a theatre will be. I want a good looking house, if possible an atmospheric house, as there is no such house within a radius of 75 miles from here. Thanking you very kindly for this information.—S. B. S.

The Answer:

YOU WILL be able to get about 720 seats in the auditorium. The stores will be about 28 feet deep, and the stage or platform about 15 feet deep. Make your proscenium about 38 feet wide.

This kind of a house lends itself very favorably to an atmospheric scheme, but make your ceiling height at least 25 feet from the low part of the auditorium floor. The lowest cost of such a house would be approximately from $50,000 to $52,000.

I think that with judicious spending of that amount of money you could build a theatre for your town that would be adequate for some time to come.

You may think that amount of money a little large for the type of house you have in mind, but since your site would be in the heart of the business district, you would be in a very advantageous position, and you should build for the future as well as the present.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

ASBESTOS SCREEN

● A new sound screen, the essential material of which is asbestos, has just been brought out by the Keasbey & Mattison Company of Ambler, Pa., one of the country's leading manufacturers of asbestos products. The screen is being marketed by the National Theatre Supply Company under the name of "Visibestone."

The screen is the result of the development of a process in which asbestos is formed into rod-like threads, which are woven together to make the reflective surface. Over these threads is laid a highly reflective surfacing material.

The announcement of the manufacturers is especially interesting because of their claim that the screen gives the picture a noticeable stereoscopic quality. It also tells something of the development of this product.

"For many years," it is set forth, "there was little improvement in motion picture screens beyond the early stages of stretching a white sheet. Of recent years, however, the introduction of the talking picture has required that definite engineering consideration be given the screen.

"Believing all that was required of a screen was to reflect light, a number of persons have experimented with screens having metallized surfaces or small reflecting beads. Such screens do reflect more light directly at the point from which it is projected, but in doing so they rob light from the angles at which the audience will view the picture. As a consequence, the picture is dull and muddy, when viewed from side angles, and coarse and garish when viewed from directly in front. Eyestrain is frequently caused by screens having surfaces of this nature, which are technically called 'specular.' Scientific measurements show a tremendous variation in the light that is reflected from various angles.

"One of the serious handicaps to good projection in many theatres is the large number of seats at the side and near the front of the house, in which the picture is distorted or lacking in sufficient light to be easily seen. This new screen entirely overcomes this objection because of the rod-like structure, since light is reflected from the round surface of these rods into the remote angles of the theatre. Comparing a picture on this screen with a flat screen approximates the difference between seeing with two eyes or one, or comparing a photograph with its newspaper reproduction.

"The scientific design of the ideal theoretical screen for relief picture projection depends upon the critical relationship between the shape of the rods and the refractive index of the material. Here again, in asbestos, nature has provided ideal material for this purpose. Each of these asbestos threads consists of a multitude of fine, glass-like fibres, which results in a soft and even reflection of the light. Combined with these properties, a special surfacing material is employed which increases the normal light reflection value. As a result, scientific tests have shown a uniformly high light reflection from this screen at all angles at which it is possible to be viewed in a motion picture theatre. While such measurements are of value, they do not indicate the full degree of improvement gained by this rod-like construction in eliminating the distortion and giving a brilliant picture even at the extreme sides of the theatres."

The Visibestone screen, being an asbestos product, is, of course, fireproof and non-combustible. It has been approved, we are informed, by Electrical Research Products, Inc.

The curtain of the Fox Arlington theatre in Santa Barbara, Cal., which forms a dynamic part of the entire auditorium design. The drop was painted by the Armstrong Studios of Los Angeles, from a sketch by John M. Gamble.

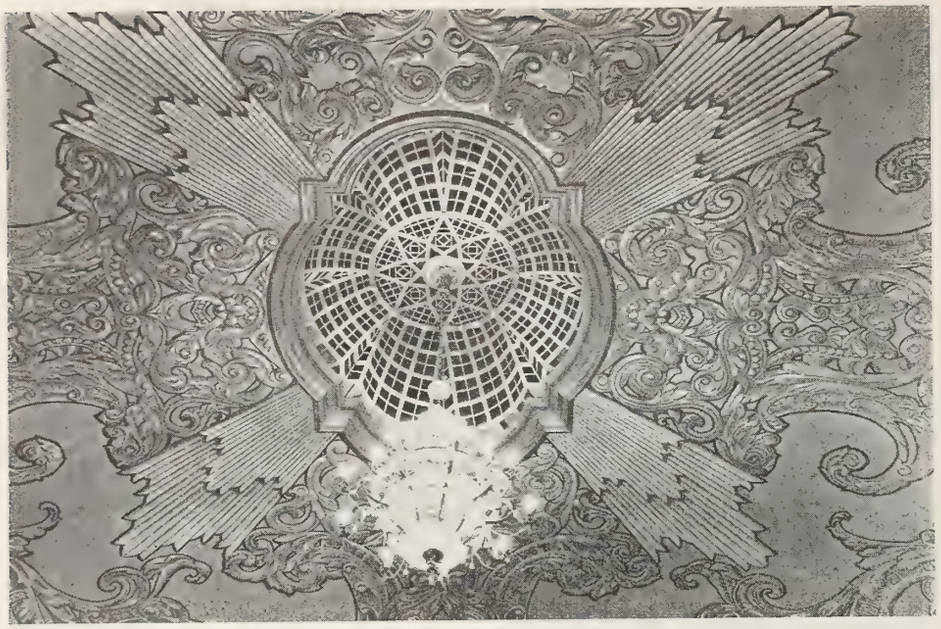
LIGHT VERSUS BUGS!

● Here is a way to get rid of summertime bugs and insects (if your house is troubled with such) that I'll bet you never heard of before. I never did myself until the other day, when K. C. King of the Reynolds Electric Company of Chicago, told me that his company was actually recommending their color hoods for lamps for this very purpose, following tests that showed such a method to be practicable.

As is well known, Reynolds manufactures Reco and Laco color hoods in any number of colors, and hoods of this type have now been developed as aids in eliminating insect pests. The action of the hoods in this connection, of course, lies in substituting the white light attractive to insects, with colored light, and the hoods do this without reducing actual transmission of light.

Reco hoods are being made for white lamps of from 10 to 60 watts, while Laco hoods are designed for lamps of from 75 to 500 watts. There are also plates for floodlights. The colors recommended for the anti-insect campaign are green, amber and canary yellow.

Some of the more than 500 Army airplanes that participated in a test of American air defense over New York City, giving millions a new kind of show. And though aviation is not show business, what showman is not thrilled by a sight like this? An interesting fact that does have direct connection with the talking picture theatre is that the fleet carried over 5,000 Duovac tubes for its radio equipment.



Section of the winning design in the International Register Company's 1931 Cutawl Displaymen's contest. It is by T. H. Buell, Denver architect, and forms the decorative feature of the work of R. M. McEnderfer of the Rocky Mountain Celotex Company of Denver, in treating the Tabor theatre of that city for acoustical correction.

CUT-OUT DECORATION

● Elsewhere in these columns appears a picture of one of the most interesting solutions of the problem of making acoustical material decorative, that this desk has observed in some time. The ornamental effect was created by cutting acoustic tile into a pattern, and the design pictured won first prize in the 1931 Cutawl Displaymen's contest in which 150 designers participated. It is the work of R. M. McEnderfer of the Rocky Mountain Celotex Company of Denver.

Mr. McEnderfer's work covered the use of the Cutawl manufactured by the International Register Company of Chicago, which firm conducted the contest, in remodeling the interior of the Tabor theatre in Denver. More than 14,000 square feet of Acousti-Celotex, seven-sixteenths inch in thickness, were applied in multiple thicknesses to the plaster wall and ceiling surfaces. The raised decorations formed in this way were then painted with oil paints. The designs themselves were conceived by Temple H. Buell, Denver architect.

This was, by the way, the first time that the first prize in these Cutawl contests was awarded for work done in the motion picture field.

NEW GIFT NOVELTY

● Another new novelty article for theatre gift nights soon is to be put in production at the Athol, Mass., factory of Pyroloid Sales Company, manufacturers and distributors of dresserware sets used for premium performances.

Success of the gold decorated quartz sets recently introduced, the company announces, has brought demand for further extension of the line to enable repeats of the gift night exploitation with other articles of feminine appeal at theatres which have established the stunt as an attraction.

A special representative of Pyroloid now is making a tour of the country by plane to service theatres using the quartz Pyroloid and obtain exhibitor views regarding new

METAL MESH SCREEN

● A new sound screen has been put on the market by the Raven Screen Corporation. It is a type developed by the Whiting & Davis Company of Plainville, Mass., employing a flat aluminum metal mesh, a material which has been patented by the latter company. One of the screens has already been installed at Loew's Astor theatre at 46th Street and Broadway, New York.

Laboratory tests reported by both Electrical Research Products, Inc., and RCA, showed that over a frequency range of from 55 to 6,000 cycles, the sound attenuation of this aluminum screen is uniform.

The metal construction is, of course, the basis for claims of a number of outstanding qualities of this screen. One is durability, another is the absense of resonance. The metallic material also makes the screen fireproof and capable of being easily cleaned—at least that is the claim, and it's a logical one.

The screen is made in one sheet, without seams. However, it can be rolled for shipment. The aluminum basis makes it of light weight for both handling and shipping, while its metallic construction allows it to be hung without frames heavy enough to stretch it. A picture of this product appears elsewhere in these columns (if y'ed is a good fellow).

BY WAY OF NEWS

● The Chicago Cinema Equipment Company has taken over the Gallagher Orchestra Equipment Company of Chicago, acquiring all of the latter's stock, good will and other assets. The Gallagher line will henceforth be manufactured by the former concern—as their announcement of the acquisition asserts—"with the endeavor to maintain the same standard of the Gallagher company at all times."

Half of the exhibit space in the Second International Heating and Ventilating Exposition has already been sold, according to officials of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers—this even though the exposition will not be held until January 25-29. The second display therefore bids fair to outdo the first one held in Philadelphia last year. The 1932 affair will have its headquarters, according to present plans, at the Cleveland Public Auditorium Annex.

The aluminum mesh screen developed by the Whiting & Davis Company and put on the market by the Raven Screen Corporation. Examining it are Gilda Gray, stage celebrity, and Charles A. Whiting, president of Whiting & Davis.

LIGHTING EQUIPMENT

● A new catalog has been issued by Kliegl Brothers (321 W. 50th Street, New York) on its comprehensive line of theatrical decorative and spectacular lighting equipment. This booklet is known as Catalog A.

Almost every item in the line is illustrated, by both photographs and diagrams, showing operation as well as general design. Kliegl product includes, of course, almost every type of apparatus used in modern lighting, in both theatre and studio, and this catalog is well arranged for ready reference to the prices and styles in this line.

The booklet is well printed (though some economy in production has resulted in a type-size a little smaller than usual) on enamel paper, cover stock being the same as that of the body. There are 18 numbered pages.

LENSES AND STEREOS

● The Bausch & Lomb Optical Company (679 St. Paul Street, Rochester, N. Y.) has issued a brochure on its stereopticons, and a folder on its "Super-Cinephor" lenses.

The stereopticons are covered comprehensively in text and photographic illustrations, each of a wide variety of items being described as to both design and operation. The line ranges from educational to commercial stereos, and includes such special models as a projector for only opaque objects, a display projector, a daylight projector, another to project individual pictures printed on motion picture film, one for showing minute objects greatly enlarged, a special lecture projector so designed that the lecturer can face his audience and operate the machine while the latter throws the image on a screen above and behind him—and so on. The booklet also presents a line of screens.

The stereopticon brochure consists in 22 pages (excluding covers), and is clearly printed on enamel stock of durable quality. The pages measure 3½x6⅓ inches.

SYNCHRONOUS MOTORS

● The large line of synchronous motors manufacured by The Ideal Electric & Manufacuring Company (Mansfield, O.) is presented in Catalog No. 520. Each item is pictured and fully described as to both design, purpose and operation, while elaborate key charts are given for each type.

of a written contract. However, since the date was written on the margin of the contract and it was not merely a verbal statement, the court held that the jury was entitled to consider it in rendering its verdict to determine the legal status of the contracting parties. This court said:

"Evidence tending to establish that the date inserted on the margin of the contract was so inserted by the agent and that it was agreed and consented to was admissible over the objection that it sought by parol to vary or add to a written contract."

Use of Books in Suit

CONSIDERABLE controversy has existed from time to time regarding the right of a seller of theatre supplies to introduce his books or ledgers as evidence in suits against theatre owners to prove the sale and delivery of merchandise.

Generally speaking, in order that a seller's account book be admissible as evidence, the book must contain the seller's original entries or the first permanent records of the transaction. When the contrary is discoverable upon the face of the books, or is disclosed by the testimony, the book will be rejected. Conversely books of original entry are admissible, notwithstanding the fact that the entries therein may possibly have been transferred to other books.

Also, it is important to know that if the entries were transcribed from a card, or other memorandum, in which they were first entered for a temporary purpose, the first entry of the charges is regarded as a memorandum preparatory to permanent transactions, and the entry in the regular book of accounts is deemed to be the first and original entry. In other words, if the original record was intended by the seller to be temporary, it is not deemed to be the original and the book on which the memorandum is copied must be presented in court as evidence of the transaction. Moreover, it is not necessary that the temporary memorandum should be made by the seller himself. It may be made by his employe and afterward entered by the seller in his book of original entries.

Another important point of the law is that when an indebtedness exists upon an open account and thereafter the buyer and seller agree that the account is correct, the seller may sue upon either the original account or upon the account stated. If he sues on the original account the purchaser's agreement regarding correctness of the account only has the effect of an admission because the account stated as a contract, is waived. However, if the suit is brought on the account, and if an agreement is found to exist, then, in the absence of fraud or mistake, the purchaser is absolutely bound thereby. On the other hand, circumstances may exist under which a seller is not compelled to positively prove the amount of materials sold and delivered to a party being sued. This condition may arise when the purchaser regularly receives monthly statements and does not complain that the same are incorrect.

For illustration, in Welch-Sandler Company vs. Mullins (31 S. W. [2d] 86), it was disclosed that a company regularly sold considerable quantities of material and sent monthly statements to the purchaser. Later when the company was compelled to file suit against the purchaser to recover the amount due it was contended that introduction of the company's books was not allowable because the entries were taken from memorandums not proven to have been correct. However, since it was proved that the purchaser had received the monthly statements without comment, the higher court held the company entitled to a judgment for the amount of its account.

with a constant trend to bigger pictures. However, it should be dependent on the conditions of the house and the equipment. Briefly, selection should be determined ac cording to the following considerations:

(1) Study the lines of sight from the side seats and rear seats beneath the balcony to determine the maximum size possible.

(2) For standard pictures, it is best to use a size under 18x24 feet.

(3) The maximum width for good viewing in front seats is equal to the distance of screen to front seats. This also keeps distortion to a reasonable limit.

(4) The minimum desirable screen width, because of viewing from farthest seats, is one-sixth of the distance of screen to the farthest seats.

(5) If light on the screen at present is just sufficient, the screen should not be enlarged. (See Table of Limitations.)

(6) With a screen modifier there should be at least 10 feet of distance between standard and large-screen sizes.

(7) The bottom of the screen should be a maximum of 18 inches from the stage floor.

(8) A standard size should be selected.

SCREENS should be carefully and properly installed, according to the manufacturer's directions. Much time will thus be saved, and there is less likelihood of harm to the screen. Screens should not be stretched extremely taut, as this is injurious to them.

Cleaning methods to date have proved ineffective and often harmful to the surface of sound screens. Replacement of surfaces, in some cases, has been successful, but usually has been only temporarily effective, or actually harmful. The problem has therefore resolved itself to keeping the surface as free from dust and dirt as possible.

In the first place, air should be prevented from circulating through the screen. All doors back stage should be closed, and if necessary the screen should be backed, right to the horns, with a closely woven nonporous material.

Secondly, the screen should be protected from dirt when not in use. At night, when cleaners are at work, a curtain should be closed in to keep this dirt from settling on the screen.

Thirdly, all overhead draperies and other surroundings should be kept clean, so that dust will not fall from them to the screen.

TO START WITH, I mentioned some rather astonishing figures regarding the cost of dirt accumulation. These figures are adequately borne out by calculations based on a nominal 10% loss of reflection value for every three months of operation. In a dry atmosphere, it is possible to reduce this loss a little by brushing regularly, as outlined above. However, the average screen needs more.

In addition, if the house is not too wide, and has a projection angle under 20 degrees, it should have a directive screen, which has greater brilliancy within its range. If, instead of this, a white screen is used, it is necessary to have Hi-Lo lamps at 75 amperes, instead of low intensity at 25 amperes. The cost of operating the low intensity lamp at 6c. a k.w. for 12 hours of operation per day is $1.98 per day. As an example the cost of operating the Hi-Lo's is, of course, three times this range. If, instead of this, a white screen is used, it is necessary to have Hi-Lo lamps at 75 amperes, instead of low intensity at 25 amperes. The cost of operating the low intensity lamp at 6c. a k.w. for 12 hours of operation per day is $1.98 per day. The cost of operating the Hi-Lo's is, of course, three times this amount, or $5.94 per day, an increase of $3.96 per day, or about $1,465 per year. This, added to the $866 lost because of dirt, makes a total loss of $2,331—neglecting carbon and maintenance costs.

seconds. Three stops may be set and reset at rehearsal until exactly the desired effect is obtained. The program plate may at the desired time be placed instantaneously on top of the control board, then by pressing a button the entire new effect is initiated and is completed automatically without any further attention from the operator—but he is always free to modulate the automatic operation if he desires. Obviously any number of these plates can be provided, so that a rapid succession of illumination effects, all worked out in advance can be obtained.

Another method of obtaining a complete illumination change by push-button is to provide duplicate—or, if desired, a multiplicity of—control boards. A different scene is set up on each board, and a push-button-operated switch transfers control of the dimmers from one board to the other as desired. One board may be used as the main board, located in any convenient place from which a view of the stage can be obtained, with the other boards located at a remote point, forming a complete switchboard. With the program plate system, the size of the control board and the amount of wiring are kept to a minimum. The operator has only one lever to observe for each circuit, and even while the program plate is in place, the operator still has full control of the illumination. Thus one program plate may be placed on the control board and an illumination effect initiated, then a second program plate may be substituted ready for a new illumination effect, while the operator still has complete control of the illumination change that is under way.

This illumination control system may be used either with resistor-type dimmers, or with reactor-type dimmers, or both may be used on one installation. Reactor-type dimmers, if used, may be controlled either by tubes or by rheostats. The designing engineers have realized that the control of illumination is entirely distinct from the dimming medium and have so designed this system that the dimmer may be chosen as determined by conditions, taking into consideration the well known merits of both types of dimmers.

This system, of course, is not a "color organ." The control of light requires a technique quite different from that required for renditions of audible music. There is, however, a close analogy. The harmoniz-fected by taking advantage of the machine and its methods.

The architect of today, for example, finds that he can build walls of insulation slabs which have been sheathed with sheet metal on the outside and edges, the edges having been pressed with steel dies to form interlocking joints perfectly weathertight. The slabs can be made approximately four to five feet wide by eight to ten feet long, and since they weigh about ten pounds per square foot they are not too heavy to handle conveniently. The interior finish of the slab is already applied in the factory in the form of linoleum, which has been cemented under pressure to the insulation slab, and the slab then run through accurate machines which trim the edges to make hair line joints.

This wall is three times as efficient as the one-foot-thick brick wall, as far as heat retaining value is concerned, even though it is only three inches thick. This cuts the cost of heating the theatre almost in three.

The time required to erect a building of this type is approximately one-half of the usual time required. The machinery (cranes, punches, presses, etc.) available in the shops facilitates greater speed and requires less man-power. Weather conditions being constant in the shops, fabrication is not interrupted as it is on the job. Constancy of weather conditions, and minimizing the number of human hands required, permits the contractor to estimate his costs more accurately, eliminating the allowance for unforseen contingencies, which all contractors include today. Inaccuracies increase with every human hand required in fabrication—these inaccuracies are decreased tremendously by shop machine work. The erection of the metal slabs need not be by highly specialized labor demanding ridiculous wage scales, because it is so simple. The total cost of the metal building now is about 20 per cent less of the masonry-walled steel building.

The money saved in construction, by using new methods, can now be spent on making the inside of the building more comfortable. The maintenance of the metal wall is nil, so that money formerly spent on maintaining the masonry walls can be spent in adding to the personnel to serve the patron. It takes only six months to build a theatre that used to take a year, so we can save the interest on the construction money, which is idle for only six months. This saving we might divert to buying better pictures for the purpose of improving public taste.

It seems to me that it is a matter of refusing to take advantage of the advances of the age we live in, not to apply to our daily activities the new methods being daily developed. As new knowledge, new materials, new devices become known to us, our facilities and our efficiency should accordingly increase.

Applied to theatre design, this means that instead of merely accepting established practices, we should seek to use our new knowledge to realize finer buildings at lower cost to furnish them in greater comfort. The materials are certainly at hand. It is up to the architectural and theatrical leaders to adapt them to their purposes.

THE LITTLE FELLOW

by W. L. Ainsworth Reprinted from July 18, 1931, issue of Motion Picture Herald

This article of timely and interesting import concerning the theatres of the lesser cities and towns comes from the pen of an exhibitor markedly well fitted by the nature and duration of his experience to make such expression. Mr. Ainsworth operates the Garrick theatre of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. The article is taken from the annual issued in connection with the twentieth convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin held in June in Milwaukee. His argument for recognition of the institutional importance of the theatre in the small community, as an integral part of the community, cannot be set forth too often. A special interest attaches, too, to his citation of some of the exploitation advantages which the exhibitor in the lesser towns may utilize and enjoy to his own profit and that of his community.—THE EDITOR.

THE small-town theatre holds a prominent place in the motion picture industry. It commands the sincerest respect of those who make pictures and those who sell them. For, in the final check-up, it is small-town theatres that create the greatest part of the revenue for producers and the exchanges. It is a necessity in every community. It is the center of social and business life of the community. Through it, people in the small town get a visual contact with the outside world. Music, travel talks, noted plays and famous stars come to the small town through the medium of the talking picture screen.

Merchants of the small town realize the necessity of the theatre. It holds the public of the community and brings in those from nearby rural districts. For that reason, merchants are willing to co-operate with the theatre manager in advertising tie-ups that will be of mutual benefit.

In the majority of cases, the manager of the theatre is a native of his home town. He is usually active in civic movements. These things help to create good will and draw the attention of home people and those in the surrounding communities to his theatre and to attractions.

There is a belief that the key city theatre is drawing patrons away from the surrounding small-town theatre. This is true in some cases, but not where the exhibitor is "up and doing." The wide-awake small-town exhibitor realizes he is in a position to select his pictures from the entire market, because of little or no opposition in his town, while the key-city theatre, which is one of a number of theatres in its city, is obliged to take the entire output of a number of companies to assure it of a sufficient amount of product.

The small-town exhibitor can see releases in the key cities and select just what he wishes to show his patrons. He can also get the benefit of the advertising, of those pictures he chooses, from the big city papers and by playing these pictures soon after the key city showing has been made. Likewise he is in a position, because of his low operating cost in comparison to the theatres in the larger cities, to show these same pictures at a lower admission.

It is true that many people prefer, at times, to drive to other cities for a show, but if the local man is up-to-date in his pictures and right in his prices, he is in a position to receive the same kind of business from other nearby towns. If his prices are lower than those of the larger town, chances are more than even that he will retain the majority of his home-town business.

Truly the small-town theatre has its place in the sun, but the manager must take advantage of opportunity offered him. He must take pride in his theatre; keep it modernized, clean and up-to-date. He must be very critical in the selection of his pictures and, above all, must use every effort to give the public good sound reproduction—for, after all, a great many theatres today are going begging because of poor sound.

"SPORTING BLOOD" A $2 PICTURE IS COMING DIRECT TO YOUR THEATRE!

Any other company would have road-showed "Sporting Blood." Coast reviewers gave a hint of its importance when they previewed it. "Brought forth a panic of applause at the conclusion," states the Hollywood Herald. "It will be loved and cheered and wept over 'till it takes a top-notch place in this season's record," says Motion Picture Daily. Then the print came East and it became the talk of New York's film row.

"Sporting Blood" belongs in the Astor Theatre for a $2 engagement. But M-G-M will release it immediately to exhibitors. This summer, as never before, M-G-M with its release (just to name a few) of Dressler-Moran in "Politics"; Norma Shearer in "A Free Soul"; Greta Garbo in "Susan Lenox" and now "Sporting Blood" is virtually keeping hundreds of theatres alive! Exhibitors are frank in telling us that! And we are meeting the needs of exhibitors with product that is keeping seats filled. For those exhibitors who are now making deals on next season's film service it is well to bear in mind that M-G-M is more than a fair weather friend. M-G-M is your hot weather friend too, dependable when things are right and equally dependable when adverse conditions have to be faced!

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"

An Article of Critical Evaluation

An important picture has come to Broadway, important in terms that set it distinctly apart from most that has been done since the screen acquired a voice. The presentation of "An American Tragedy" at the Criterion reveals ample warrant for the controversy between Mr. Theodore Dreiser and Paramount which has been occupying the courts and the news pages these several weeks, but the considerations of import remaining now are, not between author and producer, but rather in the intrinsic character of the picture as a picture.

But, most interestingly and wholesomely, the picture will be found to be a subject of vigorous, not to say bitter, differences of opinion. Showmen will have their opinions after they have sold it, or tried to sell it to their audiences. They likely also will have some premature opinions, widely divergent. It is significant indeed that the production does not instantly fall into any of the much worn pigeon holes of habitual classification. Its many controversial aspects and points may prove to be selling points.

The picture is possibly of more importance within the industry and art of picture fabrication than as an article of merchandise. In Josef von Sternberg's direction a most skillful interrelation of the use of the camera and the microphone as instruments of narration has been achieved. They have in the main in this instance been so applied as to constitute one medium, not two.

Mr. von Sternberg's technique in this production reminds one of certain remarks of the late James McNeil Whistler, who said: "I do not give a damn what I paint my pictures with, and I would use a shoebrush, if it made a picture." In "An American Tragedy" the motion picture, sound and dialogue, and the printed word of the subtitle are all applied to the business of narration. To those persons who chance to be literate through eye and ear and with the ability to apply a modicum of understanding to language there will be no confusion or lack of a harmonious clarity. The work of the players in this picture varies from excellent to commonplace, but they are so subordinated to the business of the story in hand that neither their excellences nor their shortcomings obtrude. For once the clay in the part does the clay's job under the hands of the moulder. This to be sure may be resented by habit-deformed minds which insist on the handle of stardom.

It is pleasant to a motion picture craftsman to observe, too, that the cameraman in Mr. von Sternberg has risen to strong assertion in this picture, without any impairment of his emotional attentions.

"An American Tragedy" as presented on the screen does demand a moderate degree of intelligence and contribution from the spectator. It does not proclaim the obvious to the degree which has come to almost completely characterize motion picture style. It will not ring, or wring, the dumbbells, but that stratum of box office patronage is amply served anyway. This picture can be expected to bring to the theatre a considerable portion of a public which is not definitely committed to the motion picture habit. Whether or not it may finally confer honors on the job as a transcription of Mr. Dreiser's story to the screen, it can and will raise a wholesome discussion.

From this picture one gets the sense that Mr. Jesse Lasky has been adventuring again, and surely enough this formula laden, muchly managed art, can do with a lot of adventure. Few motion picture executives indeed, and probably no other, would have taken a chance on this unusual material at its unusual cost of acquisition and production. Yet, if this is to be and continue a show business, and a vital productive organism, it will have to follow the law of all things living and do some "living dangerously."

Happily enough, "An American Tragedy" is not epochal, it is not colossal, not even stupendous, because all those attributes belong especially to precisely what is meant by "movies." It is instead a motion picture—of which this business could use several—soon.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

THE JOURNAL OF JAMESTOWN, New York, editorializes on the thought that maybe things are not so bad in the community life of Hollywood, thus:

"It is encouraging to read that wild party habit which has always featured one side of life at Hollywood has been brought under control. It is described as the waning of the jazz age. Various reasons are assigned, one being the lack of ready money. Another is the influx of a new type of screen players made necessary by the talking films. . . .

"This is the opinion of Federal Judge Paul J. McCormick, a member of the Wickersham commission. He says theatregoers who have to work for their money want to see players work for theirs too, and they want intelligent performances also. . . ."

THE TIMES OF LOS ANGELES, proceeding to interview Nina Wilcox Putnam, the author of some twenty-one published novels, hundreds of short stories and numerous motion picture plays, records:

An era of cleanliness in films, novels and short stories is at hand, with salacious and blood-curdling literature and motion pictures relegated to the public ash heap, in the opinion of Nina Wilcox Putnam, widely-read novelist and fiction writer recently arrived in Hollywood for the purpose of writing a series of stories with a cinema background.

"Stories featuring sex and gangster interest, in novels, magazines and films, never actually topped the cleaner variety of story as box-office attractions or in popular reader appeal, despite the opinions of some picture producers," Miss Putnam said yesterday in the Hollywood home she has leased for the summer.

"In Europe and our eastern metropolitan centers the trend is away from sex and underworld attractions and toward the cleaner, more wholesome type of plot. From my experience in literary and motion-picture circles I am sure that producers and publishers are aware of this, too, and are preparing for the new era."

THE REGISTER of DANVILLE, Va., appears to feel that newspapers are a bit too touchy about some recent screen portrayals of newspaper men. In an aditorial the other day, it observed:

If the editors who object to libels on the press perpetrated by the movies want a real adversary, they may turn to "Hot News," an autobiography of tabloid journalism by Emile Gauvreau, editor of the New York Mirror, which type of journalism has a decided influence on the trend of American journalism. Before the day of tabloids the New York Times would never have devoted nearly a solid page to the Starr Faithfull murder case. Some of the soberest old ladies of American journalism put on short skirts, painted their faces, and took to the streets when the tabloids began to ring up circulation figures around 900,000. It is to the tabloid gentlemen of the press that the schools of journalism should address themselves and not to the tawdry misrepresentations of the stage. The reporters on the tabloids are not temperamental drunkards, but they are bringing journalism in the larger cities to the level of the moron mind.

JIMMY STARR, who starrdusts in THE LOS ANGELES EXPRESS, has considerable to say about recent critics of the motion picture industry, having in mind perhaps the Wodehouse yarn, the Liveright utterances, and the like. Mr. Starr records:

Yesterday I chanced to meet Howard Estabrook, who won glory and fame for his contribution to that screen classic, 'Cimarron.' Regarded as one of the most prolific scenarists in the industry today; thoroughly familiar with every phase of motion picture production, and a cool and deliberate thinker, I asked his opinion of the attacks on the fourth largest industry in the world.

"I recall when Frank Vanderlip, Jr., was called to join the National City Bank as vice president, he was merely given an office with a large desk and left severely alone. Presently he realized he had been selected because he was expected to contribute something to the organization.

"After surveying the institution, he asked one of the lesser executives: 'Where's the Bond Department?' He received a negative answer.

"Vanderlip went to work and organized the National City Company, the great bond marketing institution, now pouring great revenues into the parent company. An author placed in the same position would no doubt have looked out of the window for a year, collected his salary, and then given out an interview to the Wall Street Journal describing the incompetence of the officials of the National City Bank."

THE LEDGER-DISPATCH of NORFOLK, Va., displays a certain unfondness for some aspects of censorship in an editorial headed "Movie Board Plays Mussolini," which it comments on the barring of "Confessions of a Co-ed" on the ground that it would have "a harmful effect on co-educational institutions," saying:

As a matter of fact, the moving picture censors have nothing to do with any such question, unless the films are obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman or are of such a character that their exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite crime.

THE PRESS of HOUSTON, Texas, presents ardent words by the editor, M. E. Foster, who admits:

When "Skippy" threw himself on the bed with his little heart seemingly broken, and when a little girl in front of me cried over the death of a dog in the picture, I was not ashamed that I had to wipe something from my eyes also. I like to see such pictures presented in Houston. They are clean and wholesome. . . I wish we had more like "Seventeen," "Skippy" and "Daddy Long Legs."

Free tickets for "Daddy Long Legs" were offered by "The Press" to every mother and child unable to pay admissions.

THE STAR EAGLE of NEWARK, N. J., presents a charming example of the present journalistic technique in presenting crime items in the following dispatch:

Phillipsburg, July 21—Charged with forcing an entrance into the store of Harry Nolan at Hackettstown and stealing $89.90, Robert Andrew Kennedy, 14, and George Kennedy Pearce, 16, both of Hackettstown, were arrested by State police and held for trial. The robbery was committed, police say, after the boys attended a movie.

It is most likely that a careful investigation would show that nearly every crime committed in America in the last two decades came after the offender had "attended a movie." How long after, or what movie, makes no difference.

THE COURANT of HARTFORD, Conn., is inclined to the notion that perhaps the consuming public has something to do with the tone, quality and character of entertainment after all. It says:

Like most reformers, Mr. John S. Summer is probably too late in urging the suppression of films portraying the doings of gangsters. Because the public is tired of them, such films have already gone out of fashion. Producers whose fingers are on the pulse of popular taste are now advertising films as NOT dealing with gangsters. . . .

The films portraying gangsters have gone, or are speedily going, the way of all celluloid. To spend time urging their suppression is worse than futile. Another cinematic fad is probably now in the making. Like the fads which have preceded it, it will be based on what the producers believe the public will like. Cure the public, and you cure all.

SAM KATZ DECLARES CIRCUIT OPERATION PERMANENT SUCCESS

Brooklyn Bandits Made By Gun, Not By Screen Ideas

Investigation of the circumstances which led up to the crime for which County Judge Franklin Taylor sent two 18-year old youths of Brooklyn to the Elmira reformatory, and for which he blamed "gangster movies," has unearthed certain facts bearing upon the crime, which were lost sight of, or suppressed, in the published reports in the daily press.

Judge Lectures Industry

According to Judge Taylor, the youths, Ralph Raia and Angelo Elco, were prompted to commit the crime because of a gangster film which they had seen a few days before starting out on their ill-fated excursion of robbery. It was the "sinister effect" and the "inspirational iniquity" of this film, according to Judge Taylor, which suggested the crime and emboldened them to carry through with it. In sentencing the youths, Judge Taylor took occasion to read a sharp lecture to the motion picture industry, and to warn the parents of the nation of their duty and obligation to their children to protect them against the "insidious influence" of these "pernicious" pictures.

An investigation inspired by Judge Taylor's attack upon the motion picture industry, establishes the fact that motion pictures had little, if anything whatever, to do with the crime which prompted his widely published outburst. The facts are that both youths, for months before the actual commission of the crime for which they were sent to the reformatory, had been living the life of hoodlums and associating with gangsters and gunmen in several parts of Brooklyn. While both boys are said to have been employed during the day, it is known that for many months they have been in the habit of staying out late at night and frequenting dives and hangouts presided over by racketeers and gunmen.

Got Guns First

One such gunman several weeks before the crime was committed, suggested to the lads his willingness to lend them two revolvers, a German automatic and a 38-calibre of American manufacture. These were accepted and an agreement entered into, according to the testimony of the youths, to allow the gangster a "cut-in" of one-third of the swag-to-be.

The visit to the motion picture, which is supposed to have inspired the crime, took place several weeks after the boys had secured the guns from the Brooklyn gangster. The boys walked about the streets armed with the guns for several days before an actual attempt at robbery was made.

No reference to all this was made by Judge Taylor in his tirade against the motion picture industry. The accounts of the trial, published by the New York newspapers made no mention of the circumstances of the two guns. In all the discussion bearing upon the crime it was "gangster films" which were blamed for the outrage.

Meanwhile, the gangster who loaned the two guns to the youths is still foot-loose and fancy free in Brooklyn.

Women's Club Urged to Use Film Units, Sponsor Matinees

The California Federation of Women's Clubs, Oakland, Cal., is urging the formation of community councils in every city to study types of films being shown.

Mrs. Mark F. Jones, Pasadena, head of the motion picture department, is asking all clubs to appoint a film chairman, to keep in touch with the offerings at local theatres and to sponsor junior matinees.

Says Paramount Publix Houses Are "Local"

Points to Array of Names Among Territorial Chieftains Now Operating Houses

Sam Katz says that in both principle and practice the circuit method of theatre operation is sound, is profitable and will persist and prosper.

Sitting, but belligerent, in the heat of one afternoon of this week, in his office on the ninth floor of the Paramount Publix building at the "Cross Roads of the World" in Times Square, Mr. Katz gave vigorous utterance to an attitude of disagreement with much of recent expression, verbal and published, along Broadway calculated to indicate the disintegration of circuits.

"There is not and never has been anything the matter with circuit operations, that is with us," he observed. "I am not answering, of course, for some isolated and special instances where ill-advised acquisitions of theatres have created some problems for some people. But that is not the circuit story.

"The fact is Publix did not supplant individual theatres with circuit management, but rather took over local management along with the houses. The industry had developed local leaderships and groupings of showmen's interests. In actual practice what we have done is to tie lesser circuits into greater circuits, and to preserve, through this operation, the managerial manpower and local leaderships.

"No matter what the uninformed and irresponsible gossipers may say, there is no problem in the management of the smaller theatres. It is true that there are some problems in a few special cases where the type of house and community falls into a classification where it is too big for the small town type of show and treatment and yet is not big enough for the deluxe program."

"The assertion has been made, Mr. Katz, that under circuit administration the lesser theatres have lost their character as local institutions and thereby have impaired their relations with the public and their earning power."

This remark brought sharp contradiction in the most emphatic Katz manner.

"Our houses are as definitely local institutions as any theatres can be! Where we have sent new personnel into a territory it has been with an idea and program of permanence. We look to our young men, educated in the Paramount Publix school of operations, to become persons of status in their communities. They are expected to join the Kiwanis clubs, or like organizations, and if we have a chap who looks like he might become the president of the club,

a builder of successes

MR. JOE BRANDT, today president of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a personfied proof that persistent effort, consistent cooperation and applied ability has brought constructive progress through all the breaks and vicissitudes of this vicissitudinous industry. He acquired stamina as a newspaper reporter, tenacity as a trade journal correspondent, and business acumen as a lawyer. He entered the picture business as private secretary to Carl Laemmle, then president of the Imp Co.—later the great factor in organizing the Universal. He earned new responsibilities year by year and became a power in Universal. Then years ago he saw a bigger destiny by carrying on the independent banner in conjunction with Harry and Jack Cohn by launching CBC Film Sales Company, which grew and blossomed into today's Columbia. Through his whole career Brandt has sold optimism and instilled confidence. His is a selling success.

brisbane on the egg business

MR. ARTHUR BRISBANE, the eminent Hearst journalist, once immortally remarked that "the newspaperman is like a hen, he has to lay an entirely new egg every day." By which, of course, Mr. Brisbane meant to convey that yesterday's success in the busy labors of the press means nothing whatever toward lessening the responsibility for today and now. There are many parallels between publication and the picture business and this element of continuous and immediately contemporary responsibility is one of them.

Now is the time, and there is no other time but now, in the world of amusement. Yesterday's play date has been played and the books closed and that playdate gone forever. Today and now is the only time that real business can be done. The film sale not made today, like the half dollar that walks past the box office will not be back tomorrow, because tomorrow will have its own day of being now and its own business to take care of.

You can put wheat in an elevator. You can put apples in cold storage. You can put your fur coat in moth balls and you can put gold in the bank. But you can not store up human appetites, the impulse to buy, the desire for entertainment, here and now. The wishes and impulses on which the motion picture lives are born fresh every day and live that day only. They must be served here-and-now. Today's now will be gone tomorrow, and if you make a sale then it will be tomorrow's, because today's is not there any more.

The motion picture business just can not wait. That's why we have a selling season from May 1 to Nov. 1. It is the living moment of amusement in the lives of the impatient millions. The public is that way. It buys and spends as it goes and never knows there is any time but now—because there isn't. This business is as continuous as time, rent, interest, taxes and overhead. It never stops. And he who stops will see red, and gather nothing but a bouquet of ciphers for his buttonhole.

Now is the time to buy and sell. It's now, because yesterday is gone and tomorrow does not exist.

VITAPHONE PASSES FIFTH MILESTONE

Natal Day of Screen's Greatest Era of Evolution Is Celebrated As Tribute to Talking Pictures

The fifth anniversary of Warners' Vitaphone talking pictures, the natal day of the screen's greatest era of evolution and revolution, was celebrated this week. The exact dot on the calendar and the map is the evening of August 6th at Warners theatre on Broadway.

In a broad sense, up to that time and place at 9 o'clock of that fateful, pregnant evening, the talking and sound picture was unknown. What little repute the enterprise had then was ill-repute, with no promise. The motion picture industry as a whole was skeptical, opposed—even annoyed.

The talking and sound picture idea was old, then. It was and is in truth the oldest, and at once the newest, idea in the industry of the picture and older by far than the industry itself. When Thomas Edison set out to bridge the gap between the laboratory dreams of a half a century of endeavors toward the motion picture and the practicality of attainment, his own first thought was of seeing a machine which would be an accessory to the phonograph which he had developed.

The first labors which William Kennedy Laurie Dickson, Edison's laboratory assistant, undertook were the building of a series of devices sketched by Edison on a scrap of yellow paper, laying out a machine with two cylinders on it, one to carry the phonograph sound record and the other a spiral record of tiny motion pictures to be viewed through a microscope. That was early in the remote year of 1887. In 1889 Edison had a sound-and-picture machine, and in 1894 it was offered on the market along with his silent peepshow machine, the Kinetoscope, which became the ancestor of the whole motion picture industry of today. That old first sound-and-picture machine never sold.

In the years that followed there were innumerable efforts toward talking and sound picture machine. Probably most conspicuous among them was Bert Whitman's Cameraphone with its allegedly synchronized cylinder phonograph rendering in words and music and pictures Eva Tanguay's "I Don't Care!" Neither did the public, much. The Cameraphone incidentally went off into oblivion and left behind it a bit of studio and other physical relics which through a long line of trivial permutations became the ancestry of a whole line of "independent production" arriving finally at the famous IMP, which loomed so large in Universal's history.

Again in the period of 1910-12 Mr. Edison brought forth a mechanically synchronized film and phonograph machine. It worked excellently, for its day, but lacked, of course, what all sound then lacked, electrical amplification. This and many other sound adventures failed. Abortive attempts and adverse audience reaction put a curse on the idea. All screen sound was hushed, long before the World War.

This was the state of things just five years ago when Warner Bros. announced that they were developing with the aid of the Western Electric Company, a subsidiary of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, a device for the synchronization of motion and sound on the motion picture screen. The announcement created a smile. No one took any stock in it.

The first the public knew of Vitaphone was in July, 1926 when the deadwalls and billboards around New York were covered with flaming posters announcing that "Vitaphone will thrill the world." Then followed the announcement of the introduction of the new technique in pictures at the Warner Theatre on August 6.

The great effort on the part of the Warners came October 7, 1927. The producers had contracted with Al Jolson for a picture and they spared neither effort nor expense on it. The picture was "The Jazz Singer."

"MAMMY!"

Al Jolson's work in Warner Brothers' "The Jazz Singer," after George Jessel had demanded a salary increase, was a big factor in the speedy success of talking pictures.

DREISER ABSENT FROM OPENING OF FILM VERSION OF HIS NOVEL

"Tragedy" Decision Becomes Legal Precedent for Art

The decision of Justice Graham Witschief in the Supreme Court of New York, rendered at White Plains in Westchester County, denying Theodore Dreiser's motion for an injunction against the Paramount Publix release of "An American Tragedy" is likely to become an important part of legal tradition and precedent in the relation of the art of literature and the art of the motion picture. Often before in the debates of the printed page this issue of authenticity and fidelity has arisen between the author and the picture maker, but never before has the issue been so well defined and never before brought to court. The court in this instance makes no decision, however, between the opposed contentions concerning the accuracy of the production as a transcript of the novel, but decides rather on the necessities of the motion picture art and the terms of contract. Mr. Justice Witschief's opinion, in full, follows:

The plaintiff is the author of a book entitled "An American Tragedy" which, he claims, is an indictment of our social system under which individuals are overwhelmed by forces outside themselves, react in certain ways which are due largely to their background and environment, and individually pay the penalty.

He claims that the book presents "the situation of an ordinary but weak youngster named Clyde Griffiths, who, through the vicissitudes of life, over which he had little or no control, was gradually forced to one position after another, until he became involved in a great tragedy."

The plaintiff entered into an agreement with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose name was later changed to Paramount Publix Corporation, for the motion picture rights of his book, and a later agreement for the "talkie" rights.

The first agreement gave the defendant the right to use, adapt and change the book, in the making of a motion picture.

The second agreement gave the defendant the right to "use, adapt, translate, change, subtract from and add to said story."

The second agreement also provided for the submission to the plaintiff of the manuscript to be used as the basis of the picture, for such comments and suggestions as plaintiff might wish to make, and to afford plaintiff an opportunity of discussing the manuscript with the scenarist, but bound the defendant only to accept the plaintiff's suggestions "in so far as it may, in the judgment of the purchaser consistently do so."

The plaintiff claims a violation of the agreement, to consider his suggestions, and that the picture, as the defendant proposes to produce it, is an ordinary murder story, depicting Clyde Griffiths as "a designing, lecherous, mean and contemptuous individual." He claims that instead of an indictment of society, the picture is a justification of society and an indictment of Clyde Griffiths.

As to the violation of the agreement to consider the plaintiff's suggestion as to changes in the scenario, the greater weight of the evidence presented favors the defendant's contentions that greater than reasonable effort was made to confer with the plaintiff, that the plaintiff absented himself leaving no address, deliberately broke an engagement to meet for discussion, and, finally, that the plaintiff reduced his suggestions to writing, the suggestions were considered and in large part adopted. Upon the papers submitted, this question of fact must be resolved in favor of the defendant.

The book consists of about 640 pages, in two volumes, and about 336,000 words. The picture is necessarily designed to be shown in about 100 minutes. The cost of the picture to the present time has been over $500,000, of which the plaintiff has received $138,000. Whether the picture substantially presents the book or not, depends upon one point of view. The plaintiff appears to view the book from the standpoint of the fatalist. Clyde, he says, has the sympathy of the reader, because he came to a tragic end through the vicissitudes of life, most of them wholly beyond his control, and largely because of a psychology developed by his starved boyhood. The difficulty in picturing such a viewpoint of the book, is apparent. That view depends upon the frame of mind of the individual, upon his outlook upon life, and whether a fatalist or a believer in the power of the individual to overcome weaknesses of character, to rise above his environment, to subdue his physical desires,

World Premiere Given "American Tragedy"

Cosmopolitan Throng at First Big Opening in Months Acclaims Disputed Production

Broadway, speaking in terms of motion pictures, came back Wednesday night.

After a lapse of months, during which the street has been stagnant insofar as picture premieres are concerned, Broadway became alive for the world premiere of Paramount's "An American Tragedy."

Theodore Dreiser, who had made an effort to stop the opening, and against whom the court ruled, did not attend the premiere. However, he was sent two tickets.

Cosmopolitan Throng

Though he was not in evidence, there were present men and women outstanding in the fields of journalism, society and motion pictures.

At its premiere—a world premiere, by the way—"An American Tragedy" drew to the Criterion at 44th street and Broadway a cosmopolitan crowd.

"An American Tragedy" was the first Broadway opening since "The Smiling Lieutenant," which also played the Criterion, and "A Free Soul," which is now playing at the Astor.

No Fanfare

Attending the premiere at the Criterion, probably Broadway's smallest theatre, were Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, which produced the picture under the direction of Josef von Sternberg; Sidney R. Kent, Sam Katz, Walter Winchell, Mark Hellinger, Hector Turnbull, Martin Quigley, Joseph Plunkett, Colvin Brown, Terry Ramsaye, and many others prominent in film, social and newspaper circles.

Wednesday night's opening, though it brought to Broadway a picture over which there has been considerable controversy over a long period, was without fanfare. The house, an $11 opening, was filled, but in front there was none of the usual camera clicking and Kleigs which generally accompany such an evening.

The audience, in their applause, acclaimed the picture version of one of the widest read stories of the last decade.

Utica Projectionists Return After Intervention of Mayor

Projectionists in Utica, New York, have returned to work after having been out nearly two weeks, as a result of the intervention of Mayor Donnelly, acting as arbiter between the union and eight local theatre owners.

The difference centered about the theatre owners' insistence that one man was sufficient in each theatre; the union maintaining the necessity of two. It was finally agreed that the assistant operator take a wage cut and be allowed additional time off.

"GRAND MERCHANDISE"

evaluation of new and current product from Harold B. Franklin

The forthcoming issue of "Now," the organ of the Hughes-Franklin theatres, presents a constructive, aggressive and cheery view of the season's pictures, phrased with the vigorous optimism which usually characterizes expressions from Mr. Harold Franklin. It is to be noted that under his heading "Grand Merchandise" the observation is made: "What you read here is the result of preview audience reactions, not Hollywood yes-men." It is to be observed that this showman's quest is for what is right with the product and those aspects of it which he thinks will make it sell to the audience. Regardless of the weather, regardless of the doubts of the Gloom Committees, Mr. Franklin believes that amusement merchandise can be bought and sold profitably now. In the belief that exhibitors generally will be interested in this set of appraisals, they are presented here.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER:

GRETA GARBO IN "THE RISE AND FALL OF SUSAN LENOX"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is to be congratulated for this production starring Greta Garbo, with a distinguished cast including Clark Gable, Hale Hamilton, and Jean Hersholt.

"SPORTING BLOOD"—With Clark Gable, Madge Evans, Ernest Torrence, Lew Cody and Marie Prevost. This picture is based on Frederick Hazlitt Brennan's story of Kentucky thoroughbreds. This racing melodrama brought forth a panic of applause at a preview showing. When preview audiences stamp their feet, whistle and yell, it would seem that pictures are getting back to the good old days of "movies" that move people.

JOAN CRAWFORD, "THIS MODERN AGE"—Directed by Nicholas Grinde. Cast includes Neil Hamilton, Marjorie Rambeau, and Hobart Bosworth. The usual Crawford box-office success, with its background in gay Paree.

RAMON NOVARRO, "SON OF INDIA"—Directed by Jacques Feyder. Cast includes Madge Evans, Marjorie Rambeau, Conrad Nagel, and John Miljan. One of the most artistic and interesting productions ever filmed. Scenes that might be compared to magnificent paintings.

"THE SQUAW MAN"—CECIL B. DE MILLE PRODUCTION—An all star cast including Warner Baxter, Eleanore Boardman, Charles Bickford, and Lupe Velez. A powerfully emotional story, a great cast, and the flawless work of an unusually able director combined, make this picture one of the year's most outstanding entertainment offerings.

ROBERT MONTGOMERY IN "THE MAN IN POSSESSION"—Is deliciously clever is his second starring picture.

JOHN GILBERT IN "ARSENE LUPIN"—A picturization of the famous stage detective.

"POLITICS," WITH MARIE DRESSLER AND POLLY MORAN—Directed by Chas. Riesner. Cast includes John Miljan and Wm. Bakewell. Dressler and Moran can't muff. This one is their very peak.

HELEN HAYES IN "LULLABY"—With Marie Prevost, Lewis Stone, Eileen Pringle, and Cliff Edwards. Directed by Edgar Selwyn.

PARAMOUNT:

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"—Phillip Holmes, Sylvia Sidney, Frances Dee. Directed by Josef Von Sternberg. Theodore Dreiser's great novel is one of the most disturbingly real pictures that ever came out of Hollywood! Paramount's thundering, vital courtroom drama unquestionably is the most powerful ever presented on the talking screen.

MAURICE CHEVALIER, "THE SMILING LIEUTENANT"—An Ernst Lubitsch production set to Straus music, with a very clever cast including Claudette Colbert, Miriam Hopkins, and Charles Ruggles. This is not a musical comedy. It is a beautiful romance with musical interpolations that are particularly appropriate and that fit naturally into the situations. One cannot help but enjoy this entertainment. It is just properly naughty.

FOUR MARX BROTHERS IN "MONKEY BUSINESS"—Shatter all fun records. "Monkey Business" will mean big business at the box-office. The picture moves so fast it appears to be over before you know it. At a preview the other night it was hysterically received. We are back in show business with this one. Gales of laughter rocked the audience.

"FORBIDDEN ADVENTURE"—"NEWLY RICH"—Directed by Norman Taurog—who will be remembered as the man who made "Skippy." Though not in the class of "Skippy," it nevertheless is a charming picture. It was very well received in New York. The story concerns the motion picture experience of Mitzi Green and Jackie Searle, picture stars in Hollywood, and in London where they both experience high adventure with a boy King who wants to be more boy than King. Amongst the supporting cast are Edna May Oliver, who is a laugh panic, as well as Louise Fazenda. The story is based on Sinclair Lewis' "Let's Play King."

"HONEYMOON LANE," WITH EDDIE DOWLING—Is wholesome entertainment with a pleasing love story, and clean fun. This picture has an excellent cast, including June Collyer, Raymond, Hatton Noah Beery and Ray Dooley.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN"—Jackie Coogan, Junior Durkin, Mitzi Green, Jackie Searle, Guy Oliver. Directed by Norman Taurog. Previewed before an enthusiastic audience, the picture proved to be a remarkably pleasing entertainment. The picture is based on Mark Twain's famous classic, and was directed by the man responsible for "Skippy." The river scenes are most attractive and add magnificently to the production. There is plenty of action and genuine humor. Lots of fun and action for the kiddies and a tear or two for the grownups.

"SILENCE"—Cast includes Clive Brook, Marjorie Rambeau, John Ray, Peggy Shannon and other distinguished players. The picture was very well received and contains suspense as well as heart interest.

WARNER BROTHERS:

JOHN BARRYMORE IN "THE MAN GENIUS"—Here is undoubtedly the greatest Barrymore characterization yet produced, with an unusual cast including Marion Marsh, Donald Cooke and Charles Butterworth.

KAY FRANCIS IN "THE RICH ARE ALWAYS WITH US."—This is Kay Francis' first picture for Warner Brothers. She represents a type of woman who knows the world. A glamorous person who fascinates men by reason of this sophistication, as a gay rich divorcee who wears up-to-the-minute frocks and looks the part of the attractive girl who knows how to land her man.

"THE STAR WITNESS"—featuring Walter Huston—Is a powerful film graphically produced by William Wellman, the man who directed "Wings." This picture is full of laughs yet plenty of suspense. A distinguished cast including "Chick" Sale, Frances Starr, Sally Blane, Edward Nugent and others. Shown privately in a studio projection room to a group of Hollywood newspaper men. "The Star Witness" brought them to their feet, applauding. Every indication is that this will be a smash hit with wide appeal.

"THE ROAD TO SINGAPORE," WITH WILLIAM POWELL—Is the best picture in some time according to the way it was received by a preview audience. Powell is supported by a good cast, including Doris Kenyon and Marion Marsh. There are lots of laughs and many humorous situations.

CONSTANCE BENNETT IN "BOUGHT"—Directed by Archie Mayo. An adaptation of Harriett Henry's novel, "Jack Daw's Strut." This picture has all the color and swank to be expected from a star who gets $30,000 per week, and will have a wide appeal for adults. At a preview the other night the glamorous Constance Bennett received a thunder of applause, an indication of her popularity. In the cast are Ben Lyon and Richard Bennett, Constance's father, who gives one of the finest performances of his really fine career. The picture is excellently staged.

GEORGE ARLISS IN "ALEXANDER HAMILTON." Directed by John Adolfi. Everyone remembers "Disraeli." Here's another characterization by the master actor

STEFFES HEADS SECRET COUNCIL TO CLEAR CHICAGO UNION MUDDLE

Chicago Exhibitors To Use One Man In Booth; Responsibility Placed On Maloy

The plan of Chicago exhibitors to man their own projection booths beginning Monday, was abandoned after last minute objections to the effect that the action would work a hardship on other theatrical unions, as a general union walkout would inevitably result from such a situation. Furthermore, it was pointed out, the action would also work a severe hardship on those theatres in the city not a party to the plan.

Al Steffes and Aaron Saperstein, exhibitor leaders, have served notice on Tom Maloy, union head under indictment, that beginning next Monday, August 10, only one operator would be used in 150 theatres, and if the result is a walkout, the exhibitors will stand for a closing of their theatres, thereby throwing 1500 union men out of work. If the exhibitor plan is consented to, it will mean that only 300 union men, approximately, will lose their employment.

The new plan puts all the responsibility for any eventualities in the situation as it stands, upon the shoulders of Maloy. The office of state's attorney Charles Lounsbury had offered police protection to exhibitors operating their own projection machines under the original plan which was discarded.

Bail was to have been set this week in the cases of the five union officials, Jack Miller and Joe Maloy, against whom indictments had been formally returned last week.

One Operator and Fair Wage Are Aims

Each Member Pledged to Remain on Job Under Allied Officer's Leadership Until Successful

An unassuming, quiet working, yet thoroughgoing group of Chicago independent exhibitors has been organized to work day and night against the Chicago Operators' union, with an objective quite apart from that of the state's attorney's office, which is engaged in the prosecution of the union's officials.

W. A. Steffes

This quietly but determinedly functioning exhibitors' group, comparable to the Chicago Association of Commerce's Secret Six, is pledged to obtain a reduction of one man in the booth for Chicago exhibitors and to put into effect an equitable union operators' wage scale throughout the city. In addition, the group is working in conjunction with the state's attorney's office in the preparation of criminal cases against union officials, and in the uncovering of new evidence against the seven principals already indicted in the state's investigation of the reign of terror and extortion enforced against Chicago theatres during Tom Maloy's regime as head of the Operators' union.

Two Definite Objectives

The difference in objectives is apparent in that the state's attorney's office is concerned only with those criminal practices and acts of the past with which the union now stands charged. The exhibitors' group seeks the definite objective of elimination of the second man in the booth and an adjustment of the Chicago operators' wage scale to proportions comparable to wage schedules in effect elsewhere.

The courage—or audacity—of the group can be gauged by recalling that no challenge of Tom Maloy's authority or policies has been permitted to go unpunished in the past. Rebellious movements within and outside of the union have inevitably resulted heretofore in swift and violent death, in brutality, torture, and mutilation of person and property.

Heading the group is Al Steffes, Minneapolis exhibitor and officer of Allied States, sent here by Abram F. Myers to assist in the prosecution of the union officials and to seek relief from the union's policies for those independent theatres whose

Church, Press See Preview of Dowling Feature

The Hays organization, with the cooperation of the motion picture bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, sponsored a preview of the Paramount Eddie Dowling feature "Honeymoon Lane" at the Brooklyn Paramount last Friday morning prior to the opening at the two New York Paramounts in the evening.

Protestant ministers, Catholic clergy and teachers, executives of New York and Brooklyn organized club groups, editors and press representatives composed the greater part of the audience.

Rita C. McGoldrick, hostess for the occasion, told the audience that their constructive support of the higher type of films was essential to further production of that type of picture. Carl E. Milliken, in an opening speech, greeted the audience on behalf of the industry and complimented Dowling on his effort in the direction of the clean, family type of film.

Dowling spoke briefly on the making of the picture.

ERPI Hawthorne Plant Cuts Department Heads' Salaries

Approximately 1,000 department managers and other executives of the Western Electric, Hawthorne, Ill., plant are being placed on a five-day week with corresponding salary cuts.

C. L. Rice, vice-president and works manager, noted the change as in line with similar action at all ERPI plants in the country.

Union's Demands Darken Ohio Houses, Says Allied

The Ohio Allied unit, in a statement issued in connection with the negotiations between suburban exhibitors and projectionists in Cincinnati, says that several suburban theatres have been closed because of poor business and the union demand for two operators in a booth.

Other houses, the statement says, are operating only two and three nights a week.

Strike-Closed; But May Reopen

A move has been made by the owners of 10 theatres recently closed in Birmingham, Alabama to reopen at an early date. The theatres were closed when the owners of the circuit failed to agree with the operators on a decrease in the salary scale.

In a statement issued by Frank Merritt, manager for the Birmingham Theatrical Amusements Co., Inc., an offer was made to reopen all the closed picture houses if the operators would agree to a wage scale of $50 per week for the downtown theatres and $40 per week for the suburban houses. This offer will hold good till August 17, according to Merritt, after which time negotiations looking to a reopening with present operators will be closed.

This offer by the management of the closed theatres followed a statement given out recently by J. C. Harper, business agent for the operators' union, in which he charged the management of the theatres were contemplating the putting on of non-union operators when the houses were reopened in the fall.

Frederic H. Girnau, publisher, has been sentenced to eight years in the federal penitentiary and fined $2,000 by Federal Judge Harry A. Hollzer in Los Angeles for his printed attacks on Clara Bow in his former magazine, the Coast Reporter.

Girnau was sentenced to three years and $1,000 on one count and five years and $1,000 on another, the court ordering that the last two years and 10 months of the second sentence be suspended for a period of five years. The court characterized the matter as "unfit to be fed as garbage to swine."

Production at Capacity in October Indicated

Pictures Starting This Month Bring Work for 700 to 1,000 Part Players and 15,000 Extras

Pictures starting this month will provide work for 700 to 1,000 part and bit players and more than 15,000 extras, a survey by the Hollywood Herald shows. Thus, after the leanest season in the history of Hollywood production, including the strike period of 1929, actors and extras are due for a break this month. Jobs will be plentiful for both classes and all studios except Warners-First National will be more active than at any time since last spring, when temporary shutdowns and reduction of schedules made screen jobs infrequent and hard to get.

September will be even better, from the employment standpoint, and October probably will find production at capacity on all lots. A checkup of prospects for this month shows:

Pictures starting in August will give work to 700 to 1,000 parts and bit players and over 15,000 extras.

Major studios (excepting Warner) have listed 47 features.

Probably half as many more independent features scheduled.

There will be at least 75 shorts.

For the benefit of the acting classes, The Hollywood Herald canvassed the studios for a list of productions which will actually be started during the month and for which casting will be done. It found that, in addition to those scheduled, some which started late in July will require cast additions in the next few weeks, while in many cases of the new pictures story preparation is backward to such an extent that it is impossible to tell accurately the number of players and extras that will be afforded work.

The figures appearing in the appended list are as nearly accurate as the studios can make them at this time, but work seekers are warned that important changes may be made. In some cases, there may be increases, in others decreases; but the totals as given are approximately what will be found in the final casting.

Here are the August schedules, with indicated number of acting and extra jobs, as estimated by studios at this time:

All-Pathe Bill at New House

The Hollywood at Fort Worth, Tex., newest of the RKO theatres, opens August 8 with an all-RKO Pathe program. The feature will be Constance Bennett's latest, "The Common Law."

THE CAMERA REPORTS

HARD ON THE MIKE. Dorothy Sebastian is trying to protect it from the warbling of Harry Joe Brown, Fred Niblo, Bill Boyd, on the RKO Pathe set, where "The Big Gamble" is being taken. Niblo is directing, Brown is associate producer, and Dorothy plays a lead.

BAG OF TRICKS. Gordon White, Educational's publicity-advertising chief, steps on to the Mermaid Comedy set at the studio. Pauline Wagner, George Chandler, Helen Bolton have him holding the bag. This is the first Mermaid of the season.

SHANGHAI BOUND. Harry Garson, president of Orient-Pacific Pictures, and a flock of cameramen and technicians he took with him to make a series of two-reelers and features in Multicolor. Over the shoulder of A. A. McDonald, Multicolor president, you can catch a glimpse of the Multicolor camera. Garson has his hand on Shen Hung's shoulder. Multicolor executives in the picture are staying home, including J. C. Wolfe, the color company sales manager, who is the gentleman in summery attire between McDonald and Garson.

ON THE STREET, TOO. Jean Harlow, Caddo's platinum blonde, made these herself, and wears them on Hollywood Boulevard. She is doing "Queer People" for Howard Hughes, but the pajamas look rather neat, at that. These "created" things, for the information of feminine readers, are all wool, but by no means a yard wide, and consist of three pieces. Presumably they are of a shade to harmonize with the "platinum" blonde hair.

HAIRCOMB. Will Rogers, who does things for Fox, claims this to be the latest in hair cuts. But it's his hair, so what of it?

Members of Newly Formed Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association Outside Chicago

The Association will serve as a medium for cooperation by members in business building plans, equipment advertising, and development of new equipment projects, says Robin.

STRIKING. Dolores Costello is a new camera study, done at the Warner Coast studio, where the attractive star is making "Expensive Women."

R-E-B-O-U-N-D. Director Edward H. Griffith on an RKO Pathe set, teaches his cast how to pronounce the name of their new vehicle. Ina Claire, Robert Ames, Hedda Hopper and the rest study their assorted dictionaries.

NEWSPAPERMAN. Regis Toomey on the Universal set looking harassed according to script during the shooting of a closeup for the company's drama of newspaper life, "Graft." That light must be warm, which may help in the expression here achieved by Toomey, indicating anger, dismay, annoyance, or what you will. Then again, that appears to be an excellent way of acquiring a healthy coat of tan, which merely indicates another advantage of being an actor.

Maintenance of equality standards and the conduct of business along ethical lines that assure the continued growth of the independent dealer, is the claim of the new organization.

STEFFES' SECRET COUNCIL AT WORK

existence is threatened by the perpetuation of those policies.

How the group will accomplish its objective, no member of it knows. Each is pledged to remain on the job, following this lead and that, attempting maneuver and checkmate, but never relinquishing the fight until the objectives are realized. Daily and nightly they are in session in a closely guarded room on the eighth floor of the Auditorium hotel—within a stone's throw of Maloy's headquarters in the Congress Bank building.

The Chicago problem is potentially the problem of exhibitors in any city, Steffes said in the course of a conversation with the interviewer concerning the amazing financial resources of the union, said to include a defense fund of a quarter million dollars.

"There are a lot of people looking for money like that," commented Steffes. "What's to prevent them from setting up the same situation you have here in my own city? If it isn't licked here, there will be little to prevent employment of the same tactics in countless other situations all over the country. A system that has crippled Chicago theatres is a threat against the entire industry."

Want One Man in Booth

Steffes made it clear that his participation in the fight against the Chicago Operators' union was in no way a fight against organized labor.

"What we are after," he said, "is one man in the booth—and that man a union man. Neither I nor anybody else concerned in this fight wants non-union labor. The theatre can't afford it. If a union operator doesn't show up for work, his local has another man in his place in ten minutes. If a non-union operator fails to show up, the theatre is stranded."

Steffes recounted how, in the fight for adjustment of operators' schedules in Minneapolis, he had been approached by representatives of a prominent businessmen's organization of that city, offering him aid in his fight on the condition that, if it were successful, non-union labor be employed in Minneapolis theatres thereafter. Steffes refused the offer, won the fight, and union labor was retained in the theatres of Minneapolis.

Union Men Shadow Him

Wherever Steffes goes in Chicago he is dogged by union "shadow" men. If he leaves his hotel on foot, the shadows are at his heels. If he leaves in a car, a carload of spotters follows. Every exhibitor, every theatre he visits, is visited in turn by the union watchers the moment Steffes has made his departure.

Steffes has requested no protection of the state's attorney's office. He has no bodyguard, and goes about unarmed. He explained to the writer that he has no qualms over his personal safety in Chicago, where the "heat" is on Maloy and his enforcer, Joe Macek, so intensely that a false step for either could not be chanced. It is only, Steffes said, in his home city, Minneapolis, that he fears for his safety, or, for that matter, anywhere outside Chicago, where connections between an attack and the local situation could not be so readily traced.

Union Checks His Record

Agents of the Chicago Operators' union, Steffes has learned, are making a minute investigation of his past record in Minneapolis and other cities in the hope, he believes, of uncovering something in his past life which would serve to blackmail him into withdrawing from the local scene. It is the more sagacious method of "silencing," in view of the present situation, and, according to the state's attorney's office, smacks of the clever legal advisers identified with the union.

Also prominent in the anti-Maloy activities of Chicago exhibitors is Aaron Saperstein, president of Illinois Allied, who has had a leading part in the investigation of the union since its inception. Saperstein, also a member of the exhibitors' secret council, is directing the liaison work between independent exhibitors and the state's attorney's office. His aids are continually in search of evidence for additional indictments against the union officials and for new and valuable witnesses.

Concessions Bared

A valuable portion of the work of Saperstein's investigators has been the uncovering of a vast amount of evidence revealing concessions made by the union to certain theatres as opposed to others. Investigators have learned, for example, that 2,000-seat theatres, running matinees, are paying operators $80 a week, while 400 to 900 seat theatres in the same neighborhood, and open at night only, are obliged to pay $125 weekly for operators. It also has been revealed that a number of Chicago theatres have been permitted by Maloy to run with one operator in the booth. The relationships between these situations and Maloy are being investigated.

Whatever seeming calm descends on the Chicago scene between now and the time that the indicted union officials and their alleged aids go to trial in criminal court, back of it all, working quietly but effectively, will be the exhibitors' secret council pledged to remain in existence until their objectives have been realized. The very nature of their work makes impossible any publicizing of it, but it is directed at this ending—the elimination of the second man in Chicago projection booths.

Operators Granted Charter

The secretary of state's office has announced that the Independent Union Motion Picture Operator's of America, a Delaware corporation with no stock listed, has been admitted into Indiana. Gravdon Fox of Fort Wayne is listed as the Indiana agent.

"Pop" and Radio City!

"Pop" and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., are very angry with each other. Pop is the old bartender of better days who operates a speakeasy at 66 West 55th Street, and John D., Jr., is back of the new Radio City project. No. 66, as it happens, is right in the way of excavation work for Radio City, and Pop refuses to sell his lease, which has until October 31 to run, principally because, as Pop, referring to radios has outspokenly said, "I wouldn't have one around the place." So the Metropolitan Square Corp., representing Rockefeller interests is suing the Maken Realty Corp., charging that John Doe, which is Pop, is violating the Prohibition Amendment, and therefore his lease is void. Pop is still holding out.

Meyer-Rieger to Market Trailers on Franchise Plan

Plans for distributing deluxe trailers through franchise holders have just been announced by Meyer-Rieger Laboratories, which has its general offices and production plant in the Film Center building, New York, effective August 15.

Independent exchanges in 28 key cities will handle the physical distribution under this arrangement.

A five-year sliding scale contract, according to the company, will be entered into with the franchise holder and in this contract will be incorporated a guarantee that Meyer-Rieger will spend at least $25,000 a year on national advertising. Actual service to theatre with de luxe trailers will begin October 1.

The trailers will consist of action stills of motion picture productions animated with color interspersed. It will also have an off-screen voice announcing the highlights of the coming attractions and each trailer will be synchronized with music and dialogue.

There will be three types of trailers; De Luxe of about 150 feet, Class 2 A about 100 feet, and Class 3 B about 65 feet.

Walter J. Freudenberger, formerly with Advance Trailer and National Screen Service, is general sales manager of Meyer-Rieger. Under Freudenberger a staff of 6 men will contact the franchise holders as well as the theatres.

Power Scandal Supersedes Industry Probe in Canada

Company Name Unchanged

The Fox stockholders' meeting in Chicago last Wednesday was adjourned after the transaction of routine business. The name of the corporation was not changed.

Floyd Gibbons' "Thrill" Series Is Given Its Debut

"Woodrow Wilson's Great Decision," the first of a series of one-reel productions entitled "Floyd Gibbons' supreme thrills" was given its debut to the amusement world and the press this week with a presentation in an improvised theatre on the seventy-ninth floor of the Empire State building on Fifth avenue.

The picture follows the technique of Floyd Gibbons' first screen appearance in a promotional one-reeler made for the promotion of "Cimarron," recorded at the premier showing of that picture in Washington, and re-recorded with Mr. Gibbons pictorially and orally inserted in New York. "Woodrow Wilson's Great Decision" pertains to our entry into the World War. The pictorial content, aside from the heroic features of Mr. Gibbons, is made up of excerpts from the newsreel and war department film archives of the World War. Mr. Gibbons' discourse is a fortissimo, bravissimo, recital of events and moods of the period. He maintains the high excitement of his typical radio delivery.

The function at the Empire State building included a luncheon to the trade press, by RKO Pathe, distributors of the product for the Van Beuren Corporation producers. The first of the series was directed by Arthur Hurley, who since has joined Warners' producing staff.

This projection atop the Empire State building represents the highest attainment of the motion picture art, in terms of elevation from street level.

Loew Orders Carrier System For South African Theatre

Loew's, Inc., has placed orders with the Carrier Engineering Corporation for a complete air conditioning and cooling system to be installed in the new Johannesburg, South Africa, theatre. Work is to begin immediately.

RKO has also ordered a complete air conditioning system for the new Denver theatre. The "manufactured weather" air conditioning and refrigeration, is to be part of the equipment of the new Paramount, Publix Boston house.

Clergymen Seek to Ban Legalized Sunday Films

Although Sunday shows were legalized in Ohio, the clergymen of Steubenville are circulating petitions calling for a referendum at the November election proposing a local blue law.

HARRY H. THOMAS, PRESIDENT — TELEPHONE PENNSYLVANIA 4424 — CABLE ADDRESS "THOMFILM"

August 4th 1931.

Mr. Martin Quigley,
Quigley Publications,
1790 Broadway,
New York, New York.

Dear Mr. Quigley:-

Felicitations upon the splendid showing achieved for the first quarter of the merger of Quigley Publications with the several film business papers you absorbed.

This organization in its individual units and in group as a whole, freely concedes that the results are due solely to the bulk values in all departments that the pooling offers to readers and producers at minimum cost.

In these hours of bewildered business, it is gratifying to know that in the film trade there is one vision which sees clearly and fearlessly the roads which confront producers and exhibitors during the months just ahead. The counsel and cooperation that your periodicals furnish the trade from day to day and week to week are at all times constructive, practical and potentially profitable for all who care to avail themselves of their obvious values.

Cordially yours,

Harry H. Thomas.

SOUND FILM FOUND BEST IN EDUCATION

Twice As Effective as Silent Pictures, Fox Experiment at Washington Indicates

[Washington Bureau of the HERALD]

Sound pictures are exactly twice as effective as silent films for educational work.

This is the conclusion of the committee which on July 6 and 10 administered the tests given school boys and girls from 47 states and the District of Columbia to determine the value of sound motion pictures as an instrument of instruction. The project was sponsored by the Office of Education of the Department of the Interior, the facilities of George Washington University being used for the showing of the educational films, prepared by Fox Film Corporation.

Adjunct to Lectures

The films were used as an adjunct to lectures, in the same way as they would be used if shown to a school class. Five pictures were exhibited, dealing with toads, monarch butterflies, volcanoes, glaciers and river valleys. After the film was shown and the lectures given, the children were asked a number of questions, to be answered by the selective method; that is, the first half of a question was asked in statement form, the pupil selecting from a number of answers the correct conclusion. Thus, one of the questions was: "Chains of active volcanoes extend (1) through the mountains of Norway and Sweden, (2) around the Pacific Ocean, (3) along the western coast of Africa, (4) across the Atlantic Ocean."

An experiment of this nature was conducted in 1928 with silent films, it being shown that the pupils displayed 19 per cent more knowledge of the subject after seeing pictures than when they were taught by the usual method. The experiment with talking pictures, however, showed a gain of 38 per cent, leading to the conclusion that they were twice as effective as silent films.

Sound Versus Silent

"It is not, of course, possible," the committee declared in its report, "in a demonstration limited as this one was in the number of pupils participating, in the period of time used, and with pupils working in an unfamiliar situation, to expect any definite conclusions as to how sound films compare in effectiveness with other instructional methods and materials, nor as to which types of sound films are particularly good. Several experiments have been conducted heretofore to show relative effectiveness of silent films and oral presentations as instructional techniques, of silent films and the usual classroom discussions, and so on. No such comparisons are possible from this demonstration. Only the amount of improvement made in factual tests covering the subject matter of the films and hence some indication of the value of the films as teaching materials unaccompanied by reading, class discussion, or other study, can be stated.

"Some years ago experiments were conducted to show the amount learned through a single reading of factual material. Reports stated that eighth-grade pupils who had taken an initial test over the subject matter of an article, had then read the article and repeated the test, made a gain of 20.9 per cent in the final test. In this demonstration of sound motion pictures the pupils made a gain of 38 per cent when they took an initial test, saw the pictures, and repeated the test. This seems to show that pupils secure more factual information from the lecture-picture type of sound motion picture than they do from reading informational material through once. This pure gain in information is, of course, in addition to any of the other values usually ascribed to visual aids, such as increased interest in the subject, better understanding of time and place relationships, development of ability to visualize details, and so on.

"It is interesting to note that very good improvement was made by the pupils even in fields in which eighth-grade graduates may usually be expected to have had definite instruction. For instance, boys and girls who have presumably studied glaciers, volcanoes and river valleys gained 42.5 per cent, 79.8 per cent and 156.3 per cent over their first scores in these subjects, respectively. In the field of science, which is less extensively taught in elementary schools than is geography, exceptionally high gains were made. These facts indicate a strong supplementary value in sound motion pictures.

"The development of sound motion pictures presents problems to teachers, curriculum-specialists and school administrators as well as to production companies in the matter of selecting appropriate subject matter, and of devising satisfactory methods of presentation. In this connection it may be noted that the adults who attended the demonstration quite unanimously preferred the lecture-picture type of informational sound film. The boys also rated that type high. The girls, however, gave their greatest approval to the dramatic history films.

Cannot Sue!

Union projectionists at the Miami houses of the Wolfson Meyer Theatre Enterprises have broken their one year contract and gone on strike. Only these houses are affected, though the operators have similar agreement with other Miami independents. But Wolfson Meyer is unable to sue for the performance of the contract, since Sunday work is illegal in Florida. The operators are demanding $2.55 per hour on Sunday, though the contract calls for the regular wage scale. If the dispute is settled, Wolfson Meyer will demand a cash bond to guarantee performance of any future contracts.

Great Success In Circuit Operation Is Seen By Katz

so much the better for him, and for us. They are expected to become members of the communities in which they live and work and to have a local patriotism which will make them so operate their theatres as to really serve the community. We could not hope to be able to draw upon the class of vigorous, clean manpower that we have brought into this business if that were not so. And it is necessary for us to so operate and relate our supervision that such young men can see a future and progress.

"And in the big towns, Mr. Katz." The interviewer was looking out the window up and down Broadway from the Rialto—reported not long so well—to the Critreion.

"Where there is a problem it is one of product," he answered. "Things are not going so badly as some of the pessimists make out. Right down here,"—he pointed toward the Paramount below— "we are doing a healthy business and returning a satisfactory profit.

Mr. Katz dwelt at length on the subject of the preservation of managerial leaderships and local manpower as evolved out of the experience of the exhibition field, turning over a long array of the names of Paramount Publix "sub-partners" in exhibition, gathered into relation with the corporation with the upbuilding of the greater circuits.

"Far from obliterating or suppressing the local quality of theatre administration, we have insured it in the men who are associated with us," Mr. Katz insisted. "There's M. E. Comerford in Pennsylvania—there's E. V. Richards in New Orleans—Eddie Rubin in Minneapolis, carrying on the best traditions of Rubin and Finkelstein—Bob Wilby of Atlanta, carrying on as usual in North and South Carolina—Ed Sparks in Florida—Jules Rubens in Illinois—Richards & Nace in Arizona—Ed Dubinsky in Kansas City, Kansas—Sam Pinanski of Netoco up in Boston—Colonel Butterfield in Michigan—and so on. If those names do not mean institutional value, local institutionalism, then there isn't any such thing.

"There is nothing the matter with the circuit idea, from the Paramount Publix point of view."

"Then, if there is no disintegration of circuits in sight, do you fancy there will be, on the other side of the equation, an expansion of the idea, Mr. Katz?

Mr. Katz thoughtfully turned a few papers on his desk and then came up with a smile. He had arrived at a notion.

"Well—I suppose you'll admite that the United States Steel Corporation idea is not so bad?"

"Yes—on the whole it will do."

"Then," with the Katz beam, "do you think they are likely to do much expanding about now?"

"No."

"Also, no."

After which the office was aired for a meeting with an array of circuit magnates to talk to Mr. Katz something about something they are trying to arrange about changing something in somebody's set of circuits—which will be another story in due season.

The straight line represents the box office receipts for 1931, the evenly broken line (– – –) the receipts for 1930, and the unevenly broken line (— - — -) is for the given period in 1930.

Censor to See Darrow Picture

Memphis censors will demand a special preview of "The Mystery of Life" Clarence Darrow's film on evolution, before it is shown in any theatre here, the board announced last week.

The announcement followed a protest by ministers of Dayton, Tenn., scene of the famous Scopes evolution trial seven or eight years ago, against the proposed showing there of the picture this week. A special advance showing of the film was given at the Linden Circle theatre for exhibitors, but the censors were not included in the list of invitations mailed out. According to reports, the film is to be booked in one of the downtown theatres some time in August. Whether it would be shown at the RKO Orpheum or Warner Bros. theatre had not been decided, according to W. M. Jacobs, booker for Universal, distributor of the picture.

"From what I have read about the controversy over the film, it seems, offhand, like a lot of fuss over nothing," said Mrs. M. V. Smith, member of the board of censors.

"I cannot say anything about it officially, however, until I see the film. In any case, I will certainly demand a preview."

Some Storm!

Not the greatest entertainment in the world can stand up against the natural elements on occasion. That was proved in Sydney, Austraila, recently, when the most severe storm in 40 years hit the city at the beginning of a week, which, with important film premieres, was expected to give local houses a decent break after months of depressed box-office. Among houses that opened, business recorded was down 90 per cent on the average take, and 40 per cent of the theatres didn't bother to open at all. At one of the out-of-town houses, only one actual cash customer arrived for the evening's show, surely a record for small attendance. He was turned away. At another, the manager decided to run his pictures for the 30 odd regulars who arrived, but soon after the program was started, the lighting system failed. Feminine members elected to go home while the men stayed on and exchanged yarns. They wouldn't take back their admission money, indicating someone probably spun a story that hit.

Aelograph Co. Is Suing ERPI

The San Antonio Aelograph Company of America will file an appeal against the Electrical Research Products Corporation in the courts of New Orleans on or about August 10. The Aleograph is suing for $50,000 which they claim ERPI still owes them.

Frank Steinle is representative for the Aelograph Company, which is chartered under the laws of Delaware. The suit is based on the charge that Western Electric subsidiary infringed upon patent rights in the exhibition of talking moving pictures.

Mayor Allows Sunday Films But Ice Delivery Is Taboo

The mayor of Wauchula, Fla,, was forced to permit Sunday motion pictures and baseball as a result of the voters' decision favoring them, but the town's chief executive is holding out on the delivery of ice on Sunday.

He has no objection, it is understood, to the local population going to the ice plant and carrying home its own ice, but he refuses to allow delivery. A popular vote may be the result.

HARRISON'S REPORTS

A powerful drama. It should bring tears to the eyes of most persons. The interest is gripped right at the start, and is not relaxed up to the closing scenes. The deeply appealing situations are numerous. The story is unusual; it has many novel twists.

You have the picture; it is up to you then to work hard to put it over. No matter how much you say about it you cannot say enough.

Suitable for all, including children. Excellent Sunday show.

VARIETY

A fine piece of work including a novelty angle. Excellent material which ought to stir up a load of box-office attention. If it doesn't it may be because it won't be properly exploited.

* * * *

In fact "Miracle Woman" is another plum for Columbia's ace director and also Barbara Stanwyck who is starred.

Miss Stanwyck's performance here is splendid in unfolding plenty of fire, balanced by undertones of instinctive character softness and mood as she slowly falls in love with a blind boy who becomes one of her ardent followers.

The cast is good throughout with the reliable Hardy again making a believable promoter, a characterization which seems his long suit. Manners does exceptionally well with his highly sympathetic assignment.

* * * *

It's a splendid effort from Harry Cohn, who supervised, down through Jo Swerling and Dorothy Howell who respectively did the adaptation and continuity. Sound and camera work are excellent.

A big and strong film opening up numerous channels of publicity with a fine performance by Barbara Stanwyck and other cast members. Has the novelty of a dynamic opening sequence.

CHANGES MADE BY MAYER ADD TO IMPORTANCE OF ACADEMY AWARDS

A Good Idea!

Hal Hefferman, motion picture editor of the "Detroit News," has begun a Sunday feature in his department, which appears to be finding particular favor among his film-going readers. He calls the service "Current Highlights," and gives special attention to the suitability of the various current attractions from the standpoint of the younger generation of picture patrons. He notes his comments on films as follows: "The following pictures, now available in downtown or neighborhood theatres, are either (1) particularly suitable or (2) not harmful for children." All films commented upon are noted as 1 or 2.

W. E. Victor in Pacent Skirmish

Although granting an injunction against Sol Wallerstein, Buffalo, N. Y., theatre owner, Federal District Judge Clarence G. Galston, who in his opinion declared that the Pacent talking picture reproducing equipment in the exhibitor's theatre infringed three patents of W. E., has allowed a stay of execution provided the defendent posts bond of $5,000, perfects his appeal within 20 days, and regularly prosecutes it thereafter.

This case was defended by Warner Brothers.

The judge's decree orders an accounting of all profits from the operation of Wallerstein's equipment, as well as all damages which the plaintiff may have sustained by reason of its use. Former federal judge John R. Haze of Buffalo, has been appointed a special master to determine the amount of these damages.

Western Electric and afiliated companies, however, will appeal from the Galston decision that the socalled Lowenstein grid-biaspatent was valid and that the Blattner patent was not infringed.

Sound Salesman Killed

John C. Gnas, Indianapolis representative of a theatre sound equipment company, was fatally wounded when Harley D. Cooke fired on him from his basement, alleging Gnas was peeking through his windows.

Release Date Set Ahead

Warners have decided to set the national release date of "Five Star Final", screen adaptation of the Louis Weitzenkorn play, for early in September, instead of October, as originally planned.

No Individual or Company Permitted More Than One Nomination For Best Achievement

Awards of merit by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, for attainment in the various creative branches of the art are becoming increasingly important in the production community with the passing of time and increasing prestige. Mr. Louis B. Mayer, as chairman of the Awards Committee, has instituted a number of constructive changes in the method of making selections. At the request of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, he has prepared the following article.

By LOUIS B. MAYER

The fourth annual awards ceremony, under the auspices of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, is set for Wednesday night, November 4, at the Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles. The Merit Awards are bestowed each year by the Academy for the purpose of recognizing distinguished achievements in the arts and sciences of motion picture productions as judged by the creative artists themselves. The purpose is to encourage achievement in these arts and sciences and in the technique of motion picture production. Gold statuettes are presented to the winners. An interesting addition to last year's plan provides for a second award in the form of a bronze statuette to be presented in each instance in which the final balloting for any award shall result within three votes of a tie.

Louis B. Mayer

Continuing the Awards Plan of last year the membership of each branch will make primary nominations by ballot for achievements within its branch, the final election to be by balloting of the entire Academy membership. The exception will be the scientific or technical award which will be decided by a board of expert judges according to rules to be recommended by the Technicians Branch of the Academy.

One Nomination Limit

Another change in the Awards Plan provides that no individual or company (referring to award for best production) shall be entitled to more than one nomination with the achievement polling the highest vote to be listed in case the individual or company may have received enough votes for different achievements to be entitled to more than one nomination. There are to be only five nominees, others being added in order of votes to replace an achievement that may be disqualified by this rule.

Final balloting will be in sealed envelopes to be opened the night of the banquet for the bestowal of awards, on which occasion a board of tellers appointed by the president will make the count and report the results to the president who will announce them. This method of counting the votes will prevent any possible advance announcement of the winners and will undoubtedly enhance the interest of all those who attend the Annual Meeting and the Awards Dinner.

Government Notables Invited

The Awards Banquet committee, appointed by the Academy board of directors, plans to make the Academy dinner a national event in the motion picture calendar with notables of the United States Government present as especially invited guests. It is expected that those presidents of our corporations whose offices are in New York City, together with their associates, will arrange their engagements so as to make possible their presence in Hollywood on November 4. The attendant publicity will indicate definitely to all the world that the makers of motion pictures recognize the high standard of outstanding achievements on the part of single individuals.

The Academy Awards, which began modestly in the first year of their bestowal, have increased in reputation each year until now the attention of the entire American public and of Europe as well is focussed upon this annual announcement of the motion picture profession's approval of outstanding achievements by members in all branches of production.

The board of directors has approved the

A Few Beads!

The Reverend Peter L. Bell, Catholic missionary on Flores, one of the Little Sunda islands, somewhere east of Java in the Eastern seas, has brought back to New York with him a sound picture which had ben made with a native cast and native music. Father Bell complained of the temperamental actors on the native island; noting, however, that they were much more easily appeased and persuaded to go on when they were tired, than the Hollywood variety. Merely a bright piece of cloth, a few beads or a little money, and they would go back to work before the camera. The missionary vouches for the film story's truth, which concerns the conversion of a native girl to Catholicism, and her subsequent refusal to marry the pagan to whom she had been sold by her parents.

AUTOMAT THEATRE GETS FAST START

Hughes-Franklin House in Hollywood Plays to Six Capacity Crowds on Second Day

The turnstile which acts in place of a ticket-taker at Hughes-Franklin's 298-seat automat house in Hollywood, The Studio, registered four full houses the opening day (July 31) and six capacity crowds on the second day, Saturday.

With "The Viking" as the inaugural feature, the little house got away to a fast start, but local critics credit the draw to the novelty of the theatre itself, rather than the picture. It is the newest thing on Hollywood boulevard and was given an aggressive exploitation bath by Jeff Lazarus and Ben Sobler, house manager, as a christening.

Considered the smallest theatre of its type in the world, the Studio yet differs as much from the usual "intimate" theatre as it does from the big palace.

Appeal to "Intellectual"

The small talking picture theatre, not referring to the fair-sized neighborhood houses, lies outside the pale of ordinary commercial enterprises. It is strictly an appeal to certain "intellectual" classes. It differs more in the kind of entertainment than in any distinctly anomalous theory of presentation.

The Studio theatre, however, has seriously entered into competition with the best commercial ventures on their own plane of entertainment.

It is hoped by Hughes-Franklin officials that lower overhead, coupled with the fact that this theatre is considered much better adapted to perfect sound reproduction and contains a general higher standard of comfort and convenience for the individual patrons, will give it perhaps more than an even break in the contest.

If it can be kept fairly well filled, the Studio undoubtedly will show thousands of exhibitors a way out of their present dilemma, it was said.

Larger Seats Used

Owing to the fact that no attempt was made at "maximum" seating capacity, it was possible to install seats considerably larger than the usual theatre chair. This, combined with provision for more space between rows, affords the patron a higher level of roomy comfort than he has been able to obtain with an ordinary admission price.

There is no middle aisle to disturb one's view of the screen when newcomers arrive. Instead of running outward as they go to the rear, the side walls of the theatre go straight back, at right angles, thus enabling the architect also to dispense with side aisles and, in addition side seats. All seats are directly frontal to the screen.

The screen itself is of the right size to give one a natural, life-like image, and is placed on a more comfortable level with the patron's eye than in most theatres.

The absence of frescoes, false walls, balconies, barnlike expanses of space, makes the sound itself more realistic, eliminating echoes and reverberations. Then, too, the fact that the volume need not be great shuts out the various annoyances accruing from poor sound track conditions.

Entrance to the theatre is by means of a stile. Payment of money is the only transaction needed. No tickets will be used. This obviates the necessity of having a doorman.

Instead of ushers, the theatre will be served by a hostess, who will assist patrons in finding their way around. During peak hours two hostesses will be in service.

Simple Decorations

The decorations are extremely simple and in the modern mode. The marquee is very novel and effective.

Among the many mechanical advantages are a Carrier Air Conditioner, costing $21,000, which will keep the theatre fresh and cool during the summer and an automatic fountain functioning on the principle of the violet ray eye. The body of the person bending down to drink intercepts a light ray which releases a stream of water.

A large glass partition in the sidewalk permits the passersby to view the gigantic refrigeration machinery. The sidewalk itself bears a number of sunken wrought iron inscriptions, cleverly worded to excite amusement and comment. One, at the edge of the glass partition reads:

"Studio Weather Factory.
"Fresh Air Made the Year Round"

Another alongside the curbstone reads:
"Parkin' just ain't allowed."

It is expected that indefinite first-runs will be the policy of the Studio theatre.

Local Ordinances!

Sunday motion picture showings were legalized in Ohio officially on August 2, but local ordinances throughout the state take precedence over the state enactment. Eight towns, a check revealed, officially declared open house, while seven others had to abide by the Blue Laws that said no. In Cleveland Heights, the two theatres conducted a canvass which resulted in 9,000 signatures favoring open Sundays. The city council is investigating and indications point to an ordinance destroying the old Blue Law. In all towns where the local statutes prohibit Sunday films, efforts will be made to revoke them.

Radio Alters Plans for Dix

"Marcheta," instead of "Frontier," will be Richard Dix's next picture following "Secret Service." Irene Dunne will co-star with him. The change was made to permit additional preparation on "Frontier."

Heavy Taxation Faces Australia

The film industry in Australia will be faced with a burden of approximately another $300,000 a year when the federal government brings down its new taxation proposals. It is proposed that the existing primage duty of 2½ per cent, be raised to 10 per cent, and, accepting this year's footage as about the same as that of last, another $412,915 will have to be found, representing an increase of $309,690.

According to estimates, gross rentals in Australia for 1930-31, will amount to $6,000,000. On that basis, the proposed primage increase is, in effect, an additional tax of 5 per cent on film hire. The taxation burden in Australia is said by many to be reaching impossible proportions.

New Technicolor Process In Radio Pictures In New York

"The Runaround" Radio picture scheduled to open at the New York Strand August 7, is the first production to utilize Technicolor's improved color process and is completely in color.

The new process is said to achieve a perfection of registration and sharpness of definition which, it is claimed, marks a far advance over all previous color efforts. The new process, confined to the printing of pictures, serves to remove the grain, resulting in greater clarity.

B & K Increases Ad Space For Booking Announcement

Publix-Balaban and Katz, Chicago, took increased advertising space in all local papers for the announcement of new product bookings, beginning Wednesday, in addition to regular space used for theatre advertising.

The circuit's new season opens in five Loop houses, showing, among others, "Merely Mary Ann," "An American Tragedy," "Monkey Business," "Trans-Atlantic," "Huckleberry Finn," "Bad Girl," "Susan Lenox," "This Modern Age," "Confessions of a Co-Ed' and "Bought."

A New "Calling Card"

R. W. Horn, member of the sales force of ERPI in New York, has a "calling card" which takes the form of a cigar, wrapped in white paper and cellophane, with his name and the company insignia on the outside.

Granet Assigned Dialogue

Dialogue for the series of "Living Book of Knowledge" will be written by Bert Granet, formerly at Paramount's Eastern studio, according to Film Exchange, Inc. Arthur Hale is doing the narrating.

No Foreigns for Dagover

Lil Dagover, German star under contract to First National, who sails for New York August 19, will make no German language films under her contract. She speaks excellent English.

Pictures Available on 35 mm. Stock Cover Many Phases of Industry Without Advertising Names

The United States Bureau of Mines is offering free to exhibitors the use of 2,000 reels of pictures depicting various phases of the mineral and allied industries, and the number constantly is being increased. The Bureau claims to have the largest library of industrial films in the country, and all have been produced under the direct supervision of the technical staff of the Bureau.

Newspapers and trade journals throughout the nation are continually carrying articles regarding this work of the Bureau and many letters of commendation are being received from leading educators calling attention to the educational value of the productions. They are being used by practically all of the foremost educational institutions, engineering societies, and all classes of civic, religious, military and other organizations.

Nothing is left undone to establish authenticity in the production of a subject, under the direction of M. F. Leopold, supervising engineer of the Motion Picture Production Section of the Bureau. On many occasions the staff has penetrated the earth to great depths with camera and lighting equipment to obtain authentic scenes of mining operations. The cameramen have traveled through Europe, Africa and Asia, as well as Alaska and every part of the United States, to obtain authentic shots.

The entire expense of production and of providing prints for distribution is met in each instance by the cooperating agency. Yet the latter does so with the understanding that no trademark, trade name or other material which might be construed as advertising shall appear in the picture. Every name or trademark is obliterated from the scene before it is shot.

In the agreements made with the cooperating agencies, the only part the Bureau of Mines plays is that of supervising, as all the photography, printing and actual physical work in connection with the making of the picture is done by the various industrial producing companies selected by the cooperating agencies.

The Bureau and M. F. Leopold, supervising engineer of the Motion Picture Production Section of the Bureau, have supervision over the actual preparation of the scenario, the directing of the picture and the editing.

The films are loaned free, except for the cost of transportation. It is understood that the borrower will provide for a first-class projection machine and a competent operator and will pay for all loss and damage other than normal wear and tear. All subjects are available in the 35-millimeter width and some also are obtainable in 16 millimeters. In case of requests the Bureau advises the naming of an alternate choice, and should be made at least two weeks for the date planned for showing.

Sees Need of New Screen In Television Projection

One of the most vital needs of television at the moment, according to Hollis S. Baird, chief engineer of Shortwave and Television Corporation, Boston, is a screen which will provide good results for the projection of television images.

The need is for rear projection, as in certain New York newsreel theatres, but in television, which will require a screen in the cabinet to be popular, the screen must be such as to lose as little light as possible.

INDEPENDENTS FORM SUPPLY ASSOCIATION

Cooperative Buying Is Not Part of Plan, Says J. E. Robin, Elected President

(Pictures on pages 30 and 31)

Furtherance of the interests of dealer-members in service and facilities afforded theatre owners is the objective of the new Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association, organized at a meeting last week at the Stevens hotel in Chicago. The organization has not adopted a cooperative buying plan, according to J. E. Robin, president. The association is to serve as a medium for cooperation by members in business building plans, equipment advertising and development of new equipment projects, he said. A constitution and bylaws for those purposes were adopted.

"With our dealer-members in all parts of the country," Robin said, "intimately in touch with the individual needs of the theatre owner in the equipment and maintenance of his house, it is felt that the association provides a means for the organization of much valuable information pertaining to successful theatre equipment and maintenance, and at the same time conflict in no way with the independent and individual operation by each dealer-member of his own supply firm. Dealer-members of the association remain sole owners of their individual firms as in the past, the function of the association being to give its dealer-members the advantages of nationwide organization and cooperation, with each maintaining and additionally insuring his independent and individual ownership of his established business."

Through the association as a means of contact, it is understood the members plan for assurance of mutually equitable business relations between themselves, manufacturers, and theatre owners. Maintenance of equality standards and the conduct of business along ethical lines that assure the continued growth of the independent dealer, without interference in the business relations between manufacturer and dealer in any way, will be furthered by the association's plans, it was stated. Specifications and technical data on all theatre equipment products will be supplied all members simultaneously through the central office of the association in standardized form.

Other officers besides Robin elected at the July 25-26 convention are L. G. Dolliver, vice president, R. G. Tannehill, secretary-treasurer and business manager, and five other directors as follows: George McArthur, G. H. Breneman, A. E. Thiele, H. F. Dusman and H. W. Graham.

Included among independent theatre supply concerns attending or represented by proxies were: Superior Motion Picture Supply Co., Pittsburgh; Clem Rizzo Movie Supplies, Philadelphia; United Projector & Film Corp., Buffalo; J. F. Dusman Motion Picture Supplies, Baltimore; Amusement Supply Co., Tampa; Breck Photoplay Supply Co., Los Angeles; Monarch Theatre Supply Co., Memphis; Amusement Supply Co., Inc., New York City; The Ray Smith Company, Milwaukee; Quality Theatre Supply Co., Omaha; Exhibitors' Supply Co., St. Louis; Western Theatrical Equipment Co., San Francisco; Walter G. Preddey Theatre Supplies, San Francisco; B. F. Shearer Co., Seattle; American Theatre Supply Co., Inc., Sioux Falls; Queen Feature Service, Inc., Birmingham; Independent Theatre Supply Co., Inc., Boston; Capitol Theatre Supply Co., Boston; Guercio & Barthel Theatre Equipment, Chicago; Oliver Moving Picture Supply Co., Cleveland; Graham Bros., Denver; Des Moines Theatre Supply Co., Des Moines; McArthur Theatre Equipment Co., Detroit; Independent Theatre Supply Co., Houston; Stebbins Theatre Equipment Co., Kansas City.

Plans were approved for the adequate financing of the functioning of the association, each dealer-member subscribing to the association funds on the basis of an entrance fee and specified monthly dues.

Who Cut It?

When Fox's "Quick Millions" showed at Warners' Metropolitan in Baltimore recently, one of the patrons noted that the picture, which he had seen several weeks before, had 12 cuts in the print. It is understood that the Maryland censor made only one cut in the film. A check on the film indicated that the cuts had possibly been made in Virginia or Pennsylvania on the print used in Baltimore. It is pointed out that this practice works unfairly upon Maryland theatres and the state censor board, making them responsible for changes with which they had nothing to do.

Young Is Named Publicity Head

Lon Young has been appointed in charge of publicity for Educational studios on the Coast. Ray Hoadley, who has been in charge of Educational publicity, has been moved over to assume charge of the Tiffany matter.

Young dates his experience in the motion picture business back many years.

Deny Gang Forced Showing Of Schmeling Fight Film

Exhibitors in Detroit have denied that they were forced to show the Schmeling-Stribling fight pictures, and Chief Assistant Prosecutor W. Gomer Krise has said that he has failed to find sufficient evidence to warrant prosecution of the Purple Gang on a charge that it had "muscled in."

Floyd Fitzsimmons, fight promotor, is the rightful owner of the films, according to Leonard Smith, investigator for the prosecutor. Showing at the Shubert-Detroit was arranged between him and Sam Carver, exhibitor, it is said.

MAYER IMPROVES ACADEMY AWARDS

following awards to be presented for the current year:

1. Actor's award for the best performance by an actor.
2. Actress' award for the best performance by an actress.
3. Directing award for the best achievement in directing.
4. Cinematography award for the best achievement in cinematography.
5. Sound recording award for the best achievement in sound recording.
6. Art direction award for the best achievement in art direction.
7. Scientific or technical award as defined in last year's rules.
8. Production award for the most outstanding motion picture production.
9. Writing award for the best adaptation.
10. Writing award for the best original motion picture story.

Most of the producing companies already have sent to the Academy office the list of feature pictures released by them in Los Angeles during the year August 1, 1930, to July 31, 1931. These lists when printed and distributed to the Academy membership are used as a basis for Academy members to make nominations. Studios also are requested to send in examples of sound recording for that special award.

Mailing Blanks

During the week of August 15, nomination blanks, together with an explanatory letter and a booklet containing the list of released pictures, will be mailed to all Academy members in good standing. The nominations are made by branches. For example, the Actors' Branch will choose five actors and five actresses who, in the branch's opinion, represent the best acting for the year.

On September 15, the nominations will close and during the first week in September the tellers, appointed by the chairman of the executive committee of the respective branches, will canvass the nominations. Final ballots will be mailed to Academy members during the week of October 5. These are returned in sealed envelopes, under suitable regulation, to insure secrecy and validity of the ballots, and are kept in charge by the secretary of the Academy until the night of the Awards Dinner. The final balloting is by the entire Academy membership and not by branches.

Vote Closes November 1

On November 1, the Awards vote closes. The president then appoints a board of tellers, composed of five Academy members, one from each branch, who, on the night of November 4, open the ballots and certify the results to the president, who then announces them to the annual business meeting and Awards Banquet of the Academy.

The Awards were given for the first time at a banquet at the Roosevelt hotel signalizing achievements during the year ending July 31, 1928. Fifteen first awards and twenty honorable mentions were conferred at that time.

The awards for the year ending July 31, 1928, were: First awards: Emil Jannings for distinguished performances in "Way of All Flesh" and "The Last Command"; Janet Gaynor, for distinguished performances in "Seventh Heaven," "Street Angel" and "Sunrise"; Frank Borzage for directing "Seventh Heaven"; Lewis Milestone for directing "Two Arabian Knights"; Ben Hecht, for writing the original story for "Underworld"; Benjamin Glazer for adaptation of "Seventh Heaven"; Joe W. Farnham for writing titles of "Telling the World" and "Fair Co-Ed"; Charles Rosher for cinematography of "Sunrise"; Karl Struss for cinematography of "Sunrise"; William Cameron Menzie for art direction of "The Tempest" and "The Dove"; Roy J. Pomeroy for engineering achievements in "Wings"; Paramount-Famous Lasky Corporation for production of outstanding photoplay, "Wings"; Fox Film Corporation for artistic quality of "Sunrise."

Special awards: Warner Brothers for producing "The Jazz Singer," marking an epoch in motion picture history; Charles Chaplin for his versatility and genius in writing, acting, directing and producing "The Circus."

1929 and 1930 Awards

Awards for the year ending July 31, 1929, were conferred at a banquet at the Ambassador hotel April 3, 1930. Statuette trophies were presented as follows: First award for actor to Warner Baxter for his distinguished performance in the pioneer outdoor Western talking picture, "In Old Arizona"; actress, Mary Pickford for her distinguished performance in the exceptional talking motion picture "Coquette"; director, Frank Lloyd for "Weary River," "The Divine Lady" and "Drag"; art director, Cedric Gibbons for "The Bridge of San Luis Rey"; cinematographer, Clyde DeVinna for photographing "White Shadows in the South Seas"; writer, Hans Kraly for "The Patriot"; production, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation for "The Broadway Melody."

The Merit Awards for the year ending July 31, 1930, were presented to the following: Lewis Milestone for directing "All Quiet on the Western Front"; M-G-M sound department, represented by Douglas Shearer for sound recording in the picture, "The Big House"; Herman Rosse for the art direction of the Universal picture, "The King of Jazz"; Joseph T. Rucker, representing himself and Willard Vander Veer, for cinematography in the picture, "With Byrd at the South Pole"; Frances Marion for writing the original story, "The Big House"; Carl Laemmle, Sr., representing Universal Pictures Corporation for producing "All Quiet on the Western Front"; George Arliss for his acting performance in "Disraeli"; Norman Shearer for her acting performance in "The Divorcee."

Prominent in the purposes for which the Academy was established is the responsibility of the artist of the motion pitcure industry to society. For that reason, part of the Academy's efforts and energies are directed toward building goodwill between the public and the industry and in furthering the honor and good repute of the profession. The Awards have become the most distinctive method of accomplishing this purpose. The members of the Awards Committee for 1931 are: Louis B. Mayer, chairman; Lois Wilson, Jean Hersholt, John Robertson, King Vidor, B. P. Schulberg, J. T. Reed, Ralph Hammeras, Al Cohn, Waldemar Young, Clinton Wunder, ex-officio.

Text of Decision In Dreiser Case

and to be the master of his body, rather than be mastered by it.

In the preparation of the picture, the producer must give consideration to the fact that the great majority of the people, composing the audience before which the picture will be presented, will be more interested that justice prevail over wrongdoing than that the inevitability of Clyde's end clearly appear.

Upon this principal question of fact, as to whether the picture fairly portrays the book, there is a difference of opinion.

The plaintiff has submitted the opinion of critics, that the picture reproduces the letter of the book but fails to represent its psychology and social implications and therefore, misrepresents the book.

The defendant has submitted the opinion of an impressive list of critics, who find that the picture is a true representation of the letter and spirit of the book.

Under these circumstances it is clear that no injunction pendente lite should be granted. Dematteis v. McGoldrick Realty Company, Inc., 231 App. Div. 745.

Maryland MPTO Bans MGM, Paramount Percentage Films

Only two theatre members of the MPTO of Maryland, have thus far signed up for the product of Paramount as a result of the organization's resolution against members playing the MGM and Paramount product on percentage. The two, the Overlea and Irvington, signed prior to June 11, the date of the resolution.

It is understood no Baltimore residential houses have signed for MGM product for the 1932 season. It is estimated that unless some arrangement is made for flat purchases as well as percentage, the two companies will lose some $150,000 for the season in the territory.

20 In Columbia Exploitation Department; Ennis In Charge

More than 20 men have already been appointed to the newly organized field exploitation department of Columbia Pictures, with additions to be made as picture openings increase. Bert Ennis, newly appointed head, will supervise the field work.

Among those films which will receive particular attention, not only in key cities but also in subsequent runs, are "Dirigible," "The Miracle Woman," "Fifty Fathoms Deep," "Pagan Lady" and "The Dreyfuss Case," all scheduled for summer release.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Despite the extreme heat of last week, the theatres showed greater losses than the previous seven day period. While the increase was slight, it indicated a trend toward better business. Total grosses from 164 theatres for the previous week were $2,024,443, while the current week jumped to $2,038,596.

Although for the previous week there were only four new low grosses, the current week registered 11. With this also was one new high, which was made at the Lyric theatre in Indianapolis, Ind., with "Gold Dust Girtie." Grosses from theatres in 29 cities are included in the Herald's compilation.

The TECHNICOLOR work in "THE RUNAROUND" is the finest example of color photography I have ever seen . . .

The picture constituted a rigid test of TECHNICOLOR'S new printing process. TECHNICOLOR successfully met every production challenge in the studio and has obtained beautiful results upon the screen.

The colors are brilliant and strikingly contrasted. In addition, TECHNICOLOR has achieved in "THE RUNAROUND" a perfection of registration and a sharpness of definition which represents a truly amazing advance over all previous color pictures.

TO

The First Gentleman of the Screen

ADOLPH ZUKOR

We have the honor to express our most sincere congratulations on the celebration of PARAMOUNT'S 20TH BIRTHDAY JUBILEE.

With gratitude we remember that at the humble birth of this company it was ADOLPH ZUKOR who tendered us the hand of friendship—who placed his faith in us—who fired us with a spark of his own splendid courage—and who inspired us to build on that same rock of service, on which he founded THE PARAMOUNT-PUBLIX CORPORATION.

We are proud to have retained that faith—that friendship—that courage—and that Paramount ideal of service.

And so it is, with a very full measure of devotion and respect, that we wish ADOLPH ZUKOR and THE PARAMOUNT-PUBLIX CORPORATION—

Many Happy Returns

"Witness" Gross To Victims' Kin

Warner Brothers turned over the entire proceeds of the first two performances of "The Star Witness" which opened at the Winter Garden, New York, Monday night, to the families of the five child victims of gang bullets in New York's "Little Italy" recently.

The film, featuring Walter Huston, Charles (Chic) Sale, Frances Starr and Grant Mitchell, and directed by William Wellman, has to do with the revelation to the police by an old man, of information leading to the capture of gangsters. Half-page ads in the New York dailies this week, are in the form of an open letter to the district attorney and police commissioner of the city, pointing out the value of the film in arousing the public to the situation.

New Company Plans Initial Italian Dialogue Picture

The Aurora Film Corporation, recently formed by Rosario Romeo, Italian actor-director for the production of Italian talking films in this country, has opened distribution branches in Boston and Providence.

The first production, shortly to go into work, will be "Love and Death," Italian stage play which will be adapted. "Miss Italy 1931," for the selection of whom a national beauty contest is being conducted, will be featured.

Independent Exchange Sells Lineup of Shorts to Circuit

Loew has bought the entire lineup of shorts released by Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, for theatres in Cleveland, Akron, Canton, Toledo, Columbus, Dayton and Louisville. This is said to be the first time an independent exchange has sold an entire series to a large circuit.

"Sherlock Holmes' Fatal Hour" has been booked for the Warner Lake theatre in Cleveland by the same exchange.

Furst Wins RKO Pathe Golf Reel Sales Test and Clubs

Nat Furst, RKO Pathe New Haven branch manager, was the winner in the recent Johnny Farrell golf reels sales contest. The award was a de luxe bag of clubs, the donation of A. H. Schnitzer, short subject sales manager.

Ross Cropper of Boston ran Furst a close race, coming out only 2½ percent behind the winner.

Denies Rumor of Quitting Plant

Trem Carr, vice president and production executive of Monogram Pictures on the Coast, has emphatically denied reports that Monogram intends giving up its Coast studios at Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood. He also scouted a rumor, said to be from the same source, that the company is turning over the production of the Bob Steele Western series to Tiffany.

Carr said in part, "We are ahead of our production schedule for the coming year. . . . Our present quarters are well suited to our needs, and there is absolutely no reason for moving to the Tiffany or any other lot."

It is expected the device will be manufactured and marketed in New York in the near future.

YOUR PUBLIC —AND PARAMOUNT

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITH organizations, as with individuals, there is a great deal to be said about personality . . . that indefinable quality that wins for its possessor the quickened interest of his fellow man, friendships in larger number, success in his undertakings. It is not often that we find in the business world of highly organized enterprises a company with a personality—yet, in some inexplicable way, Paramount has achieved it!

Paramount Personality

Paramount is having a party with twenty candles on the cake . . . and "one to grow on." For half of those years Paramount has accepted and developed the Will Hays policy of the Open Door and has invited the organized public to enter. While most of the companies were finding women's clubs and organized film groups a nuisance, Paramount was visioning in their expression a future clamorous voice. During the years that many motion picture executives were wishing that the busy-body women who would have a finger in the motion picture pie were all at the bottom of the fathomless sea, Paramount officers planned preview schedules, saw that these schedules were kept by their employees with meticulous carefulness; answered correspondence promptly and courteously; invited the groups from all over the country to bring their problems to them . . . and develped through all of this a definite public reaction of good will for Paramount.

Reaction

In this department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD which has, through its correspondence, become a clearing house for group expression, the letters that pour in carry, with surprising repetition, praise of Paramount's helpfulness. In our own experience in these columns, there have been more letters of request for Endorsed Lists, Radio Reprints, Helpful Literature for Making Addresses, Information on Censorship and the School and Screen Service from managers of Paramount-Publix houses than from any other. The letters, whether they come from San Antonio or Boston, Palo Alto or Hoboken are practically alike; the stationery is always the same, the heading identical except for the manager's name, and the inquiry interested and courteous. This kind of thing wins reaction. One feels that Paramount has to be reckoned with as a strong national unit.

Keynote Expression

Like the keystone in the archway of a structure that supports and gives the line of architectural dimension to the whole, the formal statements of executives of any organization sound the key note of that company's position. Within this month, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Paramount Publix Corporation, on his arrival in Hollywood from New York, said for publication:

"Because of recent business conditions, thousands of families throughout the country have been forced to eliminate help from their households. This means that the youngsters must now accompany their parents to the theatre. Good, wholesome entertainment that will appeal equally to these grownups and their children is the type of screen fare the public must now have."

In the same week, Sidney R. Kent, vice president of Paramount Publix, declaring that public taste is swinging from the extreme sophistication in entertainment to that of clean, healthy, down to earth subjects, said:

"The public is demanding that its entertainment have a wholesome treatment. Sex subjects always will be treated in entertainment because that is Life, but there is a right and wrong way of presenting it and our film patrons are demanding the former way. We believe that there is room for some religious pictures, or those of a semi-religious nature such as 'The Christian.' Also we believe that gangster subjects will meet with public disfavor because the nation is tired of that phase of life. The screen has overplayed the underworld, as has the press. Today's trend in public tastes is explained by the simple fact that when entertainment reaches one extreme, it always swings radically to the other extreme. That is the condition today. Heart interest instead of gun play is the public cry. Comedy is always popular if it is excellent and clean. Outdoor action will succeed if it follows a gripping story instead of featuring gun play in beautiful settings."

Paramount Performance

Those of us who have been in close touch with the studios' releases during the past year know that the statements above are consistent with Paramount's record of achievement. The Juvenile Cycle

With the making of "Tom Sawyer," Paramount headed the line of march toward the new era in juvenile and family audience entertainment. "Tom Sawyer" was an immediate and gratifying success. The public responded enthusiastically to this needed type of picture—and clamored for more. "Skippy" was the answer, and it was a most happy one. In "Skippy," Paramount gave us a childhood classic, not only the year's best juvenile picture, but probably the finest picture for young people that has come to the screen. "Skippy" has been a box office victory and is directly responsible for the lineup of similar pictures now in production in the studios of the various companies.

News Reel Scoops

The same high compliment for accomplishment may also be awarded to Paramount for its newsreel service in the past twelve months. Those of the public groups broadcasting a motion picture review know better than most people how consistently the Paramount news service flashes through with the first pictured returns of any world event. Beginning with the "Byrd at the South Pole" record the Paramount newsreel aces have scored scoop after scoop in this year.

The thousands of public groups working for better film entertainment in their communities over the entire country are appreciative of Paramount's constructive co-operation. Their voice is raised with that of the industry for Paramount's birthday.

THE STORY of PARAMOUNT 1911–1931

SUN NEVER SETS ON PARAMOUNT LAND

SALES OFFICES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

The Rise of Paramount

FOR two full decades Paramount Pictures have loomed across the amusement horizon of the world. Today the Paramount Publix Corporation, the fruition of years of growth and expansion, is celebrating this attainment with a Twentieth Birthday Jubilee.

The occasion is one for anticipation as well as retrospect. What great strides will this company make in the next twenty years? It grew from a small company paying $18.75 taxes its first year to a $306,000,000 corporation in 1931. It grew from a small producing organization, turning out a few pictures a season, to one producing more than two hundred a year. It grew from a string of nickelodeons to a vast circuit of deluxe theatres. It grew from a small distributing company to a world encircling organization, furnishing screen entertainment to the seventy leading countries of the globe. Its audience grew from a few hundred thousand to hundreds of millions of people.

With this record behind it Paramount is entering a new period of development, equipped in resources and experience to meet the ever changing demands of the show business. No matter what new form motion picture entertainment may take in the future Paramount is preparing to meet it just as it has met the transitions of the past. The research laboratories of the company are continuously experimenting with new forms and only the imagination can foretell what the future holds.

An ideal of one man—Adolph Zukor—is responsible for the organization known to the world as the Paramount Publix Corporation. Little did he realize twenty years ago, when he decided to produce and distribute "famous players in famous plays," that his company would one day rise to dominant position in an industry that had taken its place among the greatest industries of the world.

It was a red letter day in the life of Adolph Zukor as a showman when he bought the American rights to the multiple reel feature, "Queen Elizabeth," starring the incomparable Sarah Bernhardt. This was really the beginning of the company that is now Paramount Publix. So successful was this film that Mr. Zukor decided to produce for himself and subsequently he opened a studio on Twenty-third street in New York City. He allied himself with Daniel Frohman and through him lured many of the great stars of the day to films. The Famous Players company flourished. At the same time in Hollywood another producing company headed by Jesse L. Lasky and Cecil B. De Mille was making progress. Mr. Zukor saw "The Squaw Man," their first release, and decided it was better than his company had done. Besides, he needed 104 pictures a year and could not supply them all himself. Accordingly he invited the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to combine forces with him and as a result the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was formed in 1916. Included in this new corporation were other companies, one of which was the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which had been the distributing organization for the Zukor and Lasky made productions. The new company now controlled both the production and distribution of its product.

Mr. Zukor and his associates were soon forced into the theatre business, however, by a combination of exhibitors who engaged in production. It was one thing to produce and distribute pictures and another to get them properly exhibited. Mr. Zukor started by buying the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York in 1920. Then his company began the judicious purchasing of other theatres throughout the country to protect the outlets for its pictures. In 1925 the Publix Theatres corporation was formed as a subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Thus did the building of the organization go on and in the spring of 1930 the name of the company was changed to the Paramount Publix Corporation, a name that represents Paramount Pictures and Publix Theatres. Adolph Zukor's creation of twenty years before had rounded a cycle of complete development.

With studios in Hollywood, New York, London and Paris, producing pictures in thirteen different languages; with a distributing organization of forty-four branches in the United States and Canada and 110 branches in the seventy leading countries of the world, and with world-wide circuits of deluxe theatres Paramount touches the lives of more people in the world than any other commercial activity under one management. Wherever motion pictures are shown, from Capetown to eastern Asia, the Paramount trademark is a symbol of entertainment.

With its affiliated companies—the Columbia Broadcasting System, the Charles Frohman company, and the Famous Music corporation—Paramount, now more than ever in its history, is a story teller to the world. In pictures, on the stage and over the radio this company carries drama, comedy and music to the far corners of the world. Great characters of fiction and the drama are brought to life in action and sound through the stars and featured players in Paramount Pictures. Every afternoon and evening when people decide to go to the theatre for motion picture entertainment millions of them pick a Paramount-Publix theatre where Paramount Pictures are showing. In the United States Paramount-Publix theatres alone have a seating capacity of 900,000.

Now Paramount starts upon another decade of progress with the celebration of its Twentieth Birthday Jubilee—a celebration made possible through the far-sightedness of Adolph Zukor and the working out of sound principles of entertainment by a world-wide organization of showmen.

ADOLPH ZUKOR FOLLOWS THE GLEAM

Motivating ideal that drew him to America is perpetuated in influence he has had on industry

The career of Adolph Zukor is certain proof of the value of Tennyson's exhortation, "Follow the gleam." In the case of this erstwhile immigrant who rose to a dominant position in the world of the screen, "the gleam" was his desire to have the best —always the best, in his business as well as his personal life. That motivating ideal, which became an unswerving creed with him as life progressed, drew him to America with only $40 in his pocket, because in America he felt he could obtain the best more readily than in his native Hungarian village. That ideal guided him through his early ventures in the fur business, in the promotion of the initial penny arcades, in the first gropings of the motion picture business.

The result has been that Adolph Zukor is now recognized as one of the most potent factors in bringing motion pictures out of their early low status as slum entertainment. The president of Paramount Publix Corporation has been outstanding in raising motion pictures to their present eminent standing, both because of the finished product which he has fathered and the high-class, luxurious theatres which he as furthered.

That is why the Paramount Publix organization is now celebrating its Twentieth Birthday Jubilee, for in those two decades which were inaugurated by Zukor's first feature presentation—Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth"—the world has witnessed all that is really worthwhile remembering to date in the history of films.

Humble Birth

Adolph Zukor's beginnings bore little augury of future distinction, back in the tiny, humble town of Ricse in Hungary, where he was born January 7, 1873. Bereft of both parents at an early age, the boy and his elder brother were taken to live with a maternal uncle. The uncle was a very upright man, with an exceptional taste for good literature and good manners. He not only influenced his nephew in this regard by personal example, but fostered his education as much as his own means and the slender income from the elder Zukor's estate would permit.

When further schooling was impossible, young Zukor was apprenticed for three years to a nearby storekeeper, Herman Blau. He became Blau's righthand man. A minor partnership in the general store seemed on the way. But Zukor felt cramped.

After some diplomatic maneuvering he managed to obtain his guardian's consent to come to America, and with a steerage ticket for a little third-class tub of a steamer, and $40 sewed into the lining of his coat, he left the home of his boyhood for the New World. He landed at Castle Garden in the autumn of 1888, in the era when the biggest skyscraper was the 12-story building at Number One Broadway. But the golden gleams of the new miracle of electric light, radiating from the office buildings, lighted the fires of ambition in him, burning so brightly that his early associates said of him, "He's always in a great hurry."

His great hurry to get somewhere took him in short order to a job as upholsterer, tacking covers on sofas at $2 a week. Then he shifted to employment as handy man at an East Side fur shop. While he ran errands, swept the floor and made himself generally useful for $4 a week, he was learning the details of the fur business, which struck him then as having the best prospects—especially as expert furriers got salaries as high as $25 a week. Moreover, he was enabled to learn English without embarrassment, as most of the employees were Hungarians. Presently he was supplementing this knowledge at night school.

Building Vitality

His restless energies also found outlet in boxing and baseball. They gave him a wiry, sturdy frame, muscularly lean, and a store of vitality which stood him in good stead during the high-pressure years to come. They came very rapidly, for young Zukor, after embarking with a friend, Max Schosberg, on the sporadic peddling of novelty furs, presently launched forth with him in a regular manufacturing partnership. They removed to Chicago, to take advantage of the growing fur business there and the large trade of the World's Fair. A boom in mink scarfs was followed by a slump in shoulder capes. While out there, Zukor saw his first moving picture, the famous little episode of the kiss between May Irwin and John C. Rice which was the first big sensation of early cinematography.

Managing to pull through the depression, Zukor formed a new partnership with Morris Kohn, and incidentally in his travels met Marcus Loew, another young furrier. By 1904, after they opened a New York branch, Kohn & Company had an A-1 rating with the banks, and Zukor was worth between one and two hundred thousand dollars. He might have retired, a wealthy man at the end of only 16 years in this country, had not fate beckoned him in another direction.

Max Goldstein, a young acquaintance, fired the partners with enthusiasm for a glittering new scheme—the penny arcade. They not only lent him the $3,000 he sought to establish such an amusement corridor at South Union Square in New York, with Marcus Loew as one of the partners, but they entered actively into the management. The enterprise prospered beyond their greatest dreams—so much so that Zukor and his partner decided to dissolve their fur business and dedicate themselves to the fascinating undertaking of the penny arcade. Eventually differences of opinion in the control led Zukor to withdraw, leaving his energy and capital at a loose end.

He heard that William A. Brady, one of the premier theatrical showmen of the day, had bought the Atlantic Coast rights for "Hale's Tours," a unique exhibition which presented travel moving pictures culled from all parts of the world in a realistic manner at the end of an imitation railway car. He approached Brady, arranged a partnership and in 1905 established the first of Hale's Tours in New York on Union Square, alongside his earlier penny arcade.

Other "Trains" Started

The business prospered greatly at the start, so promisingly that other "trains" were opened in Newark, Boston and Pittsburgh. Then suddenly its vogue vanished. Zukor sought to pulmotor the business with "The Great Train Robbery," the first screen production to tell a genuine story, though lasting only one reel. The melodrama stirred up patronage for a while. But it wasn't enough. Zukor and Brady faced a loss.

Brady suggested that they throw the company, legitimately enough, into bankruptcy. Zukor was dumbfounded. The strict integrity he had absorbed from his maternal uncle forbade him to take advantage of the law in this way. He became so incensed at such an idea that Brady, erstwhile promoter of boxers and accustomed to pugnacity, half-expected for a moment to be attacked by a pair of violent fists.

When Zukor calmed down, he determined to pull the business out of a hole himself—and did. He scrapped the machinery of "Hale's Tours," and turned the site into a five-cent motion picture theatre, called the Comedy, using whatever one-reel and split-reel subjects were available in those days. With the help of these scenes of Western banditry, Eastern mashing and general chases all over the map, Zukor was enabled in a few years to work the New York house out of a deficit. After selling the Pittsburgh theatre, he drew the Boston and Newark nickelodeons also into the profit column.

Meanwhile a great discontent had been growing in Zukor's mind over the quality of picture he was showing. By now he believed heart and soul in the future of the picture, even though he ran vaudeville at the Comedy theatre to help fill out the bill of meager pictures. A habit of questioning patrons adroitly as they emerged, showed him that his clientele talked most about the vaudeville, but that, whenever they saw a really worthwhile picture, they never mentioned the variety turns.

The run of pictures failed to please the creative instinct in him. That inner prompting was stirred, moreover, by contact with the Biograph studio in 11 East Fourteenth street. Here he met David Wark Griffith, already winning fame as an innovator, a pioneer who dared to make pictures of more than one reel, and went even so far as to cut people's bodies off their heads and show the bust alone—an unheard-of heresy in those days before the full flower of the close-up.

Zukor loved to hang around the ramshackle studio, watching the director work, learning the intricacies of picture production, and even catching a glimpse of that rising little heroine with the golden curls, Mary Pickford. Zukor showed the popular films in which Mary appeared anonymously at his Comedy theatre, but he never actually met her till some time later.

When "Camille" was first made as a one-reeler, Zukor employed a versatile young vaudeville performer, afterward to become famous as Lowell Sherman, and stationed him in a box behind the screen to recite the appropriate dialogue in four different voices—thus introducing the "talking picture." While this effort attracted notice, it seemed forced, and Zukor abandoned that.

A New Gleam

It was after he presented the "Passion Play" from Oberammergau in four reels—a daring expansion of the conventional one-reeler—at his Newark house, and realized the strong drawing power it held, that he gained the first clue to the new direction which pictures were to take. Longer films, as well as better films—this was the new gleam he was to follow. He sought cooperation from Motion Pictures Patents Company, then dominating the film business through use of their power to license only pictures they approved. This organization, known as the Trust in those trust-busting days, failed, with the smugness of prosperity, to appreciate Zukor's forward-looking viewpoint.

Driven back upon his own resources, Zukor decided to embark upon the most momentous move of his life. He resolved to launch a production company of his own which would make full length films that would offer a whole evening's entertainment. They were to be finished pictures. To that end he determined upon the most startling departure of all. He would wean actors from the spoken drama, and present them in well known vehicles from the stage. His policy would be "Famous Players in Famous Plays."

Stage actors at that time regarded the screen with scorn as an illicit offspring of the drama. Zukor planned to change all that. He would raise the screen productions to true dignity in the eyes of the profession as well as the public by giving the actors vehicles worthy of their talents.

In the midst of his intensive planning toward this end something momentous happened which aided materially in his project. Sarah Bernhardt, being French and undeterred by any narrow Broadway prejudices about the screen, decided to appear before the camera in her current vehicle, "Queen Elizabeth." The resultant picture was something of a sensation, not only because it was in four reels, but because it was mounted and photographed, as well as acted, in a manner which was a distinct advance.

When word of this great achievement reached New York, Zukor immediately snapped up the American rights—for the unprecedented sum of $35,000. Casting about for some one of established reputation to be associated in presenting "Queen Elizabeth, Zukor decided upon Daniel Frohman. This charming personage, noted on Broadway as in the country at large, was then as now one of the best-beloved men of the theatre, whose keen and humane sympathy would make him more open than other managers to a project which might not, in the view of the period, have the best standing in dramatic caste. At the same time Daniel Frohman's wide circle of acquaintances would be helpful, Zukor felt, in bringing noted actors and authors into the screen fold.

Frohman Cooperates

Frohman proved not only receptive, but resourcefully cooperative. He obtained from his brother, Charles, the use of the hallowed Lyceum theatre for the initial exhibition, and rallied a large number of his distinguished friends to attend the opening. Though it was in the middle of summer, they turned out in gallant numbers. They and the picture made of July 12, 1912, a truly portentous date in the history of the screen. The well-made picture, with a notable cast and a full-bodied, human story, had at last arrived.

The reverberations from this served to spur Zukor on to greater efforts in his aim to bring only the best to the screen. He started Famous Players Film Company. He obtained the directorial services of Edwin S. Porter, the man who had been bold enough to cut loose with "The Great Train Robbery," and actively embarked on producing his own films in a studio improvised on two floors of an old armory on West Twenty-third street. Here James K. Hackett, still a matinee idol, reproduced his success, "The Prisoner of Zenda," doing an impressive job, though facilities were somewhat cramped. In swimming the castle moat, for instance, Hackett had to plow across a tank which could hold only a foot and a half of water, dragging himself along the bottom in a simulation of the crawl stroke.

Nevertheless the picture was deemed such an advance over anything produced in America that Zukor and Frohman decided to give it another gala showing at the Lyceum theatre, similar to the premiere of the Bernhardt film. Here a hitch occurred that threatened to throw all their plans askew. The socalled Trust, which had turned a deaf ear to Zukor's ambitious project, now gave signs of trying to snuff him out. If his heresy of bigger and better pictures should spread, it would not only jar the Trust loose from its complacency over its own inane pot-boilers; it might seriously interfere with its prevailing power. So the directors of the Trust debated until the very moment when the curtain was to rise on "The Prisoner of Zenda" at the Lyceum as to whether they should grant a license, without which a picture could not then be shown.

There were divided counsels in the directorate. One group held that if the Trust refused a license, they would alienate public sympathy. The public was sensitive over anything that smacked of repression. To meet this attitude, the Trust extensively had exploited the point that it sought to present only the best on the screen. Yet here they might be very well making liars out of themselves by suppressing an exemplary picture—and Zukor was counting on just such a deterring thought among them. Moreover, there was another faction that of its own volition desired longer and better films. The result was that the Zukor cause won out, and the license was granted by telephone just as the Lyceum audience was growing impatient.

Zukor drew a long breath of relief, but he decided to avoid a renewal of such a harrowing hair-breadth escape from doom in the future. So he and Frohman set to work to influence Thomas A. Edison in their favor. The celebrated inventor's interests, through the patented improvements he had contributed to films, lay officially with the Trust. His friendly offices could overcome all opposition. The manner in which Zukor and Frohman obtained his influence was a typical example of their canniness in handling men.

How Edison Was Won

Frohman went to the inventor's home and received a polite audience. Edison gave him an equally polite letter to Motion Picture Patents Company, requesting them to license the Famous Players product. But it was only an impersonal, formal suggestion—nothing calculated to obtain general approval from the Trust. So Frohman mentioned casually that he had been Horace Greeley's office boy on the old New York Tribune and had seen Edison when he was a newspaper telegrapher. Instantly that remark opened up a flood of reminiscence on the part of Edison, expanding him warmly. He became so responsive that eventually he wrote a new letter of recommendation to the Trust, couched in such strong terms that they would be unable to refuse.

They didn't—and thereby insured the growth of the Zukor company, and their own downfall. That recognition might be called the great turning point of Zukor's career. All other phases of his career, with the exception of the introduction of sound to the screen, were far less momentous than this period.

Nevertheless, though his path became more assured, thrilling and often trying events crowded upon him thick and fast.

A ROMANCE OF MOTION PICTURES

The old 26th studio in New York, rebuilt after the fire, where Adolph Zukor first produced his feature pictures, beginning with James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo" and "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett.

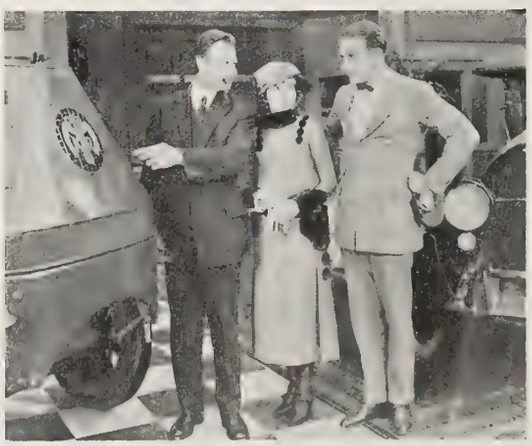
In 1912, Adolph Zukor presented to the public his first feature length picture, "Queen Elizabeth," which starred the great tragedienne, Sarah Bernhardt. Following the success of this film, Zukor started the making of his own pictures.

When pictures were in their infancy, Mary Pickford was appearing in "Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm." This was in 1917.

Eighteen years ago, or in 1913, to be exact, "The Virginian," with Dustin Farnum, was produced at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. It was one of the forerunners of feature production.

In 1919, the popular picture, "Male and Female," was produced. It was one of Cecil B. DeMille's early triumphs under the Paramount banner. Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels and others were featured.

Another of the early famous stars of motion pictures, Marguerite Clark, in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," a Zukor film.



Every person in the motion picture industry remembers back to 1920 when Wallace Reid was in his hey-day. This photograph shows him with Lois Wilson and Charles Ogle in "What's Your Hurry."

1921 brought Rudolph Valentino forth in one of his greatest productions, "The Sheik," which was one of the outstanding Paramount attractions. Agnes Ayres and Walter Long appeared with him.

This was an historic day in Hollywood. It was the filming of the first scene for "The Squaw Man," the initial picture to be made by the Lasky Play Company, which later combined with the Famous Players Company.

The historic Lasky barn in Hollywood where "The Squaw Man" was made in 1913. It is a far cry from this plant and the Zukor 26th street studio to the present mammoth organization of Paramount Publix throughout the world.

One of the Paramount successes of 1924 was "Peter Pan," the James Barrie story, with Betty Bronson, Mary Brian and Esther Ralston. It was this picture which brought Bronson into the limelight.

Cecil B. DeMille, in 1925, gave the screen his most lavishly produced picture, "The Ten Commandments," which featured such players as the late Theodore Roberts and other stars of note.

William S. Hart in the early days of Paramount Pictures when the West really was "the great open spaces," and Westerns were deluxe screen fare.

One of the first pictures to have synchronized sound was "Wings," which was produced by Paramount in 1929. In this air epic were Charles Rogers and Richard Arlen. This was one of the first air thrillers.

In 1924, Paramount introduced a feature length picture all in color. It was "Wanderer of the Wasteland," and starred Jack Holt, picture above.

KENT AND LASKY TYPIFY POLICY OF LONG SERVICE FOR MANPOWER

Salesmen School One of Kent's Systems

Zoning Plan Innovated by Distribution Executive, Also 100 Per Cent Club

While Paramount has been spreading its activities to the corners of the earth in the last twenty years, the steady growth of the company's manpower has been one of the outstanding achievements in the development of the organization.

A majority of the executives of the company and a great number of the employes in the various departments have been with the company for years. In a business where the turnover in men is as rapid as the turnover in product, this record is all the more remarkable and been a stabilizing influence in the motion picture industry, which, from the very nature of the business, has been one of considerable fluctuation.

To Adolph Zukor this growth in manpower has been a constant source of satisfaction. He has watched young men progress as his company expanded its interests. His vision and foresight in picking men to do certain jobs and his encouragement and guidance of them, after their selection, has been a chief factor in the growth of the company.

One of the most conspicuous examples of Zukor's policy in this phase of the development of the Paramount Publix Corporation was the selection of S. R. Kent, now one of the vice-presidents of the company, a member of the board of directors, and an outstanding figure in the motion picture industry. Kent joined the company as a salesman in the Kansas City office fifteen years ago and has risen rapidly to his present position. When he became general sales manager in 1919 Kent immediately began to build a distribution department which today ranks second to none in the business of selling motion pictures. When confronted with a lack of manpower, he inaugurated the Paramount's Salesmen School. Many of his graduates are now in responsible positions with the company.

S. R. KENT

A zoning system, whereby every theatre in the country is accounted for, was another of the innovations started by Kent. He also inaugurated the present system of sales conventions at which salesmen are told the complete details of the company's productions, policies, and affairs each year. He started the 100 Per Cent Club, honor unit of the distribution department's field force, which has supplied many branch managers for the company.

By precept and example Kent has inculcated a policy of fair dealing into the Paramount sales force.

Kent always has worked on the principle that manpower solves all the problems of the motion picture business. The rise, or fall, of a motion picture company depends upon the strength of its personnel. This view held by the chief executives of Paramount has been, to a large extent, responsible for the growth of the company.

No matter to what department in Paramount one turns he will find men of long service. Jesse L. Lasky has been the guiding head of the production department since the early days when pictures were emerging from the chrysalis stage. E. E. Shauer started and developed the foreign department of the company. Today it has branches in every country in the world. Elek J. Ludvigh, chief counsel of the corporation is another executive of long service, as is Ralph Kohn, treasurer. Frank Meyer, now chief purchasing agent, started with the company as a laboratory executive when Zukor first began to produce pictures at the old Twenty-sixth Street studio in New York.

Herman Wobber, special representative of the company in San Francisco, and William E. Smith, district sales manager, supervising sales in Philadelphia and Washington, have been connected with the company ever since the release of "Queen Elizabeth." Both were original franchise holders of Paramount.

John D. Clark and George Schaefer, divisional sales managers of the company, have been with the company more than twelve years and both have worked their way to executive positions under Kent's "feed 'em from the bottom policy." Other junior executives of the company who have seen many years of service are Charles E. McCarthy, director of public relations, Russel Holman, advertising manager, A. M. Bostford, director of advertising and publicity for theatres, Arch Reeve, West Coast director of publicity, and John Hammell, exchange representative. A number of other executives and department heads have records of ten or more years with the company.

This development of manpower has given to Paramount an esprit de corps among its personnel that money cannot buy. It has fostered an interest in the welfare of the company which is soon absorbed by the newest employee. It is this "Paramount Spirit" that has carried the company successfully through the various changes in the motion picture industry.

Lasky Pioneer in Spirit As Well As Action

Early Desire to Emulate Sousa Was Followed by Newspaper Work and Vaudeville

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production for Paramount Publix Corporation, has had the spirit of a pioneer all his life. From earliest days he was forever trying out new occupations, new avenues of interest. The result has been a career which has been one of the most colorful in pictures. This has provided him with a great range of experience which has proven invaluable in culling proper material for screen productions.

He was bound to have a roving spirit of enterprise, for he came of pioneer stock. His grandfather, Bernard Lasky, came to New York in 1810. Not satisfied with conditions in the East, the family moved westward. When Jesse arrived, on September 13, 1880, his parents, Isaac and Sarah (Platt) Lasky, were residing in San Jose, near San Francisco.

After receiving an education in the grammar and high schools of San Francisco, young Lasky was looking forward to attending Stanford University, when his father died. This threw upon the youth the burden of making his own way and providing for his mother and sister. He managed to curb his disappointment, for he now felt the way was opened for another ambition—a more secret one. He longed to emulate John Philip Sousa as a musician. To that end he had been diligently practicing on the cornet. This enabled him soon to obtain a position with a theatre orchestra. But after two years the Hawiian Islands beckoned to him.

He quickly obtained work in a theatre orchestra in Honolulu. But the theatre closed down and Lasky found that these weren't such isles of the blessed after all. He finally became a member of the Royal

BRINGING THE WORLD TO THE WORLD

Eight "expeditionary pictures" present authentic records of people and fight for existence

If all the world is a stage it can be photographed

No matter how remote the spots—deep into the jungles, high into the mountains, over the vast ice wastes of the poles, or into sparsely inhabited regions of the earth—Paramount has demonstrated that the camera can bring the story of the struggle for existence among all species to the screen in all its dramatic aspects.

Not only has Paramount assisted the roving souls, who took such pictures at hazard to themselves, by releasing their pictures under it own banner but it also has provided funds and the cooperation of its organization throughout the world in the actual creating of scenes of landscape and action. The company has been a pioneer in what might be termed "expeditionary films." It has maintained an unbroken record for the past half-dozen years of presenting to the public at least one such picture a year.

Tiger Country Next

With eight such undertakings to their credit to date—including the new "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," part of which will be filmed in the tiger country of India by Ernest B. Schoedsack—Paramount executives feel this record is an outstanding feature of the Twentieth Birthday Jubilee Celebration. Paramount feels that such pictures as "Chang" and "Rango" are a worthwhile and immortal contribution to the screen.

Even to this day some of the earlier productions, such as "Chang," are still being shown around the world, and are being sought for by educational and other social organizations. Such a picture as the daring epic of fortitude, "With Byrd at the South Pole," has played to repeat engagements, sometimes being brought back to a locality as many as six times.

The inspirational effect of such pictures is incalculable. Educational authorities, church organizations and social welfare associations time and again have endorsed these pictures because of this aspect.

Moreover, pictures like "Grass" and "Moana" have carried weight by their very veracity. Here were adventures that were lived not only by the subjects who were photographed, in stories that grew naturally and inevitably out of their own surroundings and customs. Here were stories that had to be lived by hardy producers and cameramen themselves. In addition, as in the case of "The Silent Enemy" particularly, they formed the authentic record of people—in this case the Indians. They will be invaluable some day as a still living saga of a day that is done.

Paramount has been willing to underwrite such productions even where it might not be expected that they would return a big box office profit.

It is quite fitting that this tradition should be carried forward by Ernest B. Schoedsack, since this famous world-wanderer, photographer, nature lover and explorer has had a governing part in the taking of most of this type of picture. With Merian C. Cooper he produced, in fact, the first on Paramount's list, the story of the migration of Persian tribes across vast stretches of mountains and prairies which was distributed under the title of "Grass."

Their joint undertaking came to pass a few years after the World war, during which Schoedsack served as a member of the Photographic Department of the United States Army, being under fire frequently in major engagements. Cooper, who had been a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy, became an aviator in the war and saw his fair share of combat. Schoedsack, who was driven from his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Hollywood, where he worked in the camera crews of various studios, including the Mack Sennett, followed the call of the horizon after the war to various out-of-the-way corners of Europe, eventually landing in Constantinople, because things seemed to be happening around there.

Fate threw him into contact with Cooper, who had roved all the way from Florida, when the pair joined up with an expedition encircling the globe in a ninety-foot yacht. During the hot trip across the Red Sea these twin restless souls concocted the idea of filming "Grass" in Persia. Finally they reached their destination, after having been shipwrecked on the rocky Arabian coast and forced to fight their way through exposure and thirst for fourteen days to the nearest habitation. With equipment hastily assembled in Arabia, they managed to pierce almost inaccessible territory and reach the little-known tribe of the Baktyaro.

10,000 Miles Afoot

They accompanied the primitive tribesmen through all their privations, fighting their way up in snowy mountain passes, swimming treacherous rapids with nothing but a goatskin to buoy them up, and becoming replicas of their savage friends during the 10,000 mile trip afoot. Schoedsack's stout boots were cut to ribbons by the rugged country, and after they were discarded he had to move through snow-laden defiles in his bare feet. But their vision was justified when "Grass" enlisted the warm support of Paramount executives and achieved a Broadway run at the Criterion theatre, being thought fit to stay at a house which sheltered such notable productions as "The Covered Wagon" and "The Vanishing American."

Paramount, encouraged by the awakened public interest in such offerings, next commissioned Robert J. Flaherty to go to the blessed islands of Polynesia and record "Moana of the South Seas." Flaherty, a wanderer of the northland, had just brought himself to the notice of the film world by his photographing of "Nanook of the North," which had caught the veracious spirit of Eskimo life as it showed these northern denizens battling against the grim forces of frozen nature at the Arctic circle.

Again Paramount turned to Schoedsack and Cooper, this time providing them with financial backing and other assistance, so that they would not be going it blind again. Paramount sent them into an untracked wilderness of Siam, where they undertook to make the jungle melodrama, "Chang." For thirteen months the determined pair cranked their cameras in undergrowth shimmering with heat, while fever and exhaustion stalked them. In the end they presented Broadway with "Chang," which proved during its run at the Rivoli theatre and elsewhere that it was a memorable, vivid and compelling story of the untamed forests. It was unpretentiously honest and appealing, with thrilling shots climaxed by the stampede of the elephants.

After being acclaimed as among the greatest naturalists of the camera Schoedsack and Cooper went to Africa in 1928 and buried themselves for a long period in the British Soudan. Their purpose was to make desert sequences for "The Four Feathers." They had to live among the "Fuzzy-Wuzzies," known to the British as members of one of the fiercest and most sensitive breeds of savages to be encountered anywhere.

Schoedsack to Sumatra

Cooper decided to eschew further anventuring, but Schoedsack, after an attempt to reconcile himself for a time to civilization, gave up and went questing the thrill of the beyond once more. He penetrated the heavy undergrowth of Sumatra, in the out-of-the-way district of Achin. He chose this isolated spot because it was a region where the ape lived alongside the tiger. Here for fourteen months, beset by predatory animals and by torrential deluges of rain, Schoedsack produced "Rango," epic of man's alliance with the orang-outangs, culminating in a battle between a water buffalo and a tiger.

At about the same time two other adventurers, W. Douglas Burden and William C. Chanler, were shooting thrills in a climate as cold as Schoedsack's was warm. These men were photographing "The Silent Enemy" in the North Woods, the story of the battle of the primitive Indian against his insidious foeman, hunger. "The Silent Enemy" was another picture which added to the prestige of the Criterion.

"With Byrd at the South Pole" was still one more link in the chain of heroic deeds splendidly photographed. The two Paramount cameramen, Willard Vander Veer and Joseph Rucker, specially selected by Paramount News for their fitness, spent two years with Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd in his epochal conquest of the Anatrctic by airplane. They showed endurance and ingenuity in surmounting innumerable obstacles, developing films in water that was often icy slush, protecting cameras from being frozen, handling mechanism that was so cold the skin left their fingers if they touched it with bare hands, and sealing the cans of celluloid to insure against damaging changes of temperature on the long return to New York. It won them unstinted admiration everywhere, starting with its run at the Rialto on Broadway, and procured for them the medal of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for the best photography of the year.

2,000 MOVE BAGDAD TO BROADWAY

37 buildings house 70 departments at Paramount's 26-acre Hollywood plant, city in itself

It is a far cry from Bagdad to Broadway but through the modern magic of the motion picture studio the space can be traversed in less time than it takes to tell it. Behind the walls of the studio the whole world comes to life in myriad settings. Cities spring up as if by legerdemain, deserts unfold in vast expanse, homes take shape, armies march to battle—all in the space of a few acres.

In the Paramount studios in Hollywood 2,000 persons are necessary to produce a talking picture each week and almost as many are required in the studios located in New York, London and Paris.

Within the high fence which surrounds the 26 acre Hollywood plant—the largest of the Paramount studios—are located 37 buildings housing 70 separate departments. Ten stars, 32 featured players, 25 directors and 40 writers have headquarters there. In addition to these, there are 1,972 regular employees on the weekly payroll.

Because of the many departments and varied types of artists within the studio walls, it has been stated that, given a day in which to store food, the 1,972 could withstand an indefinite siege.

This is made possible because the studio contains hundreds of offices and dressing rooms, a complete cafe, wardrobe department capable of outfitting thousands, hospital, fire department, foundry, carpenter and paint shops, garages, hot house nursery, unlimited supply of furniture and supplies, drapery department, barber and hair dressing shop, plaster shops, theatre, electrical and plumbing departments, printing plants and a well-stocked armory in addition to its own lighting, heating and ventilating system.

On 24 Hour Schedule

The work of all these departments is centered on the filming of talking motion pictures upon the fourteen sound stages of the Paramount studios.

Exterior scenes for Paramount pictures can be filmed at the company's 2,769 acre ranch, 30 miles north of Hollywood.

Outside of the studio proper is the Paramount laboratory with a capacity of more than 2,000,000 feet of release prints a week.

Since Jesse L. Lasky began production of "The Squaw Man" in Hollywood in 1913, more than 700 Paramount pictures have been produced at this plant.

Paramount's studios never rest.

Every moment brings work to some of the thousands of employees. Although the actual shooting of scenes for pictures now in production is compressed into eight hours, it takes 24 hours to make that possible.

While a unit is working on one setting, others are being prepared. When a company goes on location, the first workers for the day may report at the studio as early as 3 or 4 a. m. to move the necessary equipment and have everything in readiness by the time the sun is high enough to permit shooting, and this group overlaps with the late night shift which works until 7 a.m.

During the summer much shooting is done at night through the preference of director and cast. To take care of such cases, settings are built on an assembly stage far removed from the actual scene of shooting.

Within eight hours an old setting can be ripped out and the one from the assembly stage installed ready for use, completely painted and dressed with furniture and properties.

It might be interesting to examine the multitude of separate departments the cooperation of which makes motion picture production on such a vast scale possible. There are, for example, sixteen important divisions in each studio, each of which plays an indispensable part.

These are the Research, Casting, Property, Art, Costuming, Drapery, Makeup, Sound, Hairdressing, Camera, Music, Location, Nursery, Lighting, Sound and Cutting Departments, each of which cooperates to the fullest extent with all the others so that not a moment of valuable time may be lost. The loss of an hour of production time means a waste of hundreds of dollars.

Research

One of the little-known but highly important cogs in studio machinery is the research department; its manager's duty is to see that every detail in every picture is true to life.

Thirty thousand photographs, drawings and prints are contained in the research library at the New York studio, while an even larger library at the Hollywood plant assures the public that settings and costumes used in motion pictures will be authentic to the most minute detail.

The vast collection in New York which Gaston Du Val, supervisor, has been compiling for many years, could not be duplicated at any price and is one of the most remarkable in the United States.

Half of the pictures, showing costumes, customs and scenes throughout the world, are contained in fireproof filing cases which cover one entire wall of the library. This collection has been painstakingly clipped from hundreds of domestic and foreign newspapers and magazines.

Some of the headings under which they are catalogued are: Windstorms—Gamblers—Ships—Weddings—Sports—War. By referring to these, any event in contemporary history can be duplicated by the studio art and property departments so closely that even an expert could not detect the substitution.

The clipping file is augmented by a picture postcard library which would delight the heart of the most blase child. There are 5,000 of these cards, purchased from every country on the globe. All are in color and supply details missing in the half-tone clippings.

Rare books showing costumes, arms, hairdresses, and so forth, from the earliest ages to the present, are an important part of the research department. No expense is spared in obtaining such books when a historical novel or sequence is to be filmed. Many of them are more than a century old and out of print.

There is "The Costumes of the Ancients," prepared by Thomas Hope in 1812; M. A. Racinet's "Le Costume Historique" in six great volumes; "Military Costumes of Turkey," prepared in 1818, and more than 500 similar works.

Besides, there are complete files of "Godey's Ladies Book" and other mazazines of the post-Civil War period. Here too are guidebooks of all nations, encyclopedias galore, a complete file of the National Geographic Magazine and voluminous works on architecture, the theatre, geography and war. Even Flammarion's "Haunted Houses" has a place.

The work of the research department is in many ways the hardest and most responsible in the studio, for if a mistake is made in their researches the company may have to rebuild expensive sets.

The head of the research department is one of the first to receive each new picture script. If one scene requires a setting on a Long Island estate, he turns to a file containing 1,000 aerial photographs of real country estates and selects the most satisfactory.

If another calls for a scene in a subway, he gets from the transportation company pictures, costumes and even real equipment to construct an authentic reproduction. If placards in a foreign language are used in another picture he checks tthe authenticity of words and spelling.

Properties

Yet despite the fascination of the research library perhaps the most interesting of books at the studio are those in the property department.

Some persons collect stamps. Others spend their lives amassing Ming vases, ancient coins or even matchboxes. But it remained for the property department to make a rare collection of mail-order catalogues.

One hundred dog-eared volumes which constitute the yearly publication of Sears-Roebuck and Montgomery Ward since 1900, and also the catalogues of English and French concerns, repose in a rough bookcase in the property office and are not for sale at any price.

The value of the books is due to the fact that in them can be found accurate drawings and photographs of almost every commodity used in the Western world, from safety pins to threshing machines. These pictures are accurate reproductions of things actually for sale. Clothing styles shown are those in vogue at the time the catalogues were published. It is therefore possible for the property department to reconstruct a cross-section of twentieth century life from them.

The collection constitutes only a small part of the department's treasures, however. It is estimated that at the New York studio and adjoining warehouses there are 15,000 pieces of property available at a moment's notice. At the company's Hollywood studios, there is an even greater number. The original value of this huge mass of material ran into hundreds of thousands of dollars, but due to the passage of time most of it could not be purchased at any price today.

The property department also has investigators whose duty it is to wander about New York's streets and stores, locating rare pieces of furniture, queer statuary, antique automobiles, and in fact anything which is required for a picture in production or might sometime be of use for other films.

Art Department

After the research department has established the authenticity of every scene in a motion picture script and the property department has selected the properties which fit the production, the scenario is turned over to the art department, the duty of which is to design to fit the mood and settings of the piece.

A large staff of artists and architects which does this work is kept constantly busy in each of the company's studios.

When it is considered that every picture requires twenty or more sets and that Paramount turns out 70 pictures a year, the task of the art department can be comprehended.

But it is due entirely to the speed at which these artists work that the motion picture has become such a factor in the evolution of architecture, furniture design and interior decoration, according to William Saulter, art director at Paramount's New York studios.

"In biological laboratories the processes of organic evolution are artificially stimulated so that scientists may study, in a few years, development which would require lifetimes under ordinary conditions," he explained.

Ending Modernistic "Lunacy"

"The same 'forcing' of the decorative arts occurs in the motion picture studios. We are working with a plastic medium which is necessarily in a constant state of flux. Sets, furniture and decorations must be designed for each new picture and discarded after a few weeks' use.

Referring to modernistic furniture, Saulter pointed out that the studio art departments were among the first to strive for modification of the "lunatic trend" in that art form.

"Recognizing the new life which modernistic design had given to furniture, it was yet seen that comfort, simplicity and charm could not be discarded without introducing discordant notes which would create unpleasant reactions on the screen. Imagine a tender love scene taking place in a dead black living room such as some of the most modern moderns designed at that time.

"So we retained the restful straight lines and simple curves but eliminated the acute angles and dashing colors. This left a style which again was new, yet which could not offend even the most delicate of nerves."

The proper coloring of sets and costumes is another important part of the technical side of motion picture making, Van Nest Polyglase, art director at the Hollywood studios, points out.

Despite the fact that the colors used never appear on the screen, tints are carefully studied by the set designers as well as by the costume department, the director and the actors.

Of first importance in selecting a color scheme is understanding of the effects of various colors on the moods of the players. A comedy sequence is played in a gaily colored set; a heavy dramatic sequence on a somberly tinted set.

Although photography reduces colors to charcoal shades on the screen, settings are painted natural colors because of the psychological effect on the players.

Costume

Costumes also are selected for their mental reaction. A red evening gown, which will photograph the same as a black gown, often is used because of its exhilarating effect.

This statement brings a more detailed consideration of the costume department, which also cooperates to the fullest extent with the art, research and property divisions.

With a wardrobe consisting already of more than 40,000 costumes for men and women, every motion picture made by Paramount add additional outfittings to this imposing total.

Each production requires from fifty to many thousand costumes. Many are constructed by the studio after sketches have been submitted to the directors.

There are costumes to suit the dancers of Crete, to say nothing of the Stone Age. Every period of human history is represented and the stylists design costumes for women that will be the model several months into the future.

Travis Banton, stylist at the Hollywood studio, and Carolyn Putnam, who serves in the same capacity at the New York plant, make annual pilgrimages to Paris to determine the latest trends in fashions. Moreover the latest styles are telegraphed from Paris to the studios, while scouts pass through the Fifth Avenue shops in New York daily.

As a result of this method of procedure, the day of exaggerated screen fashions has passed, according to Banton.

"There was a time," he said recently, "when motion picture actresses were 'dolled up' in creations never seen elsewhere on land or sea. The star wore diamond-studded evening dresses with trains five yards long, while the vampire was dressed in blatant and skimpy costumes usually designed in black and white stripes.

"Sound has changed all that. Actresses are cultured persons, able to wear simple costumes with grace and ease. It is no longer necessary to go to extremes to 'put over the idea of wealth to the sticks,' as an old-time director once expressed it to me. Those who live in what used to be termed the 'sticks' now travel in Europe and wear the latest Paris creations. So today we are endeavoring to dress our players in the height of fashion, but the best of style. Even our vampires have changed."

Drapery

Jack Spratt is no more economical than the manager of the drapery department.

Although this department handles from 500 to 2,500 yards of cloth weekly, which ranges in value from cheesecloth at five cents a yard to damask at $18 and $20 a yard, not one square inch of it goes into the wastebasket. Great hampers are provided for the scraps. In these can be found bits of all sorts of materials. They are used to make pillows, of which the department now has 3,000 of various sizes.

Rags also have their place in the scheme of things. In the New York studio, for instance, there is displayed, with pride, a paint-spattered hanging which was made in 1921 for a tenement scene in a picture directed by George Fitzmaurice. This has been used dozens of times since to create a feeling of depression which could not have been obtained with a new hanging.

In the drapery workshops are employed ten seamstresses and cutters who are kept busy making scores of pillows, scarves, bed linen and using endless yards of cretonnes, chintzes, silks, damasks and so on.

To say that the department does a "rushing business" would be to understate the case. Often an order is received to complete a 20 by 50 foot drop in two hours, or to change all the draperies on a set while the actors and technicians wait.

Carpentry

The carpentry department is the next to get into action when a picture is being made.

Romance and the eight-penny nail have a perpetual union at the studio. Romance, because the building of scenic habilaments for motion pictures always has seemed fascinating to the lay public. The eight-penny nail because utility decrees its importance.

At the Paramount Hollywood studios Van Nest Polyglase, art director, first designs the sets and then sends these designs to the carpenters.

In the mill and adjoining "prop shop" are 55 men, with more than an acre of floor space, dotted with machinery. There are two stickers, four cut-off saws, six ripsaws, four joiners, four bandsaws, one boring machine, one mortising machine, two table model variety saws, one planer, one re-saw machine, one jigsaw, two lathes, one drill press and a general machine shop.

Figures from the files of the chief storekeeper show that more than 2,000,000 feet of lumber were used in Paramount's set-building enterprises in 1930.

The units built and painted in the mill are moved on an overhead monorail system that circumnavigates the entire 27-acre studio property. On the assembling stage they are handled by overhead hoists and the complete set on the shooting stages may

FROM THE SCRIPT TO THE SCREEN

Myriad stories and plays, published and unpublished sifted down to 20 a year

The devious ways of the heathen Chinee immortalized by Bret Harte are no more involved than the progress of a motion picture from its inception in the brain of an author until its final appearance on the screen.

It has been estimated that only one published novel, short story or play out of a thousand contains a screenable idea. And even after such an idea has been discovered, the task of translating it to the screen in an entertaining and plausible manner is gigantic, necessitating the coordination of scores of technical departments and the concentrated and unremitting thought of hundreds of brilliant minds.

To meet these exacting demands in motion picture making, Paramount utilizes the resources of a worldwide production organization, staffed by hundreds of experts. Behind this organization is 20 years of progress in the art of translating stories to the screen. During these 20 years the company has built vast studios, accumulated unlimited facilities, forged ahead in scientific research, and developed a host of new talent.

In making a new Paramount picture, first comes the never-ending search for new material.

Paramount has a large staff of noted authors under contract in addition to a story-reading department, the staff of which is kept busy examining all published or about-to-be-published short stories, novels and plays.

With the exception of stories by its own writers, all material from which Paramount pictures are made passes through the hands of this story reading staff. Their selection again is painstakingly examined by studio heads and from it and the work of the contract writers about 70 stories a year finally are selected for production.

Four Major Sources

The bulk of such material comes from four major sources: 1. Agent; 2. Published works; 3. Plays; 4. Foreign representatives. From the various agents comes any unpublished material which they think might be suitable for production purposes. In this are included manuscripts, galley proofs, advance copies of novels and short stories, scripts of plays before their production on the stage; magazine serials before their publication is even announced and other first choice story material.

This unpublished material is augmented by a careful perusal of everything that appears in print. The story department purchases every book of fiction. It has on its racks every fiction magazine printed. Consequently, in the event that a good story is not submitted to the department before publication, it will be picked up later on by the readers.

All this formidable mass is minutely gone over by the department staff and synopses are collected in a bulletin which is sent to the chief editors at the New York and Hollywood studios, Edward Montaigne on the West Coast and D. A. Doran in the East. These concise reports are followed by longer and more exhaustive synopses. The synopses then are carefully gone over by studio supervisors and directors. Their final choice is submitted to Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production, or his studio aids and, if approved, are turned over to the legal and purchasing departments for acquisition.

The activities of the reading department are complemented by the original work of the hand-picked staff of contract writers. A roster of these writers includes some of the most brilliant names in American creative literature. Among them are: Zoe Akins, Melville Baker, Vici Baum, Guy Bolton, Sidney Buchman, John Colton, Bartlett Cormack, Lloyd Corrigan, Owen Davis, Marion Dix, Martin Flavin, Paul Hervey Fox, Charles Furthman, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Percy Heath, Ben Hecht, Adelaide Heilbron, Samuel Hoffenstein, Grover Jones, Virginia Kellogg, A. A. Kline, Arthur Kober, S. K. Lauren, Vincent Lawrence, Agnes Brand Leahy, Erna Mankiewicz, Herman Mankiewicz, Joseph L. Mankiewicz, Max Marcin, Brian Marlow, James K. McGuinness, Wm. Slavens McNutt, Alice D. G. Miller, Sam Mintz, Henry Myers, Mme. Condes Neve, Edgar Neville, Edward Paramore, Jr., Ursula Parrott, Ernest Pascal, Gertrude Purcell, Samson Raphaelson, Jose Carner-Ribalta, Viola Brothers Shore, Bella Spewack, Sam Spewack, Donald Ogden Stewart, Preston Sturges, Dwight Taylor, Louis Weitzenkorn and Lajos Zilahy.

So much for the manner in which screen ideas are selected. Now for the development of the ideas themselves.

A novel or play must be rewritten and quite often changed a great deal to make it available for screen use. This work of transposition is done almost entirely by Paramount's staff of contract writers. Many novels require much reconstruction before they can be broken up into a series of pictures which will convey the same ideas in the screen medium.

There was a time not long past when motion picture scripts read something like this:

"Mary and John enter the rose garden and have a love scene"; or "John and Tim meet at the entrance to the cave and have a terrific fight which John wins."

That was all. The remainder was up to the director. Quite often the latter wrote his own scripts.

But the day of such sketchy methods passed with the advent of sound. Today a scenario is as complicated and difficult to write as any novel. All dialogue must be written in full, together with a complete description of the action taking place, the desired lighting, camera angles, characterizations, costuming, and so forth. Such technical work demands a writer well-versed in motion picture methods. No outsider can hope to write an acceptable scenario. All such a person can do is to provide an idea or plot.

What is said to be the most interesting motion picture script ever written in Hollywood was completed recently for Paramount's production of Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy." The work of Josef von Sternberg, director of the picture, and Samuel Hoffenstein, author of "Poems in Praise of Practically Nothing," the script contains 34 sequences and hundreds of scenes. In several of these sequences no word is spoken. On the other hand, the longest is 44 typewritten pages in length and contains 301 speeches varying in length from the mere affirmative to a lawyer's questions to the preliminary addresses of attorneys to a jury.

Hundreds of Scenes

In its final form a scenario looks quite a bit like a published play, but there are many differences. Instead of being written in three acts and perhaps ten scenes, it is constructed of as many as 20 sequences and several hundred scenes. A sequence corresponds roughly to an act on the stage, while a scene is that part of the picture which can be taken with the camera in one position.

Moreover, technical details, such as instructions for "closeups," "dolly" or moving shots; "medium shots" and "long shots," must be indicated. These are to be followed closely by cameramen and sound technicians and must be right to the last detail.

After the script has been approved by the production department one or more directors and assistant directors are selected to bring it to the screen, since every director has talents which show to best advantage in certain types of pictures. For instance. Norman Taurog is a marvel with child actors, Ernst Lubitsch excels in

Casting

While all this physical work of preparing for the start of production has been going on, the casting department has not been idle, for it is necessary to have a cast ready for rehearsals at least two weeks before a picture is to be shot.

In selecting this cast the Golden Rule in dealing with applicants is applied in Hollywood by Fred Datig and in New York by Frank Heath, casting directors. Heath interviews from 200 to 500 applicants daily. He gives each an attentive ear.

"Why shouldn't I?" he said. "Every person who comes here is anxious to obtain work. Some need the money they earn as extras. Need it badly. Others are ambitious and believe they have talent.

"It is, of course, impossible to give work to everyone, but we can at least alleviate the disappointment."

Location

If a Paramount picture has a large number of outdoor scenes it usually is made in Hollywood, and while the cast is being selected a little man may be seen poring over a big map in an effort to find suitable locations.

This map is one of the strangest ever conceived. On it France is located twenty miles from the South Seas and Venice is next door to Hollywood.

It hangs in the office of Fred Harris, location manager of the West Coast studios, and on it is authentic information which would make staid geographers dizzy.

On the great sheet one finds the Sahara Desert elbowing Yuma, Arizona, and Holland leaking over into Long Beach, California.

Harris has the unique duty of making places come to him, for it is his job to find duplicates of every spot on earth and find them within easy traveling distance of the studios.

More than 15 years of gathering information has enabled Harris to discover "doubles" of almost all locations within a radius of 100 miles from Hollywood.

For instance, the map shows that the French Riviera is found at the Santa Monica Palisades; the British Soudan occupies a part of the American desert in Arizona; the South Seas are at the Isthmus on Catalina Island or the crescent-curved Laguna Beach; the Long Island Sound of New York lies near Anaheim Landing and Colonial homes of the South may be found in Pasadena.

The map is augmented by a file containing 25,000 photographs, neatly catalogued. Here pictures of the actual locations are attached to those of their "doubles." Every stream, mountain and bit of shoreline on the Pacific Coast is catalogued.

When all this preliminary work has been done, when the cast has been rehearsed in new costumes on the new sets among the new or ressurrected properties, the time is at hand for actual shooting.

Now the cameraman, the sound technician and the electrician step in and assume equal importance with the star and the director.

When the motion picture became audible there was almost a year during which it was chained to the studio. Cameras were placed inside gigantic soundproof booths, microphones were slung on ropes from the ceilings of the soundproof stages and the falling of a pin was enough to ruin a scene.

But today all that has changed. Talking pictures can be made indoors or out, at will. Cameras are enclosed in cases no larger than a suitcase and the microphones are suspended from booms which can be moved about with ease. All the apparatus for operating the electrically driven cameras and the sound equivalent can now be mounted on a small automobile truck and used anywhere on earth, in the air or beneath the surface of the sea.

Yet despite the mechanization of their art the school of hard knocks is still the only one in which motion picture cameramen can learn their trade, according to George Folsey, director of the photographic staff at Paramount's New York studio.

"All of our cameramen have grown up with the game," he explains. "There is so much to learn and remember that it would be next to impossible to teach the technique in a school.

Judging Distance

"Moreover, a cameraman must be able to judge distances up to thirty feet almost to the inch, in order that he may keep his lenses properly in focus at all times. The difficulties of doing this will be understood when it is said that a difference of two inches in focal length will blur and ruin an entire scene."

Motion picture photographers also must be crack shots, Folsey pointed out. That is, they must be able to keep an actor directly in the middle of the lens no matter how rapidly he moves about a set. Although the cameras are mounted on ball-bearing tripods, each weighs several hundred pounds when enclosed in its soundproof case, and to swing one of them rapidly about and stop it without a "jiggle" is no light task.

Next to the directors and actors, the head cameraman, in collaboration with the head sound technician or "monitor man," has the most authority on a motion picture set. He is in charge of all lighting effects, suggests novel photographic angles, must be consulted when sets are designed, and literally can make actors "walk the chalkline." If a star steps out of the bounds which he has drawn on the floor with chalk, and thereby ruins a scene, he or she will hear from the cameraman in ringing phrases.

Besides all his other duties the head photographer must be constantly in conference with the monitor man and the director, and not a "frame" can be shot until he gives his approval.

The monitor man, too, from his little soundproof booth, known to the initiate as a "hot box" because it becomes stifling with the thick doors closed, rules as a king on the set.

It is his duty to determine whether the dialogue records clearly in the microphone and also to "mix" the sound, so that, for instance, the tones of a man's voice as he is leaving the set will be clearly intelligible and yet much softer than when he is in the middle of the stage. He also has to be on the constant outlook for echoes, which are the bane of his existence.

And, by the way, did you ever meet an echo-hunter?

Paramount has one of the ilk at its New York studio and several in Hollywood.

Armed with a pocketful of nails, a long, metal-tipped pole, a roll of monkscloth and a can of putty, this individual wanders about the stages like a lost soul, eternally on the lookout for the slightest echo or other sound vibration which might be audible to the delicate microphone.

It is a common occurrence to see him stuffing pieces of rubber into rattling window panes, driving nails into squeaky floor board, or tapping the walls and ceilings to locate the source of a particularly "wild" reverberation.

When the East coast studio was remodeled for the making of sound pictures two years ago it was found that eighty separate and distinct echoes lay in wait on its stages to bedevil the monitor men and mock the voices of the actors.

Thick hangings of monkscloth and velvet "damped" most of these, but after each new set was built the acoustic properties of the stage were changed sufficiently to reproduce new ones.

Cut!

So the picture is finished at last. Three or more cameras have been used on every scene, and thousands upon thousands of feet of film have been developed. Now comes the turn of the cutter, that fateful individual of whom Skeets Gallagher once said:

"Never cut a cutter, or you're likely to find your face on the cutting room floor."

The cutter's job is to reduce the mass of film turned over to him to the 7,000 feet which constitutes a feature-length picture, and to build this into a coordinated whole, in which the dialogue runs smoothly, the players do not vanish as if by magic from the middle of a scene, and there are no distracting explosions of sound when a change is made from one scene to another.

In cutting and splicing film he has to perform an operation as delicate as that of a surgeon removing a bad appendix.

Of course complicated machines built for this operation are used and the cutters peer through miniature projection machines something like the old peep shows and listen to the sound through the telephone receivers clamped to their ears. Nevertheless theirs is an arduous and nerveracking task.

At last the cutting and editing has been completed, the picture is previewed, retakes have been made, a title has been selected, and the film, in little fireproof metal cans, is shipped to Paramount exchanges for distribution to theatres throughout the world.

REPRESENTED IN 70 FOREIGN LANDS

Hundred features made in other languages for 110 central and branch offices

Paramount's Twentieth Jubilee Anniversary brings to a close a very successful year of the Paramount Publix foreign department in its distribution activities throughout the seventy countries in which Paramount pictures are presented. Through multi-lingual pictures produced in Hollywood, New York, Paris and London and the adaptation of English language pictures, the foreign department has maintained the high rank of Paramount pictures in 37 principal languages.

In the twenty year period the department's facilities have been built up to a high pitch of efficiency which enabled Paramount to carry on through the transition period ushered in by sound foreign business. This great volume of business has been developed through 110 central and branch offices.

In the year just closed, Paramount pictures, speaking the following languages, have been distributed:

English, French, Spanish, German, Italian, Portuguese, Polish, Swedish, Hungarian, Dutch, Rumanian, Czecho Slovakian and Yugo Slavian. Other than English, more than 100 foreign language pictures were produced by the company's studios. Supplementing this multi-lingual feature program were more than 100 short features in 20 languages.

Adapting Product

One outstanding achievement of the foreign department has been its adaptation of American product. Through the use of superimposed titles—that is, titles inserted at advantageous spots on the film—it is possible to translate the English dialogue into the language of all countries. Paramount pictures are shown today in many countries for which it would be impossible to make productions in their own languages.

The Paramount Publix foreign department is called the first motion picture organization to introduce Japanese superimposed titles, "Morocco" being the initial attraction under this new plan. The premiere of this Paramount picture in Tokio attracted favorable publicity and was followed by a command presentation of the picture at the Imperial Palace in Tokio at the anniversary dinner celebrating the seventh anniversary of the accession of the Emperor and Empress.

Paramount introduced multi-lingual productions in many countries. Following the presentation of its first Spanish talking picture in Spain, Paramount was awarded the famous Ateneo of Madrid prize, one of the most highly prized awards known in the Spanish literary and artistic world. Shortly thereafter many leaders in the national and provincial governments of Spain presented to Adolph Zukor an elaborate memorial.

Cuba quickly followed the lead of Spain in paying high tribute to Paramount when the Mayor of Havana wrote to President Zukor on behalf of the citizens of Havana and Cuba thanking him. Fifteen thousand of the leading citizens of Havana signed a similar letter endorsing Paramount's enterprise.

Another fine tribute to Paramount's foreign department came from 125 of the leading exhibitors in convention at Stockholm who cabled resolutions of appreciation of Paramount's Swedish talking pictures and pledging maximum bookings.

The great increase in the number of theatres equipped for the presentation of sound and talking pictures in all the principal countries is the best evidence of the welcome given this new form of entertainment.

Important additions have been made in recent months to the list of theatres operated by Paramount Publix subsidiaries in important cities. One of the most important acquisitions was the four large and beautiful houses owned by the Astoria Theatre Circuit in London—the Astoria of Brixton, Finsbury Park, Astoria; Astoria, Old Kent Road, and the Astoria of Streatham. A magnificent Paramount theatre was opened in Manchester, England, and additional houses are under construction in England, Ireland and Scotland.

On Other Side of World

On the other side of the world, a subsidiary company acquired the Capitol in Melbourne, and another subsidiary has completed a modern theatre in Colon, Panama. The Paramount Publix Corporation now operates, through subsidiaries, in the larger cities of England, Ireland, France, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Spain, Australia, Japan, Mexico, Cuba, Panama, Costa Rica, Jamaica, British West Indies, and Brazil.

One of the outstanding pictures of the year abroad has been Paramount's "The Love Parade," starring Maurice Chevalier. This attraction ran for months in leading theatres in most of the world's great capitals.

This Ernst Lubitsch production ran from five to seven months in Buenos Aires, Sydney, London, Barcelona, Paris and Stockholm. Other popular Paramount pictures have been "Rango," "Morocco," "With Byrd at the South Pole," "The Vagabond King," "Monte Carlo," "Feet First," "Tom Sawyer" and "Tabu."

The foreign department of Paramount came into existence back in 1912, the year Adolph Zukor departed for London with a print of his first feature picture, "Queen Elizabeth," in search of a foreign market. This market quickly was located.

The speed with which Zukor's product was accepted in England made it necessary to open a foreign office and this was accomplished through an agreement with J. J. Walker's World's Films of London. Two years later a second office was opened at Liverpool, and then the foreign department was on its way. Zukor's vision of the great possibilities led him to engage as foreign manager Emil E. Shauer, then in another branch of the export business. This milepost was celebrated by the opening of additional exchanges in Birmingham, Manchester and Cardiff.

By 1916 the activities of the department had become so extensive that Shauer found it necessary to obtain an able man who could represent the company abroad in the dual capacity of ambassador and distribution executive. That man proved to be John Cecil Graham, for a number of years active in the film industry. The task of selection was not nearly so difficult as that of getting Graham through the submarine war zone to his post in London. Weeks of search followed before passage for Graham and his family could be obtained and then only on a small Spanish cattle boat sailing from Havana for a port in Spain. Six weeks later Graham reached his destination and began his task as general foreign representative and the development of the British distributing organization in particular.

The two years that followed were marked by intensive development of the foreign department, although the general trade paralysis threatened by submarine activity and the ravages of war made this task one of herculean proportions. The motion picture industry had proved its value as a wartime necessity and Shauer insisted upon 100 per cent service. This was maintained without the loss of a single foot of film.

Exhibitor Service

From the beginning of his operations as general manager of the foreign department Shauer required the greatest possible exhibitor service as a part of the physical operation of the exchanges abroad as well as the home office staff in New York. The development of this service was placed in the hands of Joseph H. Seidelman, who entered the department in 1922 and today is in complete charge of the foreign sales department.

New exchanges and branch offices were opened with great rapidity in many countries and by 1925, when the first international Paramount sales convention was called to order by General Manager S. R. Kent, approximately 100 Paramount exchanges were in operation throughout the world.

Over on the opposite side of the world important events in Paramount's history followed the appointment of John W. Hicks, Jr., as managing directior of the Australasian division, consisting of eleven exchanges in Australia, New Zealand, Java, Straits Settlements and Siam. Many fine new theatres have been erected following the roadshow engagements of specials, and Australia today occupies a position in the front ranks of the industry. Hicks recently celebrated his tenth anniversary as the head of the Australasian Paramount organization.

A further step came with installation of the Paramount organization in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia, with main office at Buenos Aires, and with Frederick W. Lange in charge as manager. For several years John L. Day, Jr., had served as Paramount representative in South America, with headquarters in Brazil. Day's appointment as general manager for South America followed, and under his direction numerous branch offices were opened. Later the west coast countries—Chile, Peru, and Bolivia—were made a

BERNHARDT TO BANKHEAD--A HISTORY

250 stellar artists have worked for Paramount and 30 of present 55 contract players are new

Paramount production executives long since have realized that nothing counts at the box office but the stars of today or the new ones of tomorrow.

This building for the future is typical of the constant reaching out for attractively gifted people—a Marlene Dietrich, a Tullulah Bankhead or a Maurice Chevalier, for instance. In the two decades which started when Adolph Zuckor began his producing career with Sarah Bernhardt's "Queen Elizabeth," more than 250 stellar artists and thousands of freelance players have worked for these producers in a list which dates from Bernhardt to Bankhead. The stars have passed through the company's portals at the rate of nearly fifteen a year.

Today Paramount is facing toward the new season with an unparalleled infusion of new blood. Of its fifty-five contract players who are already stars or are on their way to stardom, thirty are fresh in the Paramount ranks. The list includes Richard Arlen, George Bancroft, Tallulah Bankhead, Nancy Carroll, Ruth Chatterton, Maurice Chevalier, Claudette Colbert, Gary Cooper, Marlene Dietrich, Four Marx Brothers, Frederic March, Jack Oakie, Charles Rogers, Adrienne Ames, George Barbier, Carman Barnes, Eleanor Boardman, William Boyd, John Breeden, Clive Brook, Charles D. Brown, Juliette Compton, Jackie Coogan, Robert Coogan, Frances Dee, Claire Dodd, Tom Douglas, Stuart Edwin, Kay Francis, Skeets Gallagher, Tamara Deva, Wynne Gibson, Mitzi Green, Phillips Holmes, Miriam Hopkins, Carole Lombard, Paul Lukas, Frances Hoffett, Vivienne Osborne, Eugene Pallette, Irving Pichel, Gene Raymond, Charlie Ruggles, Jackie Searl, Peggy Shannon, Sylvia Sidney, Lilyan Tashman, Regis Toomey, Dorothy Tree, Allan Vincent, Anna May Wong, Judith Wood, Marjorie Gateson, Charles Starrett and Kent Taylor.

Never in Paramount history has so large a preponderance of talent been so youthful.

From the earliest days Paramount went in for young stars. Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Gloria Swanson, John Barrymore, Ina Claire, Elsie Ferguson, Lois Wilson, Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Mary Astor, Bessie Love and Billie Dove—all these players came to Paramount in the first flush of their powers.

Paramount also capitalized on the romance which the public loves to ascribe to handsome young couples on the screen. Jack Pickford and Louise Huff were one of the early pairs who won a following through their work together in a series that included "Seventeen," "Great Expectations" and "Freckles." Wallace Reed was teamed by turns with Cleo Ridgley in such early pictures as "The Yellow Pawn" and "The House of Golden Windows" and also with Anita King in "Golden Fetter" and "The Squaw Man's Son." Douglas MacLean and Doris May formed one of the happiest of such combinations in "23½ Hours' Leave," "What's Your Husband Doing" and "Mary's Ankle."

Another contribution of this organization—in fact, the one from which it derived its first name, Famous Players—was the engaging of noted stars of the stage to appear in the initial pictures. Besides Bernhardt, Zukor presented on the screen James K. Hackett, Anna Held, Lily Langtry and Gaby Deslys when they were in their heyday. Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark were brought from the footlights to pioneer in presenting pert minxes, forerunners of the flapper type of today.

Celebrated actor-managers likewise were imported from stage to screen. George M. Cohan, then rising to the height of his fame, played in screen versions of his theatrical hits, "Broadway Jones," "Hit-the-Trail Holiday" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Edgar Selwyn starred in his Broadway success, "The Arab," one of the first pictures to use the sheik motif which later became famous through Rudolph Valentino.

Paramount also sought in its initial stages for genuine fidelity in casting according to the types to be represented. It took William S. Hart, just coming to the fore after being graduated from the early two-reel Westerns following a stage career, and gave him a greater scope in depicting cowboy and frontier roles.

Along the same line, Paramount developed actors who represented actual exotic types. Rudolph Valentino, hailed as a Latin of the Latins, starred for Paramount in "Blood and Sand" as a Spanish toreador, besides playing roles like "The Sheik" and "Monsieur Beaucaire," which called for the volatile, romantic temperament of dark-skinned people. This company brought forward Sessue Hayakawa, who did Japanese and Oriental interpretations in such pictures as "The Cheat," "The Typhoon," "Alien Souls" and "Forbidden Paths," and was engaged again by Paramount recently to play with Anna May Wong, Chinese-American actress, and Warner Oland in Sax Rohmer's "Daughter of the Dragon." The company also fostered George Beban in a series of Italian characterizations in "Pasquale," "The Italian," "His Sweetheart" and "One More American."

Paramount even took the step of embarking on the importation of foreign stars. It brought here Pola Negri, after she had been acclaimed for her performance in "Passion," made in Germany. She starred in such films as "Bella Donna," "The Spanish Dancer," "Forbidden Paradise," "East of Suez" and "Hotel Imperial." Paramount later brought over Emil Jannings, who had made a name for himself in "Passion" and "Variety." In America Jannings made such pictures as "The Last Command," "The Patriot," "Sins of the Fathers," "The Way of All Flesh" and "Street of Sin." Lya de Putti, likewise bearing plaudits earned in "Variety," came from abroad to appear in "Sorrows of Satan" and "God Gave Me Twenty Cents."

Another innovation undertaken by Paramount was that of presenting interesting and loveable men who were well on in years. Theodore Roberts stood out among such types, winning the nickname of "the grand old man of the screen" through his performances in such silent hits as "Grumpy," "The Old Homestead" and "Pudd'nhead Wilson." Alec Francis is another who played for Paramount in a similar vein. Maclyn Arbuckle, who recently passed on, appeared in "The Reform Candidate" and "It's No Laughing Matter."

Paramount changed players previously cast in disagreeable or even villainous roles into jovial comedians. Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton were the first, and appeared in such films as "We're in the Navy Now," "Behind the Front" and "Now We're in the Air." Raymond Griffith was another who turned from portraying cads to comedians.

Another step was the teaming up of comedians. W. C. Fields and Chester Conklin thus were brought together.

In the early days the producers of this organization not only engaged players of the stage who already had shown acting ability, but took artists from collateral fields, such as opera and dancing. Several of the stars so selected appeared in more than one picture, and several of them established great fame for themselves. Geraldine Farrar was at one time one of the leading drawing cards of the screen through the histrionic ability she demonstrated in "Carman, "Temptation," "Marie Rose" and "The Woman God Forgot." Lina Cavalieri, another famous diva, appeared in "A Woman of Impulse," "Two Brides," "Love's Conquest" and "Rose of Granada." Enrico Caruso, most illustrious of Metropolitan tenors, was filmed in "My Cousin."

Mae Murray and Irene Castle were both notable as dancers before they achieved screen fame. Miss Murray appeared in the early days of the Paramount organization in "To Have and to Hold," "The Dream Girl," "The Big Sister," "The Plow Girl," "On Record," "The Primrose Ring" and "At First Sight." Irene Castle played in "The Firing Line," "The Invisible Bond" and "The Amateur Wife." Fred Stone starred in the earlier days in "The Goat," "Under the Top" and "Johnny Get Your Gun." Ann Pennington twinkled her knees and her smile through "The Antics of Ann," "Sunshine Nan" and "Susie Snowflakes." Donald Brian, noted for his dancing in "The Merry Widow" and other stage productions, joined the early drift to the screen, appearing in "The Voice in the Fog" and "The Smugglers." Maurice and Florence Walton when at the height of their terpsichorean fame, were engaged for "The Quest of Life."

Paramount also promoted the screen careers of "the next generation"—that is, the sons of stars already established who showed talent themselves. This company introduced Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in "Stephen Steps Out" and gave him further opportunities in "The Air Mail," "Wild Horse Mesa" and "Padlocked." The company also had William Collier, Jr., in such productions as "The Devil's Cargo," "Eve's Secret," "The Wanderer."

LASKY A PIONEER IN SPIRIT AND ACTION

Hawaiian Band as a cornet soloist; he was the only white man in the organization and could observe people staring and whispering. He developed an appreciation for the South Seas that was later to show itself in such films as "Tabu" and "Moana."

He entered another field and became a cub reporter on the Evening Post in San Francisco. Though the experience seemed to pay little in dividends at the moment, the training he received was to bear fruit, for he developed a flair for the human interest element in stories.

He was ready to look elsewhere. This time "elsewhere" was Alaska. The gold rush there was on, and Lasky became one of the first 100 men to reach Nome. He was there at the same time as Jack London and Rex Beach.

Lasky had turned everything negotiable that he possessed into cash and sunk the money in placer mining machinery and other necessary supplies.

Enters Vaudeville

He returned to San Francisco just in time to observe the growth of a new type of entertainment—vaudeville. His sister, Blanche, had developed her own musical talents, and so, armed once more with his trusty cornet, young Lasky formed with her a juvenile variety offering vocal and instrumental harmony. They were offered booking by a vaudeville agent at $60 a week and eagerly accepted this dazzling amount.

Their engagements brought them East and then they accepted an offer to provide a musical act between the magical illusions of "Herman the Great," second conjurer of that name. After a season Lasky decided to devote himself to the business end. So he became advance agent for the wizard, and subsequently manager.

He still nourished an artistic urge, and decided to try his hand at literary endeavor on the side. His two first stories sold immediately, to Robert H. Davis, then developing the Munsey string of magazines. When Lasky essayed his third story he decided to become as literary as possible in style. The story was rejected by Davis, with a kindly but incisive letter in which he recommended strongly that the writer eschew literary flourishes and stick to telling a straightaway, unvarnished story.

Lasky was so impressed with the advice that he decided to give up short story writing entirely. His attention was now concentrated on vaudeville promotion. Meeting in Utica a fellow cornetist named B. A. Rolfe, he was so convinced of the man's ability that he induced Rolfe to enter vaudeville, booking him at a good salary. Then as Rolfe withdrew from the partnership Henry B. Harris entered as financial backer and adviser.

The boom in vaudeville expanded the agency's business until they had at least ten and sometimes twenty acts on the road. Lasky now had a fortune of $150,000, a handsome income and great prestige in vaudeville—and he sought new fields to conquer.

Going to France for his first vacation abroad, he discovered the vogue created there by the "carabet," a new type of evening's entertainment with revue novelties and dining by the patrons during the performance. Lasky decided he would enter the legitimate production field with this unique type of production. With Harris he opened the Folies Bergere—now the Fulton theatre—and Broadway saw an imported cabaret, "more Parisian than Paris." The venture was a brilliant failure.

When the enterprise closed Lasky found himself without a cent. He decided to return to vaudeville. Germinating the notion of writing a vaudeville operetta that should deal with the old Mission days of California, Lasky got in touch with Cecil B. DeMille, though he at first sought a partnership with his elder brother, William C. DeMille, then a protege of David Belasco.

Lasky was so taken by the personality of the younger DeMille that he formed an association with him. They produced an operatta besides a number of unusual vaudeville acts, such as "The Antique Shop" and "The Little Parisienne."

Then, after they had seen Adolph Zukor's film production of "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett, one of the earlier cinema hits, their minds turned toward the screen. One day when they were dining at the Lambs Club Lasky reached a decision. He suggested to DeMille that they become film producers, and DeMille laconically answered: Let's."

$26,000 Starting Capital

So the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company was formed, with an available capital of $26,000, and DeMille and Dustin Farnum, who was to be their first star, went West to look for a proper site for production. They picked out Flagstaff, Arizona, on the map because its name seemed romantic and promising. When they looked out of the train window, however, the prospect was so uninviting that they went to Hollywood, where they had heard of pictures being made.

Soon afterward Lasky in New York received a wire that they had hired a barn at Vine and Selma streets for a studio at $200 a month—an alarming rental for a fledgling corporation. But the barn had already been prepared for film work by other producers, and here DeMille and his associates, including Oscar Apfel, who is now back in the organization as an actor, worked to such purpose that they turned out a most presentable picture in "The Squaw Man." At first it seemed a complete botch, due to irregularities in the side perforations of the film which cogged it through the teeth of the sprocket wheels regulating its flow through the projection machine. But Sigmund Lubin, expert on films, remedied the defect.

The company prospered with its high grade pictures, so that California proved to be a good omen in Lasky's life. Then Adolph Zukor formed an acquaintance with him that eventually led to a partnership in what is now Paramount Publix.

Rapid Expansion In Foreign Office separate district with Benito del Villar in charge.

Another move was the acquisition of Film Aktiebolaget Liberty, the Paramount agency for the Scandinavian countries, and the appointment of Carl P. York as general manager for Sweden, Denmark, Norway and Finland. At about the same time M. J. Messeri was appointed managing director for Spain and Portugal and also assumed charge of the Coliseum in Barcelona as the premiere theatre for Paramount product.

Arrangements were made for distribution in Germany, and branch offices also were opened in Central European countries. Gus J. Schafer is in charge of this division as general manager.

Another prominent unit in the worldwide Paramount organization was created in Paris at this time. The territory managed from this headquarters includes France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, Egypt and Northern Africa, and the French colonies, and many branch offices were placed in operation. The Italian organization later was established as a separate unit. David Souham is managing director of the French organization. Arrangements were made for several theatres in a number of the key centers of France.

The Cuban agency and its first run theatre, the Encanto, at Havana, contributed another important link. A. L. Pratchett is in charge as general manager for Cuba, Porto Rico and the West Indies.

Mexico is another important division, with Clarence C. Margon as general manager. The company operates as its first run theatre the Olimpia in Mexico City. The Central American division, including Guatemala, Panama and the other Central American countries, Colombia, Venezuela, Jamaica, and Ecuador, is in charge of Harry Novak as general manager, with headquarters at Cristobal, Canal Zone.

Paramount's organization for Japan and the Orient was founded some years ago by Tom D. Cochrane and R. E. MacIntyre. Important changes have been made with the opening of several offices in China, and at Manila, Philippine Islands. J. E. Perkins has been placed in charge of the Japanese organization following the retirement of Tom Cochrane because of ill health, while R. E. MacIntyre is in charge of the Manila and Chinese offices.

The foreign department operates approximately fifty theatres, among the most important being the Plaza in London, Paramount in Paris, the China in Stockholm, Coliseum in Barcelona, Paramount in Sao Paulo, Capitolio and Imperio in Rio de Janeiro, Olimpia in Mexico City, Encanto in Havana, Capitol in Melbourne and Hogaku-Za in Tokio.

Paramount To Have 16 Key Houses In England by 1932

With two houses due to open before the end of the year, one at Newcastle and the other at Leeds, each to seat 2,700, and another expected at Liverpool in the spring. Paramount will have 16 key houses in England.

Zukor's Formula of Stars Holds Up

He and his associates worked night and day to gain a big lead on their competitors, for they foresaw that it wouldn't be long before the Zukor formula of fine stars in good stories would be quickly imitated. There was also the early financial uncertainty due to the unavoidable fact in motion picture production that such a long period, about six months, must intervene.

Then came a disastrous fire. The armory building housing their studio went up in smoke, and at first it appeared that the negatives for 17 pictures, virtually the whole year's product, had been destroyed.

Famous Players Film Company now went forward with great strides. The newspapers began to take the screen seriously, assigning regular critics to cover it as they did the spoken drama. Actors were easier to obtain from the stage, though Zukor readily foresaw that it would be the players developed within motion picture studios themselves who would win the greater hold on the public by the more natural acting demanded by the searching eye of the camera.

The first whom his discerning eye singled out in this class was Mary Pickford. She would have her name on the screen—a billing which she never had received on the screen before, under the suppressive, anonymous policy of the Trust. Zukor was so convinced of the drawing power of this pretty girl of 19 that he offered her the unheard-of salary of $20,000 a year.

Lasky Enters Organization

At the same time Zukor was expanding in other directions. He recognized the ability of Jesse L. Lasky when that young man began producing in Hollywood pictures of the Zukor grade, beginning his memorable series with "The Squaw Man" under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. It wasn't long before the Lasky organization had joined forces with the Zukor company. Then Zukor decided that the problem of distribution must be solved systematically. This led to his acquisition of the Paramount exchanges. When this organization made up the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in 1916, it formed an impressive body whose value was appraised at $25,000,000.

With the problem of production and distribution well in hand, Zukor and his associates soon went into the theatre business in order to get their product properly exhibited. A powerful combination of exhibitors, who also were engaged in production, were making it difficult for the Paramount organization to get its pictures played in the big theatres. Zukor bought the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York in 1920. Then his company began to purchase other theatres and in 1925 Publix Theatres Corporation was formed as a subsidiary of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Today, Paramount Publix Corporation takes in every possible phase of motion picture entertainment. And the man who took such a remarkable far-seeing part in this remains today the same unassuming, soft-spoken, quiet-mannered man he always has been, devoted toward his family, loyal to his friends—a fighter of great pluck and resource, yet a foeman without abiding rancor, and a prince of hospitality to those whom he esteems.

SCENARIO AS HARD TO WRITE AS NOVEL

sophisticated musicals. Complicated pictures may have two directors and a number of assistants.

Paramount's present roster of directors is the largest in the history of the company. The following is the directorial list: George Abbott, Dorothy Arzner, Monta Bell, David Burton, Eddie Cline, Harry Cort, John Cromwell, George Cukor, H. d'Abbadie d'Arrast, William C. deMille, Louis Gasnier, Marion Gering, Edward Goodman, Edmund Goulding, Victor Heerman, Ernst Lubitsch, Rouben Mamoulian, Guthrie McClintic, Lothar Mendes, Norman McLeod, Ernest B. Schoedsack, Edward Sloman, Edward Sutherland, Norman Taurog, Frank Tuttle, Josef von Sternberg, Berthold Viertel, Slavko Vorkapich, Richard Wallace, and Stuart Walker.

Other Departments Busy

But the work of transposition into celluloid has hardly commenced when the director or directors have been selected. Copies of the script are sent simultaneously to the director and to the heads of the casting, research, costuming, drapery, camera, music, sound, property and art departments.

While the casting is under way the art department is designing sets for the production; the research department is going through its vast files to determine that every detail of setting and local color is authentic; the drapery department is planning curtains and hangings; the costume department is creating new gowns for the leading actresses and, if the picture is set in the past, for the entire cast; the property department is providing furniture either from its warehouse or from new designs submitted by the art department, and the location manager is scanning his large scale maps to find settings for outdoor scenes.

When all this has been done the director and his assistants begin their revision.

According to Josef von Sternberg, director of such pictures as "Morocco" and "Dishonored," motion picture scripts, no matter how good, must be torn down and built up again by the director before great pictures can be made.

After the director or co-directors have completed this work the little-publicized but extremely important assistant director does his bit.

In part his work is as follows:

1. Break down the script into a scene plot showing the number of scenes for each sequence in each set with the time of the day or night specified.
2. Make a property plot; a scene-by-scene specification of the props required.
3. See that the wardrobe to be worn in the production is ready at least 48 hours before it is to be used on the set.
4. See that all bits and extra parts are suitably cast.
5. Take up dance or song numbers with the musical director and submit the finished result for approval by the director and star.
6. Tell the head cameraman the photographic effects desired.
7. Issue calls to everybody desired. (A call is a typewritten sheet upon which the time, place and persons required are mimeographed each day.)
8. Approve the sites of location scenes.
9. Pose the players for still pictures.

When the final approval has been given on all these details the carpentry department bursts into a flurry of activity and sets for preliminary scenes rise on the studio stages as if by magic.

In the meantime the cast has been rehearsing the whole production. These rehearsals last as least two weeks, during which time the now battered script goes through further revisions and polishings.

When all is in readiness for shooting to begin; when the lights are arranged and the cameras set and loaded; the cast dressed in its costumes and the sound technicians at their posts, a dress rehearsal of the first scene is held on the newly built set. Here again the never-ending work of revision goes on.

Quite often at this spot the microphone balks at special combinations of phrases and the speeches have to be changed. A recent example of this occurred at Paramount's New York studio when the sentence "I've seen a museum," spoken by a young actress, came back invariably as "I've seen 'em. You see 'em." The line had to be changed to "I've been to a museum" before the scene could be completed.

"Playbacks" prove extremely important in this final revision.

Changes After "Rushes"

And this is not all. At the end of the day all those working on the picture attend a showing of "rushes," that is, all the film shot during that period. Here again actions which look perfectly correct on paper may be found stiff, awkward or illogical on the screen. In such a case the scene is revamped.

Slowly the picture progresses from scene to scene and at the end of a month of hard work is completed. The film, thousands and thousands of feet of it, is then edited and cut down to the 7,000 feet which will be projected in the theatre.

Then comes the first preview, held in the studio projection room and attended by studio executives and those working on the picture. Sometimes this "rough cut" will show weak scenes and gaps in the action. To remedy these, "retakes" are made.

After this work has been completed a final preview is held, this time open to the public (Glendale is Paramount's preview town in California, while Plainfield, N. J., serves for Eastern productions). At this preview audience reactions are checked carefully by all parties concerned. If these reactions are good, the picture is released without further editing. If not, it goes back for further pointing up.

At last the finished product is sent to theatres throughout the world and the script takes a well-earned rest in the company's vaults.

Groucho Remarx On How To Read Signs at Studios

"Silly things, signs and omens," commented Groucho Marx, famous for Marxian remarx.

Groucho is the one with the black mustache who is usually pictured on the extreme left end of any group because he learned when a small boy that all captions read from left to right, or, in the case of the Marxmen, from laff to riot.

"When I speak of signs," was the next of Groucho's crax, "I don't mean those along the highways, although without signs how would we know what cures pyorrhea and without pyorrhea the ad writers' spelling wouldn't be so hard.

"Now a lot of folks have foolish meanings for signs and omens. What this country needs, besides a good five cent cigar, are more practical interpretations of signs.

"While working on 'Monkey Business' at the Paramount Studios with my brothers, Harpo, Zeppo and Chico, under the direction of Norman McLeod and written by—oh, hang the other credits, if you get that in, it will be enough—and be sure you do mention it in your writeup, I have worked out the following with regards to signs and omens:

"Rapping on wood is a sure sign that one's knuckles will be sore.

"A black cat crossing in front of a person signifies that the animal is going somewhere.

"Friday is a bad day for those who dislike fish.

"Throwing salt over one's shoulder is likely to give the impression that he has dandruff.

"Thirteen is unlucky at a dinner when the host has only twelve chops.

"When a person's nose itches it means he should scratch it.

"Singing before breakfast often brings a quarrel or fight with the neighbors if they are trying to sleep.

"Shaking hands across a table is a sign that the two parties are lazy.

"Walking under a ladder is a bad habit, especially when painters are using the ladder.

"To get out of bed on the wrong side probably means you had too much to drink the night before.

"Finding a four leaf clover means you have had to get down on your knees and probably have grass stains on your trousers.

"To go back home after something you've forgotten is a sure sign that your memory is failing.

"To carry a rabbit's foot means that you are a good shot or have a friend who is—or maybe you're just lucky.

"Recognizing the number 13 indicates that you've been to school.

"Breaking a mirror is certain to end the usefulness of the article."

Mass Appeal of Theatre Clears Television Fears, Says Franklin

Motion Picture Playhouse Is Community Center for Public Interests, Declares Circuit Executive

THERE are apparent wide differences between officials of important electrical organizations, on the subject of television. Scarcely a few weeks ago, key officials stated that the status of television indicated that it would be years before television would be ready for the public. Following upon that, however, David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, before a recent stockholders' meeting, indicated that his company had made rapid strides and would in all likelihood introduce television commercially within a comparatively short time.

The recent activities of engineers not affiliated with the Western Electric or Radio groups such as the Jenkins organization in this country, Baird in England, Dr. Fritz Schroeder in Berlin and others, have no doubt given impetus to its earlier debut.

The Radio affiliates and Western Electric have not been willing to launch this new medium until it had been fully developed, and would rather have its introduction dovetail, so to speak, with their other activities. They feel that the public, being air-minded, will expect a more perfected apparatus than radio was when first introduced. The showing of silhouette figures or half-tones, though astonishing at first, will not continue to interest unless shown with a degree of clarity comparable to present-day radio reception. There is no definite entertainment in the present head and shoulder images.

The activities, however, of television enthusiasts have forced the hands of the big electrical companies, so to speak, and all indications point to the coming of television in a comparatively short time, even though its introduction may perhaps be premature. In New York, at present, several stations are giving television broadcastings, after a fashion, daily. Broadcasting at present is limited to comparatively short distances—not more than 15 miles, and has not been perfected where stations may be chained, as in radio. Therefore television, for some time to come, must be considered as a local and limited thing.

It may be expected that within a year television broadcasting stations will be established in the most important cities. Television will be introduced through the regular radio channels, which, because of sound synchronization, must necessarily depend upon radio. Television will bring to radio a second chapter of progress.

Enthusiasts have pictured the broadcasting of great public events, football or baseball games, right into the home, overlooking the basic fact that no camera even has been perfected that can register pictures on such a scale. The slightest electrical interference practically blots the picture out.

The responsible sponsors of television feel that it will not supplant any present existing form of entertainment. It is not likely that television will become an adjunct of theatre entertainment for some time to come. Apparatus for theatre use must necessarily be of a highly complicated sensitive and costly nature and the proper operation of such apparatus will require the highest grade technicians who are able to operate and maintain such equipment.

Entirely new fundamentals will have to be established before pictures of sufficient size can be projected before large audiences. To enlarge the picture under present conditions is quite possible and is being done, but as the size of the picture increases, the detail becomes less clear. When magnified, all the defects in the images are shown. Television programs will not in any measure approach the crystal clear reproduction of present-day motion pictures. The most advanced development along this connection was shown in Schenectady, when Dr. Alexanderson of General Electric broadcast orchestral numbers and vaudeville acts by radio for a distance of one mile and were reproduced in images on a screen six feet by seven feet. Much work has to be done towards increasing the size of projected images in sufficient clarity to measure up to motion picture standards.

What possible advantage would there be in sending a motion picture from a central station when the same entertainment could be shown less expensively and more accurately by present-day methods. If television is to supplant motion picture projectors and sound apparatus, it will have to develop a greater degree of quality than is now shown in motion pictures, which is unlikely.

Television in the house will in all probability be of such quality and of such nature that it will not be able to compete with the comfort, program, variety and picture quality of the theatre. It is doubtful whether television pictures will ever contain the exquisite pictorial detail of motion pictures.

In the beginning, television will probably affect theatre attendance, but after the novelty has worn off it will be a stimulant for theatre entertainment. Just as radio has brought a taste for entertainment to many, so will the broadened scope of television create a desire for greater entertainment.

There is a mass appeal in watching entertainment in a theatre that cannot be duplicated in the home. Emotional response in an audience is infectious. People prefer to go with the crowd. Here we have an expression of group psychology. They are not satisfied habitually to sit by the fireside. People want to be seen and see. The motion picture theatre is a community center which brings to many people their most enjoyable social contacts. Even when television is fully perfected on a commercial scale and televised subjects are broadcast for reception directly into millions of homes, the motion picture theatre will continue to thrive as the gathering place for the multitudes who seek entertainment.

MGM May Produce Some Multi-Linguals in Berlin

MGM is understood to be considering production of multi-linguals in Berlin. Preliminary discussions with German film interests are said to have been held by Irving Thalberg, who returned to New York this week from Europe, en route to Hollywood.

George Folsey, chief cameraman at the Paramount New York plant, is using a new motor-driven camera tripod, designed to facilitate movement about the set. A lever tips the camera as desired.

Ufa Looks At Cleveland

Ufa representatives are investigating situations in Cleveland with a view to leasing a house as a foreign film outlet. This would be first of a group of houses outside New York.

Night Baseball Cuts In

Night baseball in Denver is making slight inroads into box office receipts, with women admitted free when accompanied. Miniature golf courses are passing out, rapidly.

The Warner in Oklahoma City has gone dark for a six-weeks period, marking the first time a theatre in the city has closed due to summer slackness.

What's in a Name? There's Much in Just One Letter!

What letter seems to be most potent to start off the name of a girl with an ambition to be a screen star?

A survey of the several hundred young and not so young women who have triumphed in the last year, in character or leading parts of talking pictures, brings a most interesting parade of statistics.

It defies, for example, the superstition that "13" is an unlucky number.

"M," the thirteenth letter in the alphabet, has more noted feminine players to its credit than any other—64, to be exact—including such celebrities as Polly Moran, Colleen Moore, Karen Morley, Dorothy Mackaill and Jeanette MacDonald.

"I," a letter which film players are popularly supposed to love with overwhelming affection, is not liked at all as the start of a name. It has one entry, Mary Jane Irving, a child player.

"G," the seventh letter of the alphabet, which should be by all odds the most popular, is only reasonably so. With 35 names (including Charlotte Greenwood, Janet Gaynor, Greta Garbo), it is surpassed by "B," 59 (Edwina Booth, Clara Bow, Constance Bennett, et al.); "C," 58 (Joan Crawford, Betty Compson, Sue Carroll); "L," 45 (Bessie Love, Gwen Lee, Lila Lee).

"S" and "T" are also reasonably popular, with 34 each, including Norma Shearer, Ruth Selwyn, Gloria Swanson, Norma Talmadge, Estelle Taylor.

There are 20 feminine players with "D," but what a 20! They number Marie Dressler, Lily Damita, Marion Davies, Dolores del Rio.

Every letter in the alphabet boasts a feminine star except "X." So far no "Miss Xavier" nor "Miss Zenophon" has appeared to beg for cinematic glory!

Kinsman & Wilkinson Deny Reubenson Association

A statement has just been issued by Robert Kinsman and K. Wilkinson in London denying association with Reginald Reubenson. At various times in the past, they have acted as commission agents for the Reubenson product, the statement says, but that has been the extent of the association.

Clemenger Recording Series

J. F. Clemenger is now recording dialogue for three of the Educational-Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge series. They are "Vagabond Melodies" and "Highlights of Travel," which complete the current season's product, and "The Veldt," first of the 1931-32 releases.

Harry L. Knapp, chairman, and Henry S. Richardson, secretary of the Pennsylvania censor board, have been replaced by Samuel D. Schwartz and Mrs. J. French Kerr, respectively. The third, Mrs. B. D. Davenport was appointed by Governor Pinchot early this year.

toriums. In the old type of "legitimate" theatre, the distance from the stage to the back of the auditorium was limited on account of the voice, and the majority of auditoriums were generally of a shallow type, limited to a small number of seats, compared to what is now being installed. Inasmuch as in the silent pictures, voice was no factor, this naturally gave every opportunity to the designer of auditoriums to take great liberties in rearranging, enlarging and decorating and showing originality, and he was also able to produce an auditorium with a greater number of seats.

The popularity of pictures has become so great that it has more than doubled the seating capacity of theatres within the last few years and more and more is it the desire to build large theatres, especially in downtown congested sections of our principal cities, and in order to accommodate large crowds, great care must be taken in the arrangement of circulation, lobby spaces, foyers, etc.

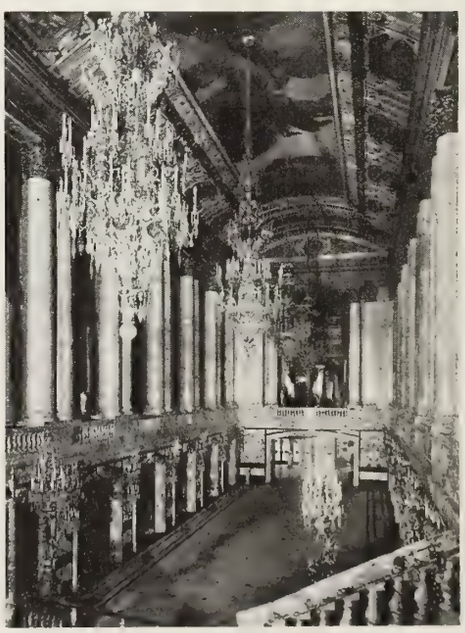
The Grand Entrance

A feature which has been developed entirely by the motion picture theatre designer is what can well be called the "Grand Entrance." The facade or exterior view of a present-day picture theatre is totally different from any of the old type of theatre exterior architecture. Much attention has been given by the owners to having large and very decorative exteriors in order to have them as attractive as possible, realizing the advertising value of decoration to the public. The exterior designs are today being beautifully illuminated with different lighting effects and adorned with attractive advertising signs, attraction signs, also with large overhanging canopies, all of which has developed into a more or less recognized necessity for the exterior of the modern motion picture theatre. Too much attention cannot be given to the beautification of the main entrance, especially to features such as the box office, poster frames, etc.

Notable example of some of the modern theatres in reference to the exterior, is that of the Paramount theatre, Times Square, New York. It has a large arched motif of carved stone, bronze and glass, all of which forms a very effective and characteristic treatment. The box office, entrance doors, etc., are very decorative in statuary bronze. Likewise the Paramount theatre in Brooklyn, New York, together with several large Paramount houses in Chicago and on the West Coast, have also given much attention to the decorative treatment of the exterior.

The Entrance Lobby

After one has passed through the grand entrance he is received into what is known as the "Entrance Lobby," which is practically a large-sized vestibule and which is treated in colored marbles and substantial materials of this sort, and which is always incorporated for the reason that this vestibule acts more or less as a protection against the elements. In other words, in cold weather it makes a separation from the "Grand Lobby" and the street and guards against drafts, which naturally would penetrate into the Grand Lobby where many people are standing and thereby would cause a great amount of discomfort and criticism on the part of the public. C. W. & George L. Rapp, architects for many Paramount theatres throughout this country, have given considerable thought and study to this particular feature.



The loby of the Publix Rialto theatre in Joliet, Ill. C. W. & George L. Rapp, architects.

The Grand Lobby

The "Grand Lobby" of all moving picture theatres has really been developed in order to accommodate large crowds who are not able to obtain seats in the auditorium for a short time, and also who do not care to view a performance unless they can find a seat at the beginning and wish to wait or stroll through the lobbies in the meantime.

Inasmuch as the theatre doors are opened in the morning and stay open until long hours of the night, people come and go as they wish, many people, of course, arriving after a performance has started. As a rule the latter would sooner wait and stroll about the lobbies viewing the decorations, art objects, etc. It is for this reason that the Grand Lobby has developed into a large, spacious room, with lofty ceiling height, beautiful decorations—a room particularly designed for people standing and waiting to be seated, who thus have something beautiful to interest them. They can center their minds upon the decorative treatment of the lobby and will not notice the waiting, as they would if the room were small and drab.

The Grand Lobbies in most of the notable Paramount theatres designed by C. W. & George L. Rapp, have many features, such as stairways, fountains, niches, beautiful marbles, bronzes, lighting fixtures, etc. Several of the large theatres have very beautiful and unusual treatments of this feature, notably the Paramount theatre in

New York, where the Grand Lobby has a vast amount of Breche Opal marble, statuary bronzes, marble floors, a white marble stairway and a fountain.

The Grand Lobby of the Michigan theatre in Detroit, Michigan, is also in a treatment of marbles, such as Red Levanto, White Marble, Grey Tennessee and Black Marble, with ornamental bronze railings, stairways, etc. These lobbies and others are made as large as possible, to be viewed from the street by the passersby. In other words, a view of the spectacular Grand Lobby from the street is very enticing, and many times, architects feel, people will enter the theatre wholly on account of admiring the architecture and decoration. This has been made possible by a large expanse of glass used for entrances, etc., so that a view can be had of the Grand Lobby through the entrance lobby.

The Grand Lobby is becoming more and more popular and also is increasing in size where it is possible, and at present plans for new theatres are making more and more a decorative feature of the Grand Lobby. This particular feature of a theatre cannot afford to be overlooked, but must increase in size as the auditorium increases in size. One can well understand that with the latest developments that have been made and that will continue to be made in the producing of pictures, together with the novel stage presentations, musical numbers, orchestra features, etc., that the motion picture theatre is practically supplanting all other types of theatres, and may be, indeed, converting the motion picture and legitimate theatres into one group.

Foyers

The term "Foyer" is one of European extraction and is known by different terms, such as orchestra foyer, balcony foyer, mezzanine foyer, etc. This particular feature of a theatre is always an important item, as from these foyers are the entrances and stairways to the different parts leading to the auditorium and miscellaneous rooms of the theatre.

Foyers as a rule are long and somewhat narrow in arrangement and serve mostly, as stated above, as arteries of circulation. These foyers in the majority of houses, especially the large monumental type, have been treated in a very admirable manner. They are designed with mirrors, architectural features, nooks, recesses, etc., and unlike the Grand Lobby accommodate a large amount of furniture and art objects. The foyers, besides being used entirely for circulation, also become large lounging rooms which are beautifully furnished and have art objects, pictures, hangings etc. They become, as one might say, subordinate lobby space, but of a more intimate type.

In the Paramount theatres by C. W. & George L. Rapp, one can well note the different features embodied in these foyers, such as recesses for furniture, nooks, etc., and of the interesting treatment that can be used in foyers.

The Auditorium

The auditorium of all motion picture houses has been one of vast study and research. It has been the desire of the architects, designers and also of the owners, to make as many novel and outstanding features of this particular unit as possible—in fact, more spectacular than any other part of the theatre—as one can well realize greater opportunities can be had in this vast space, and it is always the desire to reach for novel features and in such a way surpass the one previously designed. This, as one can readily see, brings forth talent in different decorative lines, as there are so many opportunities for new ideas and interesting treatments in an auditorium.

Different styles or architecture have been employed throughout the country, bringing into work practically all well known types of architecture of the Old World, and also characteristics of architectural styles of this country. Where auditoriums must be large enough to accommodate a large-sized audience, the problem is one which is very complex at times. Sight lines become a very important item, especially if auditoriums cover a great deal of floor space. In many cases the auditoriums must be very wide, and in cases of this kind, care must be taken to prevent distortion of vision. Also, unlike the old theatre, the later type of picture theatre auditoriums have large side aisles, or what might be called side aisle foyers, in which the audience can promenade, and in these foyers can be decorative objects, draperies, etc., all of which have a tendency to increase the perspective of the interior and enhance the side wall treatment.

Where auditoriums are very large, if not given special attention in the side wall treatment, they will have a tendency to take on a type or style of a coliseum—in other words, just plain walls in spite of what decorations may be applied. It is for this reason that C. W. & George L. Rapp introduced large open treatments, such as colonnades, arcades, niches, etc. Notable auditoriums where features of this kind occur are the Paramount theatre at Toledo, Ohio, which is of an atmospheric type, introducing features of Roman Gardens and the like. The same can be seen in a more elaborate manner in the Paramount theatre in Brooklyn, New York. Here we have a large open arcade with large scale niches, including fountains, statuary and also a perforated ceiling behind which are sky effects of different colors, also trees, shrubbery, flowers, etc., which have been introduced in both of these houses in order to lend interest and color to the auditorium.

The auditoriums of the Paramount theatres at Portland, Ore., and Seattle, are of different types and do not have the side aisle or foyer treatment. This, of course, was eliminated on account of not having the space to sacrifice, as the architects were obliged to use all the space possible for seats.

The large auditorium of the Chicago theatre and also of the Uptown theatre in Chicago, make them two theatres of very interesting design embodying the side wall foyer treatment, while that of the Oriental theatre in Chicago is one which has flat wall treatment, but inasmuch as the auditorium is of a smaller type, the architects feel that this particular wall treatment in the Oriental theatre is one that is outstanding among its kind.

The introduction of sound pictures brought forth many complex problems of acoustics, which are more or less influencing at present the features of an auditorium, and in one way are having an effect on the type and style of architecture for these large rooms.

Some of the recent Paramount houses have taken on an entirely different shape on account of sound. What would be satisfactory for the ordinary voice is not always satisfactory for the voice of the screen, and it is for this reason that the auditoriums designed since the advent of the sound picture have taken on a considerably different shape in order to overcome many difficulties that have presented themselves.

The proscenium arch of the auditorium is naturally the focal point and is one which must be well studied in regard to shape and scale. The proscenium arch takes on the aspect of a large framed painting fitted into a large room, and it is natural enough to see that a large room which can accommodate a large painting would do so proportionately. It is for this reason that architects lay great stress in getting the proper shape and proportion and scale for the proscenium. The prosecenium must be designed in such a way to be fitting in size to the auditorium, but at the same time must be designed so as not to dwarf the performers and stage settings.

Stage

The development of the stage will progress with all mechanical equipment, inventions, etc., which are happening every day. Great strides in all mechanical lines have been made the last few years, and inventions of all kinds are finding their place in stage building and stage productions. Included in these many items are lighting effects of untold possibilities, also riggings, trappings, etc., required in the production of plays.

Although picture theatres have been built and will be built solely for the production of pictures, nevertheless theatres commonly present stage productions as well as pictures, and large stages are being built to accommodate great and mammoth stage productions of unusual theatrical character. These stages are all equipped with dressing rooms, try-

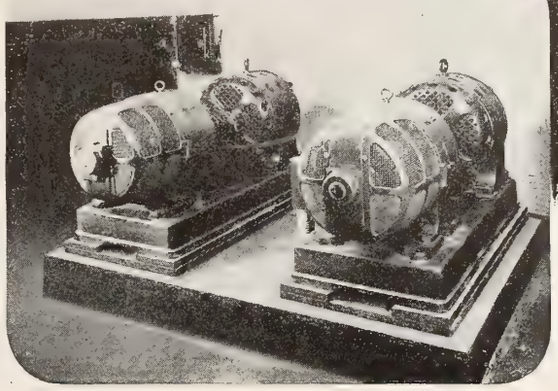
UNIFORM PROJECTION

After all, that's what counts!

NORTOWN THEATRE, CHICAGO—
A PUBLIX THEATER



BECAUSE of their ability to meet the particular power requirements of the projection booth, and to provide a steady direct current which produces an arc of uniform, unvarying intensity, ROTH Actodectors were selected by Publix for their new Nortown Theatre, Chicago.

Thirty-seven years of experience by Roth Engineers has resulted in perfectly balanced construction throughout the entire unit. Actodectors, resistors and control panels are so matched as to assure continuous, uniform projection even during change-over.

Built in sizes from 20 to 600 amperes

ROTH

Some of the Many Advantages of ROTH Actodectors

1. Accurately built and liberally proportioned.
2. Economical in operation. Actodectors operate at low voltage which reduces loss in ballast resistors.
3. Laminations are non-ageing and made of low-loss silicon steel for increasing efficiency.
4. Rolled steel frames—light weight—more efficient.
5. Any number of arcs can be carried within the ampere rating.
6. Especially satisfactory with sound projection equipment.
7. They supply steady direct current power of constant voltage—brilliant screen illumination of uniform intensity results.

out rooms, musical director's rooms, chorus rooms and lounge rooms for performers.

The mechanical equipment, which is of great importance in connection with the stage, must be confined in economical space in order to leave as much room for the stage as possible.

The demand for unusual illumination and electrical effects in the auditorium, as well as on the stage, has brought into being new types of electrically operated switchboards and machinery of this kind for the control of color effects in lights, such as dimmers and other automatic devices for controlling these different light units. They are set in what is known as units and these are automatically controlled in most of the large houses.

Included in the long list of new and novel mechanical features of a theatre is the Grand Organ, which requires a great deal of space, and in most of the houses is at the side walls of the auditorium and operated from a keyboard in the orchestra pit. The organ plays an unimportant part in the performance. In each house it has a full orchestration for the producing of different musical effects. Colored lighting effects in theatres have also been produced in connection with organ music. In many of the large, modern theatres, mechanical devices for the lifting of the orchestra pit platform, organ console platform, also parts of the stage, and subsidiary or minor stages, which are added from time to time for different productions have introduced more elements than were used in the old type of theatre. In all the Paramount theatres designed by C. W. & George L. Rapp, the stage units have been greatly stressed, and much attention paid to the different dressing rooms, etc., for the accommodation of performers, of which there are a great many in large houses, for pleasant surroundings, clean, bright and cheerful, play a great part in making the work of a performer more effective. This feature in "legitimate" theatres of years ago, was one that was never considered, and it is hard to believe why it was not.

Miscellaneous Retiring Rooms

A great deal has been said about the decorative treatment, planning and arrangement of Grand Lobbies, Foyers, Auditoriums, Stages, etc., which constitute the important elements of every theatre building, but many items still remain which are of great importance as far as the accommodation of the public is concerned. Few patrons realize how many of these features there really are, and the importance of them. In practically all theatres of the modern type many rooms are required, such as lounges, women's retiring rooms, men's smoking rooms, hospital or emergency room, ushers' rooms, rooms for manager, executive staff and many others, not only for the public, but for the theatre operating staff.

Many interesting and novel features are being incorporated in the designing and planning of retiring rooms, and novel architural features are finding their place more and more in these interesting places. Very colorful effects in decorating, and also unusual and novel designs of furniture are being thought of. Smoking rooms are finding their place in all theatres (not only for men, but also for women), and more and more as these different desires are felt by the public, more and more do they complicate the planning of a theatre to meet the wishes of the public.

One of the interesting features embodied in some of the modern houses of today is the large space given to children in the way of a playroom, which has an attendant and is fitted up with toys, games, books, etc. Patrons can take their children to the theatre and leave them in the playroom with a well trained attendant and have no fear of their not being well taken care of.

The Paramount theatre in New York has given a great deal of space to miscellaneous retiring rooms and is one of the most up-to-date theatres in the country as far as features of this kind are concerned. In it is incorporated a museum, together with rooms of different periods of French style of architecture, and for them have been gathered from all corners of the earth, beautiful objects of art.

The Paramount theatre in Brooklyn contains many novel features in the way of retiring rooms, notably a lounge that is one of the largest to be installed to date. This particular lounge contains atmospheric features in the way of giving an outdoor effect, and one end contains a large aquarium containing large Japanese goldfish. This theatre also contains several oval rooms of interesting character and contains novel features, all in connection with the main lounge, smoking rooms, etc.

The modernistic type of architecture has found its way in an admirable manner in the treatment of smaller rooms, and every new theatre brings forth some new way to appeal to the theatre-going public.

Other Facilities

Structural matters and architectural effects, of course, do not exhaust the professional interests of the architect. The patron attending theatres like the modern Paramount houses, finds them comfortable as well as appealing to the eye and conveniently arranged. Of first importance to comfort are the seats and the atmospheric conditions.

Seats for Paramount theatres are especially designed to fit precisely the part of the house in which they are to be placed, so as to be most restful and be best adapted to the sight lines at each location. During the last few years seating design has made great advances, and in the Paramount theatres are chairs not only upholstered and designed for greatest comfort and a high degree of beauty, but also to eliminate to every extent possible any danger of injury to clothing or person.

Likewise, it has been since the motion picture theatre has developed to its present standard, that heating and ventilating science has perfected equipment to provide the best atmospheric conditions, regardless of the time of year or what the weather is outside. There are a number of different methods of conditioning the atmosphere of a theatre, the type best suited depending upon the size of the theatre and other specific factors. In general, air conditioning machinery employed in Paramount theatres is of the more elaborate type and is capable of bringing in fresh air constantly from outside, at the upper part of the building, according to a rate set by the number of seats in the theatre—then washing this fresh air of all impurities, heating it or cooling it (depending on the temperature desired in the theatre), and circulating it throughout the area occupied by the patrons and theatre personnel, without drafts. Machinery capable of accomplishing this represents the highest engineering skill, and its development is a great achievement of our age which the Paramount Publix circuit has taken full advantage of for the welfare of its patrons.

Similarly, projection requires the attention of the architect, since he must provide in the best possible manner accommodations for its extensive outlay of complex machinery. Projection today also includes the reproduction of the voices and other sounds in the picture, and the public demands high quality in both the picture and the sound. As a result, the projection room must be placed most advantageously for the technical requirements of projection, it must be large, it should afford good working conditions for the projection staffs, and its auxiliary rooms must be located in the most efficient place in relationship to it.

The high quality of Paramount projection is not only a tribute to the highly organized projection department of the circuit, which has its own service men and even a research department, in addition to the highly skilled men who operate the equipment, but it is also a result of the provisions made in the layout of the theatre for the most efficient operation of the elaborate and excellent equipment which this circuit insists upon.

The illustrations that accompany this article show what has been realized in an effort to make Paramount theatres reflect the appeal and importance of motion pictures in our life today. Just as any great institution does today, building itself a place of business that in both appearance and facilities is in keeping with the character of its business, so the great motion picture circuit regards it as sound business practice to have theatres that are well built, delightful to look upon and be in, and provided with the means for comfort, convenience and effective entertainment. It has been to meet both these requirements of the fine modern theatre—beauty and facility—that C. W. & George L. Rapp developed the principles of theatre architecture reflected in the Paramount theatres commented on here, as well as in many others. The modern circuit house is particularly notable, architecturally, for its effort to provide for the comfort of its patrons; at the same time permitting that patron to find enjoyment in a luxurious setting.

The B&S Rear Shutter performs a triple duty: (1) It reduces the heat at the aperture by 70 per cent.; (2) it renders negligible the effects of warped and buckled film; and (3) by positive air-suction and air-expulsion action it keeps the film free from dirt and dust, prevents the entrance into the lamphouse of an air draught (often responsible for arc disturbance and cracked condensers), and prevents the egress of polluted air from the lamphouse into the projection room. Proper design and construction, and the use of quality materials, make possible the discharge of this triple duty.

The B & S Changeover consists of two shutter blades contained in a housing designed to be attached to the cone of the lamphouse and operates on either alternating or direct current, at 110 to 125 volts. Oakland Theatre Facade Features An Unusual Sign

The Paramount in Oakland, Cal., which is expected to be completed by October 1, seats 3,500 and is the work of J. R. Miller and T. L. Pfluger, San Francisco architects.

No classical precedent architecturally has been followed in the design of the building, either interior or exterior, but rather is the house unique in design. The sign, unusually enough, has been made the feature of the entire facade, which is built around it, instead of the sign, as is usual, being considered detrimental to the general architectural appearance of the building. The sign rises to a height of 120 feet above the sidewalk, while the building is faced with an enormous mosaic of glazed tile in warm colors.

Two views of the Paramount in Oakland, Cal.—the facade (above) and the lobby (at right) J. R. Miller and T. L. Pflueger, architects.

The base is in polished black marble inlaid with metal.

The lobby is 45 feet wide, 52 feet high and 85 feet long. The base is of white grained black marble, with bands of silver metal. The great side-wall piers are of vermilion, framed in gold. A band of silvery metal lace-work 25 feet wide, consisting of metal fins with light shimmering through from behind, forms the ceiling and extends down on the end walls. At the end of the lobby opposite the grand stairway, there is a great light-fountain of glass 35 feet in height. Seven large windows, illuminated from behind, occur between the vermilion piers on each side of the lobby.

The auditorium, in a general way, has the form of a megaphone, the walls are curved toward the stage, and the ceiling curved to a miter with the walls. The central portion of the ceiling consists of a lace-work of metal fins similar to those used in the grand lobby. The stage is flanked by columns of metal indirectly illuminated. The side-walls, and the ceiling, where metal fins do not occur, are entirely sculptured in abstract ornamental and non-repeating figures depicting theatrical motifs.

On the ground floor below the orchestra level is located a large general lounge, men's and women's lounges and smoking rooms. These appointments are repeated on the mezzanine.

Mechanical convenience and comfort have been developed to the highest degree, an air conditioned ventilating system, lighting effects giving unlimited color changes, and every device for the control of the circulation and seating of patrons, being included in the theatre's appointments.

The departure of this design from styles widely used and its attempt to achieve distinctive originality in the application of modernistic motifs, promise to make this Paramount house one of the most striking in the circuit.

Oriental Leads 3 New England Publix Houses

The Oriental and Seville theatres in Boston, and the Community in North Attleboro, Mass., originally built for the Netoco circuit and later taken over by Publix, were all the product of the designing faculties of Krokyn, Browne and Rosenstein, Boston architects.

The Oriental, latest of the three, embodies the newest and most modern principles of theatre equipment and operation in a theatre setting in which the strongly predominant architectural flavor is oriental, with all the grace and charm and unusual effect of the splendidly distinctive architecture of the East.

The exterior is of polychrome stone, while high above the entrance rises the tri-part roof, with the hip rafters well curled, cleverly simulating the gates of the Chinese city of Tsinanfu. The lobby and vestibule are done in modern adaptations of the dominant Chinese motif. Temples and the Great Wall gave of their architectural beauty to adorn the Oriental, with its 3,000 seats, in faithful and hence, dynamically real adaptations and reproductions of the mystic Chinese building characteristics.

The richly decorated and columned foyer gives on two delightful lounges for men and women, a nursery, a small separate lobby for those entering from the large adjacent parking space and to the auditorium. The auditorium is of the stadium type, with the design giving an illusion of the outdoors, typically Chinese and pleasant in its color and variety of forms. The side walls are worked out in a scheme, designed to lead the eye to the prosenium opening, the designs themselves each more entrancing than the one before, drawing the eye to the center of attraction, the stage, which is the fundamental test of good design in any successful theatre interior treatment.

The Seville, also a Boston house, was the first atmospheric theatre in that city. As is indicated by the name, the house is dommantly Spanish in architectural motif. The theatre, constructed at an approximate cost of $1,000,000, embodies two splendid architectural qualities, dignity and striking originality.

The marquee, 34 feet long, hangs over the sidewalk. A small vestibule is set between the outside lobby and the grand foyer, which is 88 feet long and 24 feet wide. Characteristic decorative touches here and there, relieve the severe simplicity of the foyer. The floor is of tile, and the walls of stucco in the Spanish motif. The wall lights, designed for soft illumination, have as bases, copies of Spanish family shields. Three loggias, each with a fireplace, open off the foyers, and are equipped with antique Spanish benches.

The auditorium, 134 feet long and 88 feet wide, contains 1,725 seats, and is built in the stadium style, with balcony, loges and boxes omitted. The walls represent various types of Spanish homes, blended one into another and so set as to form a continuous panorama. The interior is, on the whole, a pleasant combination of architecture, color, luxurious furnishings and hangings, designed to add to the pleasure of the patron, with its atmosphere of good taste and beauty.

An investment of $300,000 is invested in the Community in North Attleboro's business center, and the building which houses it, now a Publix theatre. The colonial motif is the dominating note in architecture and interior fittings.

The outside lobby, 20 by 30 feet, opens on a foyer, 80 by 15 feet, in which indirect lighting effects, hangings and paintings serve to relieve the keen simplicity of the hall. The auditorium seats 1,500, and measures 100 feet long and 80 feet wide. A huge chandelier is suspended from the center of the ceiling, while various subsidiary wall lights augment this illumination. Here again, the auditorium is of the stadium type.

The entire floor is covered with a rich red carpeting, while blue and gold form the general color scheme of the auditorium. The wall panels are painted to represent silk damask.

The stage is 68 feet wide and 25 feet deep, containing all the most modern musical appliances, including a Wurlitzer organ. Spacious parking space convenient to the theatre, affords a needed and grateful convenience for the Community's local patrons.

Publix Boston House To Cost Over $2,000,000

The new Publix Paramount in Boston, expected to be opened by February, 1932, is the work of Arthur H. Bowditch, Boston architect. The contract for the actual construction work has been awarded the George B. H. Macomber Company, also a Boston firm. The house will have an approximate seating capacity of 1,900, and over $2,000,000 will have been expended in the entire construction.

The main entrance, 40 feet in width, giving unusually large entrance and exit facilities, leads directly to the main foyer which extends the whole width of the lot. On the right of this foyer is the main staircase to the balcony mezzanine nine feet in width and branching both ways as it reaches the landing half-way up. At the other side is another staircase giving access from this point to the balcony above. Access from this foyer is afforded directly to the main auditorium, which is protected against all noises from the outside by a continuous partition across the entire width of the building.

The stage itself will be most complete in equipment, arranged for sound production with a complete gridiron overhead for the handling of scenery, an unusually large orchestra pit with organ console lift from the stage level to the sub-stage below. The proscenium opening will be 35 feet in width and 30 feet in height, allowing for the largest and best productions available. The floor below the main auditorium will contain a large lounge for the comfort of the patrons from which will open men's and women's rooms. This lounge is equipped with an open fireplace, fountain, telephone booths, and check room.

At the other end of the building and below the level of the stage are the musicians' room, the organ blower room, the switchboard room, a private room for the organist, and one for the orchestra leader. There is also a large property room, machinery room containing the refrigerating apparatus, cleaners' and porter's room, janitor's room, and the transformer room arranged for the handling of the electrical services that enter the building.

The main lounge is located in the balcony mezzanine just above the entrance level of the building. It is an unusually large room connected with the men and women's rooms and to two wide vomitories leading directly to the balcony. One of its principal architectural features is a large fireplace located in an alcove. Directly available from this lounge is the manager's room, the assistant manager's, the treasurer's, and the advertisng manager's rooms. On the front of the building at this level and opening with wide folding doors from the lounge is an outdoor promenade extending the entire frontage. During the summer season this promenade will be protected by awnings and attractively decorated with tropical plants.

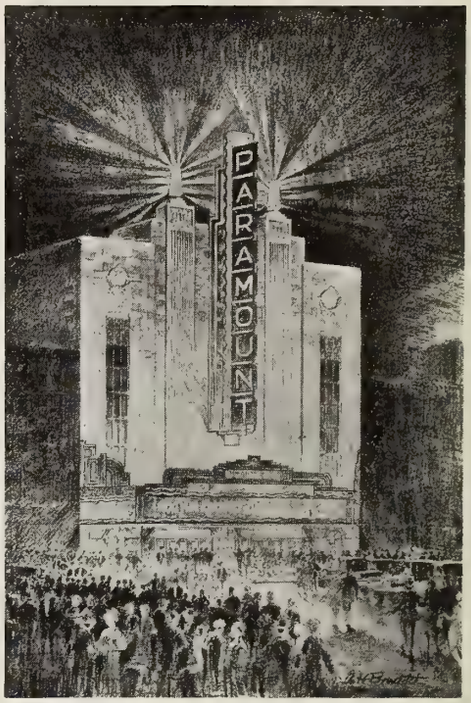
At the rear of the stage on this level are situated the dressing rooms, eight in number. Every dressing room having outside light and a wash bowl in each room fed with hot and cold water. These dressing rooms are entirely cut off from all other parts of the building and in addition to a liberal enclosed staircase, are provided with outside fire escapes. Above the dressing room floor are two large chorus rooms for the accommodation of men and women choruses, with direct access to the stage below. Above these rooms, is a balcony lobby which connects directly to the main staircases to the first floor, also two emergency exits. Here is located the main fan room for exhausting the foul air from all parts of the house as well as the air conditioning and air washing apparatus which furnishes a continuous supply of warm dehumidified air. All parts of the house are cooled by refrigeration during the summer season. Above the air conditioning room is the projection room, a large room extending across the theatre and equipped with the most complete and modern apparatus of its kind.

Connected directly with the projection room is the sound room, the motor generator room, rewind bench, and arrangement for two exits; one at each end. Directly above the stage in the front of the auditorium is the organ loft with its two chambers and relay room.

The entire structure will be absolutely fireproof in every respect, of steel and reinforced concrete. What little woodwork is required will be fireproofed and the doors will be metal covered.



Front elevation of the Paramount theatre in Boston now under construction. The facade is to be faced with light gray stone. The principal architectural features are a vertical sign of modernistic pattern, and two pylons which have the effect of extending gracefully upward the lines of what is actually a square and relatively low front.

The entire front will be of light gray stone. The principal architectural features arranged to form a part of the design of the front are the huge vertical projecting electric sign and the marquee with its signs extending 80 feet. In addition to these two great signs, the entire building will be lighted by flood lights from the marquee and the two immense lanterns capping the pylons on each side of the front entrance.

The entire equipment, furnishings and decorations will be most elaborate and modernistic in design; extreme care being taken in every case for the convenience, safety, and comfort of the patrons. An unusual number of exits are provided. The aisles and arrangement of the seats are most liberal.

Two New Publix Theatres in Fort Wayne, Anderson

The Paramount in Anderson, Indiana, was designed and built by A. M. Strauss, Fort Wayne architect, who also planned the Publix house in Fort Wayne and is at the moment engaged in the erection of another theatre for the circuit, at Fremont, Ohio.

The house in Anderson, seating 1,700, was constructed on property 144 by 150 feet and "L" shaped, with a peculiar feature being a narrowing at the rear of the theatre to 78 feet. In the building itself, there are nine stores, and 20,000 feet of rentable space.

Spanish Renaissance is the dominant architectural theme of the theatre's exterior, with Spanish atmospheric effects predominating on the interior. Steel and reinforced concrete construction insure absolute safety from fire in the physical building of the house. The mechanical equipment of the house is featured by volume pressure system of cooling with reversible heating system.

Special lighting effects, designed to enhance the atmospheric effect of the interior, include star and clouded sky treatment, garden side walls and the like.

In order to overcome the unusual problem of the narrowing of the property at the rear, a clever trellis work was simulated to preserve the exterior atmospheric effect. Due to the same property problem, the organ chambers are located in clever concealment further back and adjacent to the front of the balcony, instead of being immediately in front of the proscenium arch.

The Fort Wayne theatre, with a 2,500 seat capacity, is built on a plot 150 feet by 122 feet, with the building containing five stores and 10 suites of offices on the second floor. Here also the building is entirely fireproof, being of steel and reinforced concrete construction.

The theatre is equipped in most modern fashion throughout, including refrigeration cooling system, with reversible ventilating system. The electrical equipment includes a remote control automatic dimmer board, and special lighting fixtures in the side walls concealed behind ornamental pylons.

The theatre is particularly designed for the presentation of sound films, with the draperies of the side walls so made as to render the most beneficial results with respect to the acoustical conditions within the theatre.

Despite the shallow depth of the lot, there is no indication in the Fort Wayne house of the top heavy balcony which often results in shallow theatres.

The two views at left are of the Paramount theatre in Fort Wayne, Ind. The upper view shows the brilliant panel wall treatment of the auditorium. The other is of the proscenium arch.

The auditorium of the Paramount in Denver, indicating the attractive wall treatment and striking lighting fixtures. T. H. Buell & Company, architects.

Denver Publix House Feature Is Its Simplicity

The Paramount in Denver is the most recent Paramount-Publix house in the city, and has a seating capacity of some 2,100, of which 1,500 are on the orchestra floor. The house was designed by and constructed under the supervision of T. H. Buell & Company, Denver architects.

The building is located on a plot of ground 125 feet by 175 feet with an additional entrance lobby 32 feet wide by 100 feet long extending through a present seven story office building. This lobby was built at some additional expense in order to place the main entrance on an important street. Steel and reinforced concrete were used to make a fireproof building and the maximum safety is provided the public by ample emergency exits and fire extinguishing equipment.

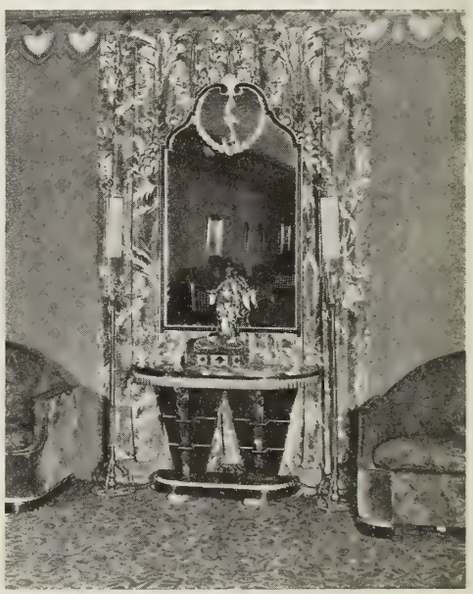
Modern style of architecture was used throughout the exterior and interior of the building, the entire street facade being of white terra cotta. The interior is designed along rather simple lines with much of the decorative treatment accomplished by the use of paint and gold leaf. The entrance lobby is perhaps the most elaborate feature, being designed in marble, wrought iron and ornamental plaster with a terrazzo floor.

Interior furnishings indicate a quiet richness rather than the gaudiness which has been resorted to in the past to give a theatrical effect. Each bit of drapery was selected to be in keeping with the general color scheme and each piece of furniture designed for comfort as well as beauty and harmony with its surroundings. Good taste is the keynote of all decorative treatment with enough sparkle to keep the patron in the proper mood.

The lighting fixtures were each specially designed for its location and requirements. The effects obtainable through the lighting layout and control are striking.

The main auditorium is 90 feet wide by 114 feet long and with its level ceiling, gives the feeling of unusually good proportions. A foyer 24 by 108 feet is provided on both the orchestra and balcony floors while large lounge and rest rooms are located in the basement. The stage is arranged primarily for sound pictures only, having a depth of 20 feet with a proscenium opening of 44 feet. The stage size can, however, be increased if required.

The most modern picture and sound equipment is installed in the projection booth, which with its subsidiary adjoining equipment rooms contain 600 square feet. Good sound effects are obtained due to acoustical correction being provided for. Acoustic plaster was used on the entire ceiling and rear wall while on the side walls mural paintings were provided in panels with a narrow recess in black, acoustically treated.



Decorative feature in the lounge of the Paramount in Denver. T. H. Buell & Company, architects.

Latest types of equipment were provided throughout the house for all phases of construction and operation such as usher signal system, air-cooling, comfortable seating, and other features for public comfort. The orchestra pit is provided with an electric lift for raising and lowering the orchestra as well as the twin organ consoles situated at opposite ends of the pit. A central fan system is installed on the third floor to provide indirect heat and ventilation for the entire theatre as well as a refrigeration system for summer cooling, all controlled by automatic thermostats to produce uniform temperatures.

Circuit Methods Developed Under Katz's Guidance

responded to the change in the public mind. They brought new expense—a relatively enormous overhead. But in the making was the method designed to take full advantage of the savings possible in group buying and merchandising, without sacrificing quick response to local conditions, even though most of the latter were represented in so subtle a thing as community psychology.

The method was evolved as Balaban & Katz, like others, grew. B. & K. (the firm name to the trade) entered the somewhat austere North Shore territory of Chicago and there built a more elaborate Central Park theatre, which they gave the rather elegant and distinguished title of Riviera. Then, just a year later, to the South Side with the Tivoli. Soon afterward to the Loop itself, where the Chicago theatre carried the glorification of motion pictures to even greater heights. By 1925 they had to return to the North Shore and build another theatre twice the size of the Riviera and only a block away from it. Followed the Norshore, the Oriental—and others.

Service System

But even before these later theatres were added, Balaban & Katz had built up at least the foundation of a distinguished system of group theatre operation. For example, even in the days when the Riviera was new, service had begun to assume first-rank importance. No longer was the performance just a "picture show," and hence no longer was the employe allowed to regard it as such. Just as the patron was discouraged from his old attitude toward the moving shadows on the screen, the theatre personnel was systematically coached to regard the job of each in a new light. A department was established to do this coaching, and through it ushers were schooled in a sort of science based on a phase of public psychology which taught them how to direct patrons to seats that it was good economy for the theatre to have them take, how to ward off chagrin in telling patrons that they must wait for seats, how to handle disturbances without creating ill will, and so on. All this to be done, moreover, with a military air and precision that had much of the flavor of the show itself—but a military manner, of course, that was no more austere than it was intimate. Thus even so menial and routine a matter as ushering was given a method, no longer regarded as a superficial process, but as a highly sensitive contact, through each uniformed lad, between the theatre owners and their customers.

The service system was but a part of the general method: The owners, never present in the theatre to meet their public themselves, are represented by the theatre personnel, and the friendliness they create in the theatre is the friendliness of the owners. It has proved a contribution to the problem of how to effect a direct, human contact between each theatre and its proprietor despite the fact that the theatre is but one of a large group owned and operated by a corporation really remote from the life of the communities from which it draws its revenue.

To the first slogan, "Let motion pictures be glorified," was added another, "Let the public be honored." Much money was invested in this phase of operation alone, the expenditure being considered a permanent investment in good-will.

But this, like the elegance of the theatre architecturally and in appointments, was the means of direct contact through the personnel. Indirectly, the personnel was hired and trained with the same study and precision, so that the unseen cogs in the machinery operated as efficiently as the others, even though all, from the manager down, were not the owners but only hired hands.

Studied Waste Elimination

In the first place, the method provided that employes should be made to understand that here was a great and growing business—a socially important addition to the means mankind seeks to make life pleasanter—calling for substantial talents. It also became the practice to watch for such talents and to make use of them as they appeared. Thus some ushers rapidly became assistant managers, certain projectionists became projection engineers in charge of projection in a group of theatres, or of certain phases of projection. Under such conditions, employes were anxious to prove themselves, and their efforts not only eliminated great waste through employee indifference or short-sighted selfishness, but uncovered brains that the corporation could build upon. Names could be mentioned easily enough, merely recalled offhand out of memory. But among the thousands of employes would be others unknown to the

STOP Cold Drafts
IN YOUR THEATRES WITH POWERS CONTROL

Do the patrons of your theatres experience the discomfort of cold drafts?

If so, you may be interested to know that in many cases it is possible to eliminate this annoyance at a surprisingly low cost. This is especially true in theatres with heating, ventilating or cooling apparatus now regulated by thermostats giving positive, snap action control as well as many of those termed as intermediate acting.

How to Stop this Menace to Health and Comfort—This trouble can be eliminated in many cases by replacing positive acting thermostats and many of the intermediate acting type with Powers true GRADUATED action thermostats because they open valves or dampers gradually only to the degree required by the temperature of the space under control.

Thus with Powers thermostats the heating or cooling medium under control is throttled gradually, valves or dampers are held not only wide open or completely closed, but at any point between these extremes to exactly correspond with the increased or decreased demand for heat.

Obviously this refinement of control results in more accurate temperature regulation, greater comfort, and the elimination of overheating and cold drafts.

Write for Estimate. Upon request we will have one of our engineers study your requirements and submit an estimate of the cost of installing Powers gradual acting thermostatic control. There's no obligation.

writer—and, after all, this is really a story about a method.

In an industry that in those days probably deserved the accusation of waste still heard from its critics, Balaban & Katz studied the elimination of waste profoundly. The adverb is used advisedly, since it was precisely to science that the circuit appealed in working out one of the most interesting maintenance systems modern industry can show.

It is especially interesting because it made industrial methods as much a part of show business as the show itself, and a world we are used to visualizing as a place of lights and fantasy, erected a laboratory and a factory and put on overalls.

This unique phase of the developing method came with some surprise (so the writer has been told) to Messrs. Balaban and Katz themselves. It may have been the washing powder used to scrub up the B. & K. theatres, or perhaps the brass polish. At any rate, it occurred to a certain man that the product being used really had no business to cost as much as it did. So he had tests made to find out what was in the stuff, and what the ingredients could be bought for unmixed. The answer proved to be incredible, ridiculous. For something that could be produced for a few cents, the company was paying almost a dollar. And a lot of it was used, of course, so the difference in cost was really a large item—and there was also the possibility that a similar situation would be revealed among other supplies used in theatre maintenance.

Further tests proved this to be true—and a laboratory was established to continue the investigation. The ultimate result was the establishment of a factory to make these supplies, and today bottles and cartons and barrels, of every size and description, containing scores and scores of different liquids and mixtures, are shipped to Publix theatres under Publix labels.

Forced to Manufacture

Not one of them, however, is a product that can be bought from a motion picture supply company. Publix doesn't want to be in the manufacturing business. But it does insist upon getting the most effective materials at a reasonable price, even if it has to turn soap, powder and polish manufacturer to do so.

This attitude was professed in the sale a couple of years ago of its electric lamp-dipping process. This had developed from observations in the Balaban & Katz organization that the colored lamps used in marquees, signs and elsewhere had to be continually redipped, at considerable cost in both material, time and manpower. Inquiries were made among companies that did such dipping. They were doing the best they knew how. So the matter was referred to the B. & K. laboratory. And a better way was found. Indeed, a method was developed to dip lamps not only so that the coloring would not wear off rapidly, but that could hardly be scratched off. When interests came along who wanted the process and would quote Publix a reasonable figure on its lamp-dipping requirements, all machinery and rights were sold.

Group Film Buying

Meanwhile, the method was being developed in other divisions of theatre operation—in the show sector itself. With millions invested in theatre buildings, operating equipment and good will, Balaban & Katz turned its attention to means of assuring itself of product to sell that at least made satisfied customers. In other words, assurance was sought that there would continuously be available goods that were worthy of all this glorification. This led to the establishment of a direct contact between the manufacturer of motion pictures and the merchant, and also the creation of an organized, large scale film purchasing system that could exert strong influence upon the manufacturer. This was circuit exhibition's adaptation of group buying methods to its own peculiar requirements.

A direct contact was achieved through participation, along with others, in the formation of a resourceful producing company—First National. Balaban & Katz influence was also strong in Second National, Educational and others. Balaban & Katz buying power was extended through the formation of Balaban & Katz-Midwest, which was organized exclusively for booking purposes. It not only bought pictures for B. & K. theatres, but for many others throughout the Middle West.

It will be noted that occasionally in this account there has been a seemingly indiscriminate reference to both Balaban & Katz and Publix. The reason is that what was Balaban & Katz, is now Publix, and the contribution to theatre circuit operation made by the former is the inheritance of the latter, to be further developed and extended.

Publix came into existence as an outgrowth of both Balaban & Katz and the loose-jointed group of theatres which the Paramount organization, fundamentally then entirely a producing concern, ultimately found on its hands. Perhaps no one really knew how this latter group of theatres had come to number several hundred. But there they were, needing systematic, scientific management. The Balaban & Katz organization was recommended by its method, which along about 1924 and 1925 was reflecting its value in profits being denied many theatres by a current economic recession. B. & K. theatres (which had by then been added to by affiliation with the Lubliner & Trinz group of small neighborhood houses in Chicago) were joined to those of Paramount (then Paramount-Famous-Lasky), and Sam Katz became the head and organizer of the Publix Theatres Corporation.

Publix on Broadway

Sam Katz was at that time approximately 34 years old. Yet his confreres looked up to him for guidance, and he was the one recommended for the job of creating the farthest-flung, most resourceful amalgamation of theatre interests that the industry anywhere then knew. Thirty years previously he had come from Russia in his parents' arms. His father was a barber, and he opened up a shop in Chicago. Sam was in high school when he became interested in motion picture theatre entertainment as a business. Or was he interested devoting his spare hours to some constructive occupation? At any rate, he got a job playing piano in a nickelodeon on crass, dirty Halsted street, operated by Carl Laemmle. Before long he owned a theatre of his own, in association with his father. Relatively not much later, the head and organizer of Publix.

The Sam Katz—and the Balaban—method was immediately applied to the new and vastly larger circuit. The scale of experimentation as well as operation was at once increased. A first step under the enlarged conditions ignored the well established system of physical operation and struck out along lines of sheer showmanship. There was a new advantage in picture exploitation due to the film sales interest of the parent company, besides a demand for country-wide prestige. Sam Katz took advantage of his removal to New York, and, be it fact or fancy, Broadway's influence on the theatre-going habits of the rest of the country was taken for granted, and the Chicago, Uptown and Tivoli style of deluxe motion picture and stage entertainment was installed at the Rivoli. The Rialto, on the other side of Times Square, was added—and then the New York Paramount, housed in a skyscraper home for the entire Paramount Publix organization.

The circuit was extended rapidly. Every section of the country acquired Publix houses. Smaller circuits were taken over by purchase or affiliation, while a program of construction was immediately launched. New departments of theatre construction and operation were established, and a system of divisional supervising was added to the circuit operation method then developed.

Unit Stage Show Plan

The latter has undergone occasional changes to meet specific conditions and current pressure, to a degree exhibiting a certain amount of uncertainty as to just what is the best structure through which to join the individual theatre to the distantly located proprietor. A recent treatment consists in an extension of the authority of the individual theatre's manager and a reduction in the intensity of divisional superintendence.

Another procedure that has been the subject of subsequent experimentation was the creation of a central stage show production department from which emerged in a form calculated to please everybody from Broadway to Portland, Ore., a unit program of acts, complete with performers, costumes, sets, score and directions to the electricians. The difficulties encountered are obvious, inasmuch as Portland is not Broadway. Other factors also brought about fluctuations in the method of bringing stage shows to the public without jeopardizing their success by economy. For example, in Chicago stage presentations had already become "old stuff," and production was resumed there for several of the local houses. Sound reduced these difficulties materially by eliminating stage shows from a number of theatres. Essentially, however, the unit system with a central production department in New York has been continued.

Some figures on attendance and disposition of the community dollar turned over to the New York proprietors of Publix, were drawn up some time ago by the treasurer of the Paramount Publix Corporation. According to these, a net amount of 43.3 cents of every dollar taken in at any Publix theatre remains in that theatre's community.

This survey, according to the treasurer's report, was made from a close study of many representative Publix theatres located in every section of the United States. The amount given is appreciably higher than that for any other branch of group merchandising.

It was further pointed out that in situations involving only the more pretentious theatres, more money is spent locally because of the larger operating personnel and use of supplies bought in the community. The part of the dollar remaining in the community in these situations was placed at 49.96 cents.

In the other direction, in those communities where the theatres studied were small, the community retained from 37.94 to 41.04 cents of every dollar passed in at the box office.

Attendance figures vary widely, of course, but for the year 1929, when prosperity knew both its height and its fall, daily attendance at Publix theatres was given out by the circuit as 2,500,000. The circuit had at that time 2,000,000 seats, and thus is indicated how many times a day the same seat is sold. Further data divulged, reflecting the relationship between accessible population and attendance, included the number of people within the corporate limits of cities and towns having Publix theatres, the amount being given as 70,745,000, which places daily attendance at approximately 3½ per cent of the population immediately accessible to the theatres.

Engineering Group Forms Sound Service Enterprise

To offer exhibitors or any other users of sound equipment, an independent service, National Sound Service Bureau, Inc., 723 Seventh avenue, New York City, has been organized.

This Bureau, organized under the laws of the state of New York, is reported as a non-profit, co-operative bureau. This organization now has a total engineer membership of over 500 men, located throughout the country.

The engineer membership is divided into two classes—the student engineer, who is studying; and the certified engineer. There are over 400 men in this latter classification. A rigid examination is necessary before the men are rated as certified engineer members.

Lester Al Smith, formerly president of the Theatrical Stock Managers Association and a partner in the theatrical producing firm of Roberson-Smith Players, Inc., is president. Eric E. Mackey is general director and Fred A. Jewell, electro-acoustical engineer, is chief consulting engineer.

In addition to its engineer membership, the bureau has two other classes of members—manufacturer of sound recording or sound reproducing equipment and accessories thereto, and users of this equipment. These two classes of membership are not required to pay any initiation fee or any dues.

The bureau has a contract with Photo-Electric Research Laboratory Corporation, of which Jewell is president, to engage their complete personnel of installation men, service men and operators.

Theatre Should Be Hub of Community Interest, He Says

By LEO MEEHAN

"THE community or neighborhood theatre should be the hub around which centers the social, business and cultural activities of its territory. If the theatre will take the lead in bringing this about there need be no fear of the results at the box office. It will do plenty of business."

This is the opinion of R. P. Borst, manager of the Belmont theatre in Los Angeles, one of the best patronized and most popular community theatres in Southern California. "Speed" Borst, as he is known to his legion of friends, backs his statement with a world of experience. He has managed various types of houses, having been associated with Sid Grauman at the great Chinese theatre built some years ago in Hollywood by Grauman and now operated by the Fox West Coast chain. Borst took over the Belmont when it was regarded as very much of a "lemon" by theatre men throughout Southern California. Borst was told he had three months to put the house over. If he did not, the theatre would be permanently closed, and "Speed" would be looking for work.

Today the Belmont plays to capacity audiences as often, if not more often, than any house in Los Angeles. It is so long since the Belmont has had a week "in the red" that West Coast auditors would have to dig out dust covered files to find the date. Through stock market collapses, seasonal and unseasonal weather, holiday slumps and whatnot, Borst stands in the lobby and greets his neighbors—and people from all over town—who flock in to fill the Belmont night after night.

Borst has his own explanations for the results, and his own theories of what may be done to improve theatre business generally over the country.

"When I came here we didn't have any business," says "Speed." Fifty and 60 dollar nights were the rule, rather than the exception. Something had to be done, and done quickly, or "Speed" Borst would be out of a job, and a valuable theatre property would be idle and dark.

"I started out to canvass the neighborhood. I visited every merchant, large and small, for blocks around. I went to the school authorities. I got in touch with officials of the Parent Teachers association. I talked with the people who came to the theatre. I went to every apartment house manager in my district. I conferred with the large owners of business and other income property in the locality.

"From each person with whom I talked I got complaints, suggestions, ideas. I noted them down. When I got through we had a voluminous mass of data about the neighborhood, the sort of people who lived in it, what their past experiences with the Belmont had been, what kind of pictures they thought they wanted. We studied and assembled this data until we believed we had at least part of the answer.

"Then I went to Harold B. Franklin, who was head of West Coast at the time, and told him the story. He listened with interest, and when I finished he suggested that for the ensuing three months we make the admission price 25 cents, any seat, any time.

"During those three months we ran every kind and type of picture. We put on a trailer announcing what we were doing, and asked for expressions of criticism and preference. During the day I went around visiting various men and women in the neighborhood and solicited their comments. When we got through with this period we knew something about the sort of entertainment our people wanted to buy.

"Meanwhile, I proposed the organization of a community Business Men's association, and assisted in forming it. I arranged with apartment house managers, some 80 of them, to spread the word when Borst said he had a good show at the Belmont, and I gave them my word I wouldn't fool them.

"I went to the public school principal nearby, to the president of the P T A, to the head of the Masonic lodge, to the scoutmaster of the Boy Scout troop, to the pastors of churches, to the superior of the Catholic parochial school. I learned from them what they were trying to put over, tendered the assistance of the Fox West Coast organization and wracked our brain to think up ways to help them. As a result there began to be a series of Friday afternoon benefit matinees at the house which engaged the interest and brought the patronage of almost everyone who might be a potential patron of the Belmont.

"They discovered we were in earnest about the matter, that it was no mere gesture when we said we wanted to render service to the community. When we had pictures which we thought were not especially suitable for children I so advised the parents, but made sure at the same time to have plenty of family pictures, as well as Saturday afternoon programs built especially for the youngsters.

"It has been my privilege and pleasure to serve on committees handling many community enterprises in the past two years. I have also been honored with numerous invitations to talk to school children, to Boy Scouts, to P T A meetings and the like. Invariably I stress the willingness and the desire of West Coast theatres to aid in community betterment and development. I try to follow up words and promises by deeds and delivery. And the home offices of West Coast have happily cooperated with me in these community enterprise projects."

The writer and "Speed" Borst were sitting in the manager's office at the Belmont while this interesting story was told. It was frequently interrupted by telephone calls, which the tireless Borst answered in person. Not a few apparently told Borst who it was that was calling. He told Mrs. Jones or Mrs. Brown or Doctor Smith what they wanted to know about coming attractions. Some asked what the bill was that particular evening. Borst told them what it was, but added apologetically: "I'm sorry, but there is no use of your coming over; the house is filled and sold out!" And it was a fact.

It is interesting to note that Borst increased his admission prices, and also that he did it during the Christmas holidays, a season when business is supposed to be off. His superiors permitted him to do this with some misgivings.

"We are giving them the kind of shows they want now, and they won't resent it, or stay away," Borst insisted. He proved he was correct. The house never has been in the red since those first three preliminary months. Borst is a part of his community, he thinks and acts and plays with them, lives among them. He knows their entertainment desires, and does his best to cater to them. Box office receipts, always substantially in the profit, are proof of the pudding.

"There are hundreds and hundreds of people in my district who almost never go down town at night," said Borst. "They tell me they don't. They can almost always find suitable programs here, and if they have any doubts they call up and ask us about it. We tell them straight, trying to cater to the tastes of each individual as fully as possible.

"Our ushers, our ticket sellers, our whole theatre organization, follow my lead in the matter. We don't give them any of the military stuff. We give them a friendly nod of welcome and a smile. I make it a point to shake hands with a lot of them. And when I miss certain 'regulars' for any length of time I telephone them and ask why. I call up apartment house managers and tell them to come over and see a particularly good bill. They go back and spread the news among their tenants, never fear."

"Another thing I am opposed to is double features. In 99 cases out of 100 a double bill is one good picture and one weak one. I believe showing the weak one does more harm than can be overcome by the good one. We try to select good, strong attractions and give one feature together with a proper selection of short subjects. My neighbors seem well satisfied with this policy."

It is Borst's firm belief that traffic congestion, the convenience and comfort of community houses and a desire to get good entertainment at moderate prices has greatly affected the big first run houses in the business sections of the larger cities. He therefore is convinced that circuit directors, producers and distributors can get more accurately from the managers of community houses a genuine insight into the tastes and trends of tastes than can be had from the box office returns of the first run deluxe palaces. This, he adds, if the resident managers of the community houses are alive to their opportunities.

"The manager who thinks today that he can sit on an upholstered chair in his office and wait for business to walk up to his box office doesn't deserve to be dignified with the name of manager," said "Speed" Borst. "He's just a bum clerk for the boss, or less. Business there is to be had, but you've got to go out and get it, and the getting is by offering the sort of entertainment your community wants together with a cooperative interest in which the theatre helps all worthy community enterprises to success, in return for an honest and healthy interest in the theatre upon the part of these interests.

"It has worked at the Belmont. I believe it will work anywhere else."

Watching the Trend of Today

In this period of readjustment, the motion picture theatre is moulding its future. This is an inevitable phase of growth. Many have commented on a general tendency to resist any remoulding . . . then when resistance proves futile, the tendency to let the future shape itself. But the destiny of any human activity is largely in the hands of those whose lives are linked with it. The theatre manager . . . the architect . . . the engineer who is not content merely to wait blindly for whatever happens, will watch now each day's trend and endeavor to appraise its meaning. . . . Better Theatres is dedicated not alone to the purpose of giving direct practicable service, but to offer guideposts to the future, by reflecting the trend of today in theatre creation and operation.

Daughter of the Dragon

(Paramount)

Mystery

Chills and thrills, and the acknowledged splendid work of Warner Oland, Anna May Wong and Sessue Hayakawa featured this, the third of the Fu Manchu stories at a showing in Santa Monica, on the Coast.

Dr. Fu Manchu, long supposed dead, suddenly and unexpectedly returns to London, with the definite purpose of putting to death his enemy, played by Holmes Herbert, whom he blames for the death of his wife and son. Fu enters the home of Herbert and watches him die after poisoning his tobacco.

Hayakawa, Chinese detective, breaks in and shoots Fu, who succeeds, however, in escaping. On his death bed, he forces his daughter, a popular London dancer, played by Miss Wong, to swear she will kill Herbert's son, Bramwell Fletcher. She fails in two attempts, because of her love for Fletcher, to carry out the wish of the dead Dr. Fu. In a final attempt, always forced by Fu's henchmen who had been directed by the dead man to see that his daughter carried out the command, Fletcher is saved by Hayakawa, the henchman is killed and Anna May and Fletcher are united with the spell of the "dragon" broken.

Notable among the comments were approval of the fine suspense developed in the treatment of the story, favorable comment on the direction of Lloyd Corrigan, and high praise for the performances rendered by Miss Wong, Warner Oland in his old role of Dr. Fu Manchu, and Hayakawa. The other principals' work was described as effective and smooth.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Lloyd Corrigan. From the story by Sax Rohmer. Adaptation by Lloyd Corrigan and Monte Katterjohn. Dialogue by Sidney Buchman. Release date, September 5, 1931.

The Immortal Vagabond

(Talking Picture Epics)

Drama

The romance between a poor schoolmaster in a small town in the Austrian Alps and the pretty daughter of the local postmaster, which is broken and then mended in a not unexpected but rather pleasing manner, at least to a New York audience, apparently, forms the theme of this UFA production.

The cast is a German one, with the leading roles taken by Liane Haid, attractive and rendering a sincere performance, comment indicated, as the daughter, and Gustav Frohlich, as the schoolmaster with musical ambitions, whose opera is successful but whose romance nearly fails.

The schoolmaster leaves for Vienna, while the girl, beset by the insistence of the father, who wants her to marry the wealthy cattle dealer, and who burns the schoolmaster's letters from Vienna, finally succumbs and marries her father's choice. On the evening of the wedding day Hans returns, to find her married. His return to Vienna and the subsequent enormous success of the opera he had composed, leaves him despondent, and he disappears, to be noted as a suicide by drowning later.

Five years later, he reads that his town is about to unveil a monument to his memory, and thinking himself unrecognized in the tramp's clothes he wears, he attends the ceremony. But the girl, now a widow, recognizes him, and when he is drawn to her home, she sees him and they are reunited and leave together.

One melody, the theme of the opera, runs through the film story, first as the song which draws the two together, then as the haunting song which seems to mock the young composer after the world has, so to speak, tumbled about his ears. The melody, when played and sung, as well as the opera sequences, seemed to please the New York audience. Ralph Benatsky wrote the music.

The direction of Gustav Ucicky was accorded praise, as was the work of H. A. Schlettow as the cattle dealer and Karl Gerhardt as the postmaster father.

Produced by Ufa. Distributed by Talking Picture Epics. Directed by Gustav Ucicky. Music by Ralph Benatsky. Adaptation and dialogue by Robert Liebmann and Karl Hartl. Running time, 80 minutes.

Ships of Hate

(Monogram)

Drama

Charles Middleton takes the part of the fiery sea captain, whose legs are useless, but who makes things none too easy for his rabble crew, and Lloyd Hughes takes the hero role in this initial Monogram offering, which was accorded a good reception at a New York Loew house.

It is a film story of sea adventure, packed with fast action and has a quota of diamond smuggling thrown in for good measure.

Middleton, as Captain Lash, is on anything but good terms with Lloyd Hughes, and it is a thorough mutual enmity. An accidental meeting at a waterfront cafe adds fuel to the fire, particularly as they are both attracted by the dancer, played by Dorothy Sebastian. By a ruse, Hughes is brought to the ship and after taking a lashing, is impressed as a member of the crew. In a sea crash, Hughes saves the life of the heroine and her husband. The husband is easily disposed of and, when the captain becomes too obnoxious the crew mutinies and leaves him to dangle from the cross trees. The drunken mate goes after the girl, but Hughes puts him out of the way.

Hughes releases the captain, and takes the girl away in the ship's tender to complete the story. Comment was favorable concerning the work of the director and the featured members of the cast.

Produced and distributed by Monogram Pictures. A Trem Carr production. Directed by J. P. McCarthy. Production manager, C. A. Post. Assistant director, Paul Malvern. Settings by Hickson. Cameraman, Archie Stout. Release date, June 20, 1931. Running time, 65 minutes.

The Unholy Garden

(United Artists)

Drama

The popularity of Ronald Colman and the lavish beauty with which Samuel Goldwyn always mounts his productions undoubtedly will help this otherwise pretty silly story about gangsters in the Algerian desert written by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur and directed with his usual flair for pictorialism and characteristic indifference to drama and movement by George Fitzmaurice.

Such artists as Estelle Taylor, Fay Wray, Tully Marshall, Warren Hymer, Mischa Auer, Lawrence Grant, Uhlrich Haupt and Lucille La Verne contribute the best support possible to Colman's sincere efforts to be convincing.

With considerable recutting and reshooting which it is understood Goldwyn will do, "The Unholy Garden" may be much better than in its present form. This picture will be commented upon again later.

Produced by Samuel Goldwyn. Distributed by United Artists. Directed by George Fitzmaurice. Original by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. Cameramen, George Barnes and Gregg Tolang. Release Date, (Tent.) September 5, 1931.

Waterloo Bridge

(Universal)

Drama

The dramatic and intensely emotional story of a girl whom the war tossed into the cold, gray streets of London and the great love which a young soldier on leave suddenly brings into her life is absorbingly told in "Waterloo Bridge," which is now in the process of being polished and tightened up at Universal.

It is an adaptation by Benn W. Levy from Robert E. Sherwood's stage play by the same name, and has been directed by that talented visitor from England who made "Journey's End," James Whale. In no sense is it a war picture, except as there is some air raid action. The whole story takes place while the boy is home on leave; but the soul-searing effects of the war are there to give force and tragedy to a boy and a girl who have been caught up in its terrifying maelstrom.

"Waterloo Bridge" is a distinct triumph for Mae Clarke and Kent Douglas. Intelligently directed by Whale, they reveal the tender, tragic romance with great feeling and poignancy. Miss Clarke's ability during certain moments when she is fighting with herself not to reveal the character of her past to the boy she loves, and on another occasion her actual revelation of it to his mother, is extraordinary. There is a gratifying naturalness to everything which she and Douglas do throughout the picture.

There is sound, growing prosperity right ahead of us. No doubt about that. Great business propositions are about to be launched, reinforced by greater advertising campaigns. These enterprises are going to use millions of printed pieces. This new business will stimulate the entire circle of trade—producer, exhibitor, the public.

A goodly share of this new business is coming to O'Brien, Inc. This is obvious, inasmuch as this company has been manufacturing booklets, inserts and magazines for 40 years, and have acquired knowledge that cannot be possessed by printers of less experience.

The whole secret of successful printing, is to find the brains to do some concentrated, conscientious and continuous thinking about your problems.

We quite firmly believe that you can get more man and brain power applied to your work at O'Brien, Inc., than you can get from any organization of equal or larger size. (85 publications find this to be true.) Of course, QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS are among them.

Others supporting are Ethel Griffies, Bette Davis and Enid Bennett, the latter playing the mother of Douglas. But it is distinctly the direction and the fine performances of Miss Clarke and Douglas which make this an unusually gripping picture.

Night Life in Reno

(Supreme Pictures Corporation)

Society-Drama

Here is a story of John and Ellen Wyatt, a couple happily married, until Ellen discovers a liaison between her husband and June, her friend. Immediately upon her discovery Ellen goes to Reno where a shyster lawyer, takes her in hand. Clarence Wilson as the lawyer supplies the comic relief and his performance was greeted with approval. While in Reno Ellen makes the acquaintance of an attractive divorcee who has been through the "mill" several times, and through her meets Roy Carlton, a dissipated New Yorker likewise come to Reno for a divorce, and who immediately becomes enamored of Ellen. In the meantime John Wyatt has followed his wife in an effort to effect a reconciliation.

Later at a gambling resort John meets Roy Carlton. Roy calls two girls to share the evening's entertainment and one of them is Ellen. While Roy is away from the table John takes advantage of his absence to plead with Ellen to drop the proceedings and return to him. She refuses and deliberately plays up to Roy, being easily persuaded to visit Roy at his apartment. Once there she realizes her mistake and has to use her ingenuity to escape. Carlton's wife, however, has also come to Reno in the hope of making her husband see the error of his ways. Concealing herself at the night club, she had witnessed Ellen's conduct toward her husband and followed them to his apartment. After Ellen left she had entered Carlton's apartment, and mortally wounded him after an argument.

Ellen, having been the last one seen to leave the apartment, is accused of the murder. John comes to her defense by swearing that in a fit of jealousy he had murdered Carlton, but everything ends happily as the wife of Roy confesses and Ellen and John are reconciled.

This is the first of the Weiss Brothers' series of eight feature productions for the 1931-32 season.

These Charming People

(Paramount)

Cyril Maude At His Best

(Reviewed by London Bureau of HERALD)

Particular interest is vested in this production in that it represents the initial effort on the part of Paramount British Productions, the recently formed unit operating at Elstree, England. The result is an unqualified success and one specially gratifying to its sponsors who had not, at the time of its completion, actually entered into their stride.

A happy choice has been made in an adaptation of Michael Arlen's stage play of the same name, a combination of brilliantly humorous dialogue and delightful characterizations.

The story concerns Colonel Crawford, an impecunious member of Mayfair society whose sole possessions depend upon the wealthy ship owner to whom his daughter is married. That Maude is in essence a humbug, ready to sacrifice even his daughter's happiness to keep open his financial source of supply is obvious though the character is such an amazingly amusing one that it completely captivates the imagination. It is therefore with a sense of fellow feeling that we witness his predicament when faced with the dire consequences attending a split between husband and wife. The latter, against her father's pleading, elopes with her husband's secretary and proceeds to Paris whither she is promptly followed by the father and his butler who here makes the astounding revelation that the secretary is his son. A touch of snobbery now robs these charming people of much of their charm though it is the butler to whom credit goes for the final reconciliation and the assured future of the reprobate father.

The production is well served in every department though more particularly in the dialogue which bristles with clever touches and the superb acting of Cyril Maude in the role of Colonel Crawford, a portrayal which augurs well for the film's success. Others who do well among a notable cast are Godfrey Tearle as the husband whose neglect of the wife is the outcome of the old man's agitation, and Nora Swinburne as the wife. A polished piece of acting is that of C. V. France as the butler.

As a whole the film presents an interesting picture of English life among the upper ten and provides some delightful glimpses of the Eng-

Dugan of the Badlands

(Monogram)

Western

Bill Cody and Andy Shuford, as the "Bill and Andy" team to star in the eight pictures of Monogram's new series, make their first appearance in this, the first of the group.

The two, audience reaction indicated at a New York house, where the picture seemed to be well received by the audience, make an active and picturesque pair. They keep things moving in rapid style in the process of a plot which concerns their efforts, successful, of course, to rescue a sheriff from his crooked deputies. The deputies, incidentally are engaged in Mexican border smuggling, which little game the two manage to break up very neatly.

This film can well be rated as an action western, since the pace is kept going at a fast tempo throughout.

Wicked

(Fox)

Drama

The general audience reaction at the Uptown theatre in Hollywood, where this Fox film, starring Elissa Landi and Victor McLaglen, was shown, seemed to indicate that the picture is one embodying a good deal of general interest and is highly dramatic.

It is the tragedy of a wife, played by Elissa Landi, who shoots a policeman, in an effort to protect her husband, whom she had just discovered was a thief and a fugitive from justice, from the law. Theodore Von Eltz, the husband, fatally wounded, confesses before he dies, and his devoted wife is arrested and imprisoned as an accomplice to his crimes.

She is permitted temporary release from prison in order that her child may be born outside the prison walls. Through the efforts of a friend, played by Victor McLaglen, she is granted permanent release from prison, but upon regaining her freedom, discovers that her child has meanwhile been adopted.

Driven to desperation, she kidnaps the child, and carries it to the apartment McLaglen has provided for her. The adopters do not press the charge, but make her realize the necessity of giving up the baby. McLaglen prevails upon her to leave with him for Australia, and at the concluding sequence her child is restored to her as they are about to sail.

Miss Landi received decided praise for her heavily dramatic work, and members of the audience expressed approval of the performances of McLaglen, Von Eltz, Irene Rich as the woman who adopted the child and Una

The Guardsman

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

An audience at the theatre where this film played in Glendale, Cal., seemed to derive a great deal of laughter, and whole-hearted enjoyment from the initial motion picture effort of the two famous stage figures, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne.

The patrons applauded as the film unwound, and later comment made particular mention of the deft and clever direction of Sidney Franklin, and the smart and well turned lines in the dialogue.

It was generally conceded that the well known work of Ferenc Molnar, which was adapted by Ernest Vajda and Claudine West, made a well-nigh perfect vehicle for the screen debut of the two who played the same roles in the original play for many months on the New York legitimate stage.

The story centers about the jealous husband, who, as a means of testing the affections of the wife to whom he is devoted, disguises himself as a guardsman.

Beside the work of the featured players, praise was accorded the performances of Roland Young, Zasu Pitts and Herman Bing.

Crashing Reno

(RKO-Pathe)

Some Laughs

Daphne Pollard and Eddie Gribbon take the leads in this comedy burlesque on the country's divorce center, which carries a few laughs spotted here and there. Slapstick, as usual in Daphne Pollard comedies, is the method of getting them across. Daphne Pollard is on the way to Niagara with a new husband, and Eddie is Reno-bound to persuade his wife she shouldn't divorce him. Complications follow with wives and husbands made to appear unfaithful, but it all comes out in the end.

The Animal World of Make Believe

(Talking Picture Epics)

Interesting

Dr. Raymond Ditmars in another of his biological lectures in the form of an interview, and extremely interesting. Pictured are the unusual color variations with which nature has endowed many species of animal and fish as a protection against their natural enemies. The basic theme of the short is the survival of the fittest among the lower forms of animal life. As is true with most of this type of film, there is high general interest, and some unusual shots of the subjects in the course of their struggle for existence.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Naggers in the Subway

(Vitaphone)

Only Fair

Another of the Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth "Naggers" series, but hardly rating with their better efforts. Mrs. goes shopping and husband Jack carries the parcels. What they go through in the subway is meant to be amusing, but rather misses fire on the whole. The hat throwing sequence is rather pointless but gathers a few laughs. That is virtually all there is to it.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Models and Wives

(Universal)

Funny

Geory Sidney and Charlie Murray in another of their efforts, this time as owners of a lingerie shop. There are more than a few laughs when they attempt to be salesmen. Their wives are at their heels all the time, considering the type of business in which they are engaged, and check them up any and every time. Does not vary a great deal from the general run of Sidney-Murray numbers.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Oh! Oh! Cleopatra

(RKO Pathe)

Amusing

There is some little amusement in this Masquers Club piece, featuring Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, with Dorothy Burgess as Cleopatra and a host of other names incidentally. Wheeler and Woolsey take some pills and are transported back as Anthony and Julius Caesar, respectively. They vie for Cleo's hand by chariot racing through streets of Paris, New York, on the ocean and where have you. They wake up where they swallowed the pills, slapping each other's face in their own peculiar style. At least a novelty and fairly amusing.—Running time, 22 minutes.

A Land That Time Forgot
(Talking Picture Epics)
Holds Interest

The cameraman and crew drop down in the little time-forgotten Italian village of Albarella, where things move slowly and the natives dwell in tiny huts, called trulies, of peculiar shape. The camera has taken note of the daily routine of the villagers, which is the be all and end all of their circumscribed, but happy lives. The accompanying dialogue is intelligent and interesting.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Let's Play
(Universal)
Funny

Another of the Slim Summerville soldier comedy series, and very much like the others, which means, among other things, that it is good for more than a few hearty laughs. Tom Kennedy replaces Eddie Gribbon as the top sergeant who is the thorn in Slim's side perpetually. This time the scene is laid in Arabia and of course, and very much as usual, both are after the same girl. It doesn't particularly matter who finally gets her. A good number.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Spoon
(Vitaphone)
Fine

Here is number seven in the Bobby Jones "How I Play Golf" series, in which he illustrates and carefully demonstrates the use of the spoon, and points out a cardinal mistake in certain shots of using an iron when a spoon should be the club. The story woven about Bobby's demonstration concerns Zelma O'Neil, whose complaints to her friend the judge, in the person of Walter Huston, that hubby is neglecting her for golf, lead them to go to the course. Jones is giving hubby pointers, and Zelma succumbs to the extent of becoming a golf "bug" herself. Rates with the previous numbers in the series.

Good Pie
(Vitaphone)
Slapstick

There is slapstick in this pie affair, but it drew more than a few laughs from an audience at the New York Strand though some comment indicated it as silly. Bill Wayne, in the lead, attempts to put over his father's pies. His simple method is to go about town throwing the pies in the faces of anyone and everyone. It worked because the newspapers give it lots of space.

Fun On the Ice
RKO Pathe
Fair

An Aesop Fable animated cartoon number in which the animals go through every possible contortion on the ice and the snowy hills. Most of them, of course, wind up by going through the ice, and there is no particular originality or cleverness in the cartoon. Still, it should be pleasant enough when the temperature is mean.—Running time, 8 minutes.

First to Fight
(Universal)
Great Comedy

This comes close enough to being the best laugh-provoker of the Slim Summerville series, to rate that term. Slim, the bean-stalk bugler and Eddie Gribbon, the tough top sergeant, leave the army and join the Marines, and there is action and laughs to fill anyone with a bright outlook. Of course they are after the same girl, and neither gets her, a nurse, at the conclusion. The best laugh sequence is the radio affair. Universal is selling this one as a special, and it runs four reels. It cannot possibly miss fire.—Running time, 44 minutes.

Minus the Baby!

The baby, and the implications concerning it, seemed to be the principal thing bothering the Virginia state censor board in regard to Paramount's "Confessions of a Co-Ed." But after the chiefs of the state's board of education had seen the film, as it was after 15 or 20 cuts had been made, and approved it, it was sent back to the censor, which had previously rejected it completely, and they okayed it. Virginia is the only one of the six states with censor boards which has rejected the film and then approved it with cuts. The film, minus the baby, is now being shown in the state.

Babykins
(Vitaphone)
Good Comedy

This one concerns Pee Wee Singer and Bill Halligan. Bill enters Pee Wee in a baby contest and the old baby takes first prize, after which Bill permits a woman to adopt the "baby" for $2,000. Good comedy comes in when Pee Wee's foster mother tries to treat him as a baby should be treated. Bill and Pee Wee take flight in a cab, but the cabby turns out to be a policeman who has been after them.

Big Dog House
(MGM)
Fine

Here is another of the MGM dog comedies, and it rates with any of them in humor, action and the unusual ability of trainer, director and dogs. The New York audience, gave vent to their enjoyment in applause at the conclusion of the number. Tells about the boss who tried to juggle the books and shoots the night watchman. Clerk is arrested and about to be electrocuted, when the doctor rushes in with the boss's dying confession. Worthwhile, any time.

Christian Endeavor Society Scores Picture Production

The film industry was scored for the type of stories generally produced when the International Christian Endeavor Association held its 50th annual convention in San Francisco.

A message from Dr. William Shaw, former general secretary, said in part, "May I serve notice on producers * * * that when we have cleaned up the prohibition situation, or sooner, it will be their turn, unless they stop the flood of salacious slime, lawlessness and violence that flows on the movie film through our theatres today."

Parents' Magazine Finds Only 17% of Films Fit for Child

"The Parents' Magazine" has decided, after an appraisal in which various national societies assisted, that of 188 feature films now being shown in theatres throughout the country, only 17 per cent are fit for children.

It declares 73 per cent unfit for children between 8 and 12, with 19 per cent rated as "perhaps." For children from 12 to 16, 32 per cent are found suitable, 54 per cent unsuitable and 15 per cent in the "perhaps" category.

Land of Strangest Noises Runs Gamut of Sounds in Projection

Previews on Studio's Test Row Carry One From Blood-Curdling Yelps to the Roar of Cheering Thousands

Hollywood is the land of the strangest noises in the world!

The modern motion picture studios of today have perfectly equipped projection rooms, where tests are run, previews are held, and the preceding day's work may be viewed by the actor, actress or director.

Here, within the portals of the projection rooms, sound effects are tried out—orchestrations are heard and theme songs are born!

It might prove interesting to take a trip down projection room row—let's say at the M-G-M studios, which have 12 perfectly equipped projection rooms.

On either side of this long narrow walk are concrete buildings that house these rooms. Each has a numbered door with several operators and mechanicians in attendance.

BANG! BANG! BANG! Duck your heads, boys—it's a gang war! Wrong again; it's a war, all right—but it's being fought in projection room number four, where "The Secret Six" is being shown.

Suddenly there is terrifying shriek—blood-curdling yelps fill the air. Ear-splitting cymbals crash—savage voices tear the air in warwhoops of delight. Two man eating tribes of cannibals are clashing in the projection room in a scene from "Trader Horn."

The excitement of battle has just worn away when we hear the strains of a piano and a beautiful contralto voice singing a plaintive song. It is Adolphe Menjou playing and Irene Dunne singing in a scene from "The Great Lover."

What is that hollow "tap-tap" sound? It sounds like some one hammering on a hollow wall. We trace the sound and find it is the merry thud of Joan Crawford's dancing feet as she taps her way to happiness in "Dance, Fools, Dance."

Now comes a dull, sickening "thud-thud." It grows louder and louder and then dies down—as if in the distance. Suddenly we hear the neigh of many horses and then the rumbling sound again, together with the cheering cries from many thousand throats. "They're off!" It's in the projection room where the daily rushes of Charles Brabin's production of "Horseflesh" is being shown.

We are still thrilled from "listening" to the races when a hysterical shriek gives us a start. A damsel in distress! We rush madly back and forth, hoping to rescue the fair maiden before it is too late! We finally locate the voice—that of Norma Shearer, as she pleads with Lionel Barrymore, who plays the part of her father in the famous courtroom scene in "A Free Soul."

After this last tearful outburst, there is a deadly silence. Then bedlam is let loose. Marie Dressler in "Politics" is making a grand speech—the exhaust from many planes roar from "Sea Eagles"—tomatoes squash in a ghetto street brawl in "Sidewalks of New York"—the cool, clear call of a bugle rings out—the shuffle of many marching feet from "Son of India"—all in one big turmoil of sound.

Then louder still comes the blast of the noon-day whistle and automatically the land of strange noises becomes the land of silence. Wars are forgotten—great loves are deserted—the audible world of drama becomes a silent memory for the next hour. Operators pour out of the open projection room doors and race for the studio lunchroom. That, at least, is normal.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 88

Question No. 88 was: (A) Explain just what things sound reproduction systems do. (B) Generally speaking, how many times is the impulse from the photo-electric cell amplified before it reaches the horn receiver? (C) What is the essential requirement of sound sprocket action and what is essential in its care? (D) Exactly what would be the effect of adhesion of anything to the face of the sound sprocket, no matter how slight its thickness?

The list of answers is a long one; also the correct answers are many. Before setting them forth I want to quote from a letter appended to the answer of Bill Doe, Chicago, Illinois. He says: "I want to compliment you, Brother Richardson, for this 'school' idea. It is not so much that I have actually been loser through lack of accurate knowledge, as that I have not been able to handle the equipment quite so well as I have since the Bluebook School has caused me to really dig in and study things that I thought I knew well enough before. And that, Mr. Richardson, is the real benefit the school does, I think. I am one of the projection staff of a large Loop District theatre. I thought I knew all about it, but when I, more through curiosity than anything else, started digging into the questions you ask I soon discovered there was still very much to learn and I have unquestionably learned a lot in the past year or so that I've been one of your 'students.'

"The 'school' is a very, very fine thing and I hope you keep it up. If I don't always send in answers you may be assured that I have studied and will examine the published answers with keen interest to find out just how nearly right I am or how wrong I may be."

And that, gentlemen, I believe sets forth the situation. Thousands, like brother Doe, have been made to dig in and study, often finding to their surprise, as did Doe, that there really is still much they may learn about sound, though they thought, before they tackled the question that they knew all about it.

I have selected the reply of James Devoy as best for publication, though he had several close competitors. Devoy says: "(A) Sound reproduction systems pick up from a record (if the sound be impressed upon a record) the sound impressions therein contained or thereon impressed, transposing these mechanical impressions into electrical impulses of almost inconceivable weakness, which same are delivered to the amplifying system. If the sound be impressed upon film, then the impression is 'picked up' in the form of variations in light density and sent forward to the photo-electric cell, by means of which it is transformed into electrical impulses of varying strength, which same are sent forward to the amplifying system, after being made very, very much stronger therein, are finally sent forward to the horns or loudspeakers in which the electric impulses are transformed into sound waves and projected forward into the auditorium.

"These are the main items of work a sound reproduction and projection system performs, but of course there are many refinements in the process by means of which the sound is made into as nearly as possible a true replica of the original sound 'hear' by the 'mike', and by means of which extraneous sounds are kept out; also by means of which the amount or 'volume' of sound may be governed.

"(B) I have seen so many and widely varying statements of the number of times that the original impulses picked up from a record or film are magnified that I feel unable to decide which is correct. I have found the Bluebook to be right in most things, but it seems to be a question whether or not any one actually positively knows the correct figure, so I will say that it is apparently in the millions.

"(C) The essential requirement of sound sprockets, or what might at least be termed such, is that they be perfectly round, and that they rotate, with absolutely uniform, unchangeable speed. What is perhaps the one most important item in the care of a sound sprocket is that it be kept perfectly clean. This is so for the reason that should anything adhere to the sprocket face upon which the film travels, it would have the effect, so far as the film is concerned of throwing the sprocket out of round, which would cause the film to move across the sound aperture at variable speed.

"(D) Answered in (C)."

A good answer, gentlemen, or I so hold. Many were not so good. For example, one man, in answering item (C), says: "The essential requirement of the sound sprocket is that it pull the film down so that it will make sound. It is necessary that it be kept well oiled".

Now just what the 'must be kept well oiled' may happen to mean you are just as much entitled to guess as am I. Presumably, of course, the bearing is what is meant.

Visit any large number of theatres and you will find a wide difference in sound excellence. True, this difference is not all chargeable to ability or lack of ability on the part of the projectionist. Some of it is due to faults entirely outside the control of the projectionist, such as for example reverberation in the auditorium, obsolete equipment, poor equipment or equipment which the management will neither have repaired—or supply repair parts for.

But just the same, some of the fault undoubtedly is directly chargeable to lack of knowledge on the part of the projectionist, and that is something this 'school' helps to remedy. More projectionists should not only study the questions, and compare their findings with the published answers, but should send their answers in. There should be at least ten thousand answers each week, whereas the number has exceeded one thousand just one time.

Question No. 87 was: "(A) Is all sound film interchangeable in the sense that all may be reproduced and projected with the same equipment? (B) Explain, in full detail, just why it is especially important that sound reproduction and projection equipment be handled intelligently, adjusted with fine correctness and kept in a perfect state of repair?"

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 87

Answer to question No. 87 by Herman Billings. Brother Billings answers the question from a somewhat different angle, though after all, perhaps, when analyzed, there is not much difference between this and the reply of Messrs. Rau and Evans, except that the latter go rather deeply into detail. Billings says:

"(A) Sound recorded on film by both the variable area and variable density method with the standard width of sound band, that is one-tenth of an inch, can be used on all sound projecting systems now in use in this country and Canada.

"(B) Because of the fact that the projection of motion pictures is for the entertainment of patrons, and that all of the skill of the artists, directors and cameramen is spoiled, hampered, or made perfect by the way it is handled in the projection room, it behooves the projectionist to do his absolute best to put the show on perfectly. It is absolutely essential that all adjustments on the soundhead be right; that the tubes be o. k., and that the horns be tested each day. The batteries must be fully charged, the film must be clean and free from oil and scratches. Projectionists should study and avail themselves of every chance to learn more about the equipment which they are called upon to handle, or will be in the future.

The motor truck used for the Apollo (47th St.) theatre's errands carries advertising space for current programs on its sides. As the house has been on a double feature policy for some time, a permanent sign above the ad space on the truck reads "Double Feature Program." The picture advertising is pasted beneath it as the programs at the Apollo are changed.

The other day the Apollo was playing "Trader Horn." The truck was sent to the Metro exchange on an errand, proudly displaying the "Trader Horn" advertising beneath the truck's permanent "Double Feature" sign. It is only a twenty minute run from the theatre to the exchange, but by the time the Apollo's truck arrived, the exchange had received twenty complaints from irate exhibitors who had spotted the advertising en route, that the Apollo was violating its agreement with the distributor not to double feature "Trader." The Metro gents were pretty excited themselves when they saw the truck parked in front of the exchange with its impudent advertising thrown, as it were, in their faces. They calmed down, however, when they learned that part of the driver's errand was to obtain blank strips to paste over the "Double Feature" sign on the truck, because, the driver explained, no other feature was being shown with "Trader."

Paramount "Gas Eaters" Travelled Over 1,000,000 Miles in Year, Report States

Paramount Coast studios' automobiles travelled more than 1,000,000 miles during the year ended July 1, 1931, says a report from B. P. Schulberg, compiled by the transportation department under Joseph Robbins.

A few more figures; always considering that gasoline cost money: 12 passenger cars averaged 40,000 miles each, 14 large trucks averaged 30,000 miles each and eight light trucks averaged 20,000 miles each.

Trucks come in mainly for moving electrical and camera equipment, properties, etc., to location. While the "Road to Reno" and "Huckleberry Finn" companies were shooting at the Paramount ranch, 40 miles from the studio, for example, trucks made the round trip daily in addition to an hourly bus service. As far as short runs are concerned the wardrobe department spends most of the gas money. Buyers run into town and the department stores every day, and the property department goes into Los Angeles daily for purchases.

Previews, at least one night a week, run up the mileage: film is delivered to the theatre and studio officials are transported. Some previews are held 90 or more miles from the studio.

Among the 106 pieces of apparatus are 17 cars of ancient vintage including an 1898 Holsman and a 1902 Oldsmobile.

M-G-M Players Must Eat and Frances Edwards Feeds Them

Diets of Stars Watched Closely By Manager of Commissary At Coast Studio

They say that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach.

If this is true the heart interest expressed in M-G-M pictures is due to the manner with which Frances Edwards, the young manager of the company's Culver City studio commissary, takes care of feeding the directors and stars and working staff.

Having had seven years experience in learning the eating likes and dislikes of the various personalities she is efficiently capable of giving them three meals a day which combine the necessary vitamins needed to keep them in trim.

There is no feeling of rush or hurry in her domain—although her staff takes care of as many as a thousand persons at one meal. Instead a friendly, personal atmosphere prevails. Flowers adorn the snowy table covers and specialties find their way enticingly on the menus.

Open for suggestions, the commissary appreciates the favorite recipes of the various people—adding the names of the donor to make it especially authentic. In this manner one finds a King Vidor salad or a Gilbert steak—alongside a Crawford salad or a Shearer pastry.

Each star or player has her favorite nook—which is reserved for her—or for those who wish to partake of their meals in the privacy of their dressing rooms there are appetizing trays.

When Greta Garbo first came on the lot, it was discovered she liked certain brands of cheese. Rye-crisp bread, and Romaine salads also proved to be her preference. So—on hand for Miss Garbo's orders there is a supply of her favorite foods—with a variety of real Swedish candies.

Knowing that Joan Crawford shuns bread—the tray of bread is never passed her way. Also Joan's salads come to the table minus dressing—a small detail—but showing the spirit which rules the commissary.

Wallace Beery's ham and eggs are always fried to his liking without a daily explanation as to just how this should be done—for one wish is all that is needed.

For the directors and writers who gather together at a special table on the dining room porch there is a restful lull from the confusion of their daily duties. Appreciating that they are stopped at every turn by those who have aspirations to act or write, they are provided with waitresses who have no inclinations of becoming famous.

In her morning marketing Miss Edwards buys vegetables—knowing that Ramon Novarro will be expecting his luncheon vegetable plate. Crispy lettuce is procured with Joan Crawford in mind. Fresh fruits are purchased to take care of Edwina Booth, Anita Page, Dorothy Jordan and the many others of the non-meat eating class.

With the invasion of the foreign players, came a demand for full-course meals. This, of course, delighted the chef, a German who delights in creating rich dishes with attractive garnishes. His Hollandaise sauce which is his especial pride, found true appreciation with these players helping them to feel at home in Hollywood.

Holidays are always celebrated in an attractive manner—Fourth of July calling for miniature fire-cracker pastries and Easter being taken care of by dishes fashioned in Easter Bunny disguises.

However, the day before Christmas proves to be the gala day at the commissary—for it is on this day that Louis B. Mayer plays host to the entire studio.

During Lent there were no temptations for those who were giving up some item of feed—for this article was kept from their table by the vigilant eyes of waitresses.

Known to old-timers and new-comers alike, Miss Edwards has worked her way up from a $16 a week checker's job—at a time when no breakfasts or dinners were served—to the place she holds today.

Now—from 7 o'clock in the morning—when the crowds come in for their breakfasts before their daily work—on through the luncheon hour and on into the afternoon tea hour and the evening dinner hour, the commissary is open.

The commissary has grown to be the popular gathering place of the entire studio. When the companies are working at night the commissary stays open to take care of the midnight workers—always being guided by its manager who fulfills her duty by keeping everyone well-fed and happy.

Cartoon Makers!

With 39 reels of animated cartoon animals running around the screens of the land in a year, it requires a good many so-called animators. Van Beuren, located on 46th street in New York, and making the amusing figures for RKO Pathe release, is boasting. It says it has the largest animated cartoon department in the world, and that a big place. It requires 131 artist-animators and assistants to produce 26 Aesop Fables and 13 Tom and Jerry cartoons. Five modern animation cameras have been installed and seven cameramen work in two shifts.

TALENT CLUB IDEA GOES OVER BIG

80 Enroll in Frolic Unit Within Three Weeks

Members Get Chance in Regular Stage Show Thursday Nights at Brooklyn Paramount

Brooklyn Paramount Theatre Neighborhood Frolic Club, a long name but long also in members, has rolled up a membership of eighty potential actors in the three weeks of its existence. The idea is to afford members an opportunity to appear on the stage of the Brooklyn Paramount.

The club started with sixteen members, left over from the contestants of an Opportunity Contest held at the theatre. The members get their chance on Thursday nights, "Neighborhood Frolic Nights."

Each Thursday evening two members of the club perform at the regular stage show. Those who do not appear on the stage are helped along by the weekly meetings and auditions which take place each Wednesday evening. They are coached, given suggestions as to how to improve their mannerisms, and their enunciation, and to attain that stage presence which is the bane of an amateur's existence.

The newest development in the weekly procedure of the club is that it has been recognized for its possession of potential talent by Station WLTH, The Voice of Brooklyn. Each Wednesday, from 11 to 11:30 p. m., a half hour program of entertainment emanates from within the portals of the Paramount, the talent composed of that included in the club.

Les Kaufman, announcer of the recent Paramount Spelling Bee Contest, handles the microphone for this event, as master of ceremonies, and is credited with having conceived the idea of the club. Talent constantly is being called from the entire borough, the ultimate goal for club members being perfection and recognition, either on the stage or via the ether waves.

A recent election held by the club brought the presidency to Vincent Calondo, 21, of 7612 Fourteenth Avenue; Miss Florenco Newman, 18, of 1349 East 28th street, is vice president, and Miss Buddy Mannors, 19, of 365 Pulaski street, secretary. All club members are Brooklynites.

M.C. in Buffalo Made Trip From Cleveland in Yacht

Wesley Eddy, m. c. with the Loew's unit "Bouquet of Melodies" in the Fox Great Lakes this week, took 11 hours to make the trip from Cleveland to Buffalo in his new yacht. His wife traveled by automobile.

Boris Morros

Mr. Morros' life reads like a story book and we would have to have much more space than this to tell of his entire history. Let it suffice then to say he was born in St. Petersburg, Russia, and received his musical education from Rimsky-Korsakov. Mr. Morros has been in this country seven and one-half years ,all but one year of it in the employ of Paramount-Publix. He started his career in this country as an arranger and orchestrater when Publix was formed. Then quest conductor in Publix theatres in the South, later being permanently stationed at the largest house in Memphis. During a tour of the southern houses by officials of the company, Mr. Morros was assigned to produce shows for the houses in Atlanta, Memphis and New Orleans. He was so successful at this that in a short time he was doing the work for six theatres, then nine. He was finally brought on to New York where he was given the post of general music director, which post he held until his recent appointment as head of both the music and production departments.

There is no doubt about Mr. Morros' ability and genius. This latest advancement of his is his eleventh promotion in the six and one-half years he has been with the company.

His wide knowledge of the entire business can be accredited to his understanding of audience psychology, his musicianship, aggressiveness, and up-to-date methods.

Mr. Morros' middle name should be "Showmanship." He claims that showmanship is composed of three things, "Common sense, good taste and enthusiasm."

Service Station Is Vital Publix Theatre Branch

The Music Novelties department, familiarly known to all Publix theatre managers as the "service station," has in the past three years and since it has been under the able direction of Josef Zimanich, developed into an important branch of the business. The department supplies the entire circuit with all their needs in the mechanical musical specialty line, including 33⅓ RPM records, specially recorded sound on film, organ solos, slides, sound trailers, date strips, special screen announcements, effect records, etc.

The most important part of the department's activities is the producing and distribution of special holiday music novelties, short screen subjects, specially produced for each national and religious holiday. These subjects are being distributed through the entire circuit, and are played in three to four hundred theatres simultaneously. This service has been appreciated by the field to a great extent, the quality of the subjects being so satisfactory, that a demand has been created for more of them. This department has also produced a number of screen overtures, music shorts, special organ solos and is responsible for many of the radio tie-ups and stunts that have proved so successful in many Publix theatres.

Former Publix Producer to Handle Units in Buffalo

Carleton Winkler, former Publix unit producer, will go to Shea's Buffalo as stage production manager and will have charge of staging the Fanchon & Marco units, which will replace the Publix units August 24 in the Buffalo theatre.

The shows will be augmented there by "Name" talent, it is expected. Winkler also will work with Charles Manning, director of the pit orchestra, in connection with symphonic overtures.

Stage Units' Return Expected At Publix San Antonio House

A stage show of some sort is expected at the Texas, ace Publix house in San Antonio, soon after September 1. Either Fanchon and Marco or Publix presentations will be featured.

The house is reported as having been doing well for the past several months with first-run pictures alone.

STAGE SHOWS

Baltimore Century

Week ending August 1

"Revue Moderne," a Loew-Capitol stage unit devised and staged by Chester Hale under the supervision of Louis K. Sidney, opened with orchestra playing in pit and Douglas Stanbury, tenor, entering at center through parted curtains in 1860 costume explaining the "Story of the Six Ballet Dancers," to music. Curtains parted revealing the six ballet girls in white with blonde wigs in a dance against a flowered back drop. As curtains closed Stanbury on from left continuing the story to music. Curtains part revealing stage door drop with Ivan Triesault as stage doorkeeper. On come six girls dressed as men of 1860. Pantomime with comedy of bribing doorman, finally entering and from wings singing, "Oh, Promise Me."

Stanbury continues story as back drop represents altar of church. Six flower girls come on in pink hoop skirts and bonnets with baskets of flowers. Then Triesault heads procession of six couples on from right. Triesault stands before the altar. Couples in bride and groom costumes kneel before him, as he comically pantomimes the marriage ceremony. Stanbury sings from wings, "Oh, Promise Me."

Then full stage back drop representing six cottages. The couples come on and enter doorways. Drop rises, revealing six bedrooms. Comedy of grooms undressing brides, taking off many petticoats, and brides play bashful. Ending with all falling on beds. Stanbury comes on again as scene returns to back drop of front of cottages. The Civil War is declared. Grooms must go, and they are dressed in soldier uniforms. Brides come out of houses in long night gowns and comedy of clinging to grooms.

Stanbury continues story of soldiers' return Curtains part again, revealing fronts of cottages. Comedy effect of stork flying over the roofs with baby. Grooms on in soldiers' costumes. Brides rush to greet them, each with twins in arms.

Following this, Don Cummings, the Roping Collegian, comes on with his ropes in fancy twirling and some fast stepping. He gained applause throughout and at end. The next scene on full stage is a modernistic treatment of a stately dance with Triesault posing as Rodin's "Thinker" on a multi-colored pyramid in back. Stanbury on singing as dancer covered by black veil gyrates and poses before statue. She falls at statue's feet. Then from each side come eight girls in silver cloth gowns split down back, with low backs and net trimmings. Those on left approach with one arm raised and one lowered at side in stately tread. Those on right approach and then back, repeating as they bow and throw heads back. Finally all mount incline on either side of statue as statue rises and warns them all away.

Followed Rome and Gaut against a back drop of buildings in odd shapes. They do their comic songs, chatter, play and dance with running applause and laughter all the way through. Following that came Stanbury between closed curtains in French army officer's uniform sang a martial song while curtains parted and revealed full stage with six show girls in specialty costumes each attended by two girl pages in black carrying various flags. All march around, then pose at end as back drop rises revealing girl in silver and spangles on pedestal up stage from which pages hold streamers and soldiers in silver cloth uniforms pose at each side.

New York Paramount

Week ending August 6

Rubinoff, conducting the Paramount Orchestra in an overture of "Friml Melodies," precedes the stageshow. The numbers featured were, "March of the Musketeers," "Allah's Holiday," "Rose-Marie," "Indian Love Call" (Rubinoff does violin solo of this number) and closing with "Song of Vagabonds." Audience reaction to this overture was even more enthusiastic than usual.

Eddie Dowling and Ray Dooley, headlines both on the screen, in Dowling's latest picture, "Honeymoon Lane," and on the stage in Boris Petroff's presentation, "Grand Street to Broadway." This entertaining show is built around Dowling's life, and opens to a typical east side scene of a tenement house on one side and a church on the other, in which an east side gang gives battle to girls and boys on their way to confirmation. Just before this episode, Sammy Krevoff as head of gang, does an intricate tap and twirling routine and is followed by little Larry, who sings from a window of the tenement. Larry is supposed to represent Dowling in his youth and sings well in a soprano voice. Ray Dooley at the tail end of the group going to church gets a lot of laughs after her battle with Krevoff. The scene ends when the priest comes out of the church. Eddie Dowling, entering with Harry Shaw, who bears a striking resemblance to Al Smith, gets a great reception and after the preliminaries are over, introduces J. Fred Coots, noted song-writer, who is pianist for him when he sings a typical Irish song. The song starts with Dowling telling a story as Coots softly accompanies him and finishes with the singing of the chorus. He receives a great reception. Setting then changes to a summery garden scene in which Dowling acts as m. c. and acts do their specialties. Male chorus of eight sing "Honeymoon Lane," the theme song of Dowling's picture, as the David Bines Girls perform a well-routined ballet number. The high spot of this dance is their dancing with house lights out and dresses illuminated with phosphorous paint. Sylvia Froos, who has a pleasing voice, sings a few popular numbers and is followed by Gomez and Winona, who receive a very good reception for their graceful ballroom dancing. This dance team is the personification of grace, and apparently the audience would have liked to see more of their work. Dowling again enters, this time with Harry Shaw, who pushes a baby carriage. After talking of old times, etc., the baby, who turns out to be Ray Dooley, interrupts by starting to cry. Miss Dooley then does most of the act she made famous when she starred in the Follies. Her performance was very well received by this audience. Dowling again enters and introduces "Sally, Irene and Mary," who are represented by Sylvia Froos, Dorothy Dare and Helen Dennison. Dorothy Dare—as Irene—nicely sings "Alice Blue Gown," and is followed by Sylvia Froos (Mary), who also sings very well. Her song is "In a Love Nest." Helen Dennison as Sally does some very good toe work and together with Dowling take their bows and applause. The show closes with a duet, sung by Dowling and Sylvia Froos, of Dowling's song, "Honeymoon Lane," as the entire company enter and scene fades into opening scene of the feature picture, "Honeymoon Lane."

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending July 31

Current bill, headed by Harriet Hoctor, is sufficiently diversified to suit the fancy of practically any fan.

The Six Galenos open with a routine of aerial acrobatics which moves at a rapid tempo and without hesitation. The flying somersaults with the aid of a springboard are especially well executed. Si Wills and Joan Davis follow in a line of rapid-fire wisecracks and smart repartee to the accompaniment of grimaces by Wills and bodily contortions by Miss Davis. By way of diversion Miss Wills does an eccentric dance to guitar music furnished by Wills.

Harriet Hoctor, seen here last season with Ed Wynn in "Simple Simon" on the legitimate stage, occupies center position. She is billed as premier ballerina of Florenz Ziegfeld, who did a commendable job in glorifying her. She is particularly attractive. The act is divided into five scenes, three in full stage and the others in one, the latter being utilized by the three male members of the company for accordion playing and soft shoe dancing to fill in the waits while Miss Hoctor makes her changes. The three full stage scenes are replete with exquisite specialty, classical and toe dancing in which Miss Hoctor's dancing partner, Charles Columbus, shares. Every number is the very essence of grace and rhythm. Miss Hoctor's costumes are exquisite and in excellent taste, with special back drops to harmonize. The act took two bows at the opening performance, but was entitled to a bigger hand.

Don Alphonso Zelaya, claiming to be the son of the overthrown Nicaraguan president, Jose Santos Zelaya is on next to closing with a piano specialty. He is a musician of polished technique, and flavors his music with humor. His comparison of music to the human body is especially clever. After three bows and a blackout for the closing act, the audience continued prolonged applause, forcing Zelaya into a brief curtain speech.

Closing spot is occupied by Chas. Ahearn & Co., consisting of eight stooges including Ahearn, who range from dwarfs to six footers. Their travesties are many and varied, the whole being a hodgepodge of hokum. Relief is supplied by an attractive girl in a classical dance, and one of the stooges, who steps out of character momentarily to do a couple of lively hoofing numbers.

San Francisco Paramount

Week ending July 31

A stage show running a full hour and headlining Captain Hugh Barrett Dobbs, skipper of the Shell Ship of Joy, and his crew of Happytime Entertainers, popular West Coast radio artists, holds forth this week at the Paramount theatre. This organization recently came in for nation-wide attention when it made a round trip voyage to Honolulu on the liner Malolo and broadcasted its regular programs at sea, the first time this has ever been done. The engagement at the Paramount was launched the same day the group returned from the history-making ocean trip.

Jess Stafford and his band start the show by presenting "Metropolitan Overture," a number featuring George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," in which blue stage effects have an interesting part. He then introduces Capt. Dobbsie, who appears in full uniform, and the fun is on. He advises that the show will be of an informal nature and that each one is different, just as radio programs must be. He suggests that radio announcers, as a rule, should be heard and not seen and mentions his own embonpoint and scanty hair as among the reasons.

Dan O'Brien, Irish tenor, sings "For You Alone," with Miss Eleanor Barnard at the piano, and gets a great reception from the radio fans. Miss Emily Hardy, formerly with the "Blue Moon" company, offers "Lover Come Back to Me" and repeats this, with added vocalizing by members of Jess Stafford's or-

THERE MUST BE A REASON!

Week of August 14 marks our 4th RETURN ENGAGEMENT in SIX MONTHS, at the ORIENTAL THEATRE, CHICAGO.

Management MILLS DANCE ORCHESTRAS, Inc., Mills Bldg., 46th and B'way., New York City

COLORED BAND WINS OVER PUBLIX CIRCUIT

Duke Ellington and his famous orchestra, popular dance band, has proven during his 18 week tour of Publix de-luxe theatres, that a band famous for its syncopated dance rhythms can also bring patrons to the box-office, not to dance, but to hear their concerts. The Duke has proved this in every one of the 18 houses in which he and his band have appeared.

The orchestra was billed to play the Oriental, Chicago, some time ago for one week and due to popular demand, were held over a second week. From there they played many of the western Publix houses and on their return East some of their bookings were cancelled so that the popular demand of Chicagoans could be satisfied and so that they could again play the Oriental, this time breaking not only all other performers' house records, but also their own previous ones.

In nearly every house in which this band has appeared, the house records have been broken. During a three-day stand in the Publix house in Peoria, Ill., on closing day crowds were reported lined up for a block around the theatre from 10:30 A. M. until closing when over 1,000 people were still awaiting admission. Ellington put on an extra show, free, so that these people could hear his band before they left town. The aggregation has just completed its tour and is now featured at the Lincoln Taverns, Chicago roadhouse, from which it broadcasts over WGN 28 times a week. On August 14th, the band goes into the Oriental again for the fourth time in six months time.

Possible Moving of Organist Seen as Buffalo House Loss

If Loew's current retrenchment affecting organists removes Wild Oscar from the console of the Buffalo Fox-Great Lakes, it is pointed out one of the ace attractions that, under the direction of Charles Raymond, have turned the house from heavily in the red to a money maker, will be eliminated.

Warner May Use F. & M. Units In Acquired Texas Theatre

The entire stage force at the San Antonio Empire has been given notice since Warners entered the city.

It is learned that stage presentations similar to the Fanchon and Marco units will be installed at the theatre.

STAGE SHOWS

ganization. Dixie and Patsy sing "Happy Go Lucky" and offer some fun in true radio fashion.

Max Dolin, so long associated with the California theatre as musical director, plays a Jewish air as a violin solo and by special request renders "Estralita" as an encore.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Moore and Ed Evans, known to radio listeners as Sambo, Ed and Mandy, appear without blackface and sing "At the End of the Road." Sambo plays on a saw, then on a toy balloon, a bottle and a nail puller. William Powers, negro boy, and a real radio find, sings "Can't You Hear Me Calling, Caroline," and obligingly repeats. Helen Lowe sings "What Aloha Means to Me," a song written especially for the trip to Hawaii by Merton Bories, with the entire crew joining in the chorus.

The show is a novelty, presented in rollicking style, and demonstrates how a full-fledged stage act can be arranged on short notice. But a stage show presented in radio style by radio artists would scarcely prove desirable as a steady entertainment diet.

Brooklyn Paramount

Week ending August 6

The show this week is vastly different from the usual one in which Davis and his band are on the stage. This week he leads his versatile novelty band in a high class overture from the pit. It is a modernized version of the opera "Orpheus," and Davis introduced it as "Brooklyn in 1981." Counter melodies, jazz modulations, etc., together with beautiful lighting effects, played a good part in making this overture one that will be talked about in this neighborhood for a long time. Of course, Davis' fourteen piece band augmented the regular pit orchestra and together they sounded like a large symphony orchestra. Their efforts were so well received that they were forced to encore. Frankie Parrish was called on to sing "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," which also got a great hand.

"Habanera," the stage-show this week, features Don Azpiazu and his Havana Casino Orchestra and opens in a novel way to a scrim setting of a huge map of Spain which is graphically unfolded as a procession marches by, until it rests on the map of Cuba and fades to a most realistic setting of the harbor of Havana, with Morro Castle in the background.

in front of which 16 beautifully costumed Bines dancers offer a rhythmic dance routine. Paulita Del Oro accompanied by Guerrero, who plays the guitar, does an original Spanish gypsy heel dance which is well received. Don Azpiazu at the piano, leads his orchestra in some of the Cuban music he has made famous. For one of the numbers, Don uses a young fellow who sings a Cuban slave song and Alicia Parla who does a great rhumba dance. Fowler and Tamara, two well-known exponents of dances, do a most graceful fancy waltz in which they incorporate some of their original Spanish steps. The playing of "The Peanut Vendor" would not be complete unless the peanut man sang it, and Don did not disappoint the audience because he had a young fellow with a pleasing voice who did full justice to the number. The 16 Bines dancers in torreador dress do a cape dance and then form a background for Fowler and Tamara's effective "Torreador" dance.

Al Trahan, international comedy pianist, held up the comedy end with his clever playing and comedy antics with his unnamed girl partner. The audience liked Trahan but he was allotted too much time. A most colorful finale was offered, in which Fowler and Tamara, Ojida and Imbert and the rest of the company participated. This proved to be one of the most entertaining shows this house has presented.

Opening of F. & M. Units Approved in Minneapolis

The majority of Minneapolis reviewers accepted favorably the opening of Fanchon and Marco vaudeville at the 4,000-seat Minnesota. The first show was billed as "Tomorrow's Stars."

Stan Malotte, organist, adds the novelty to the program and Lou Breese is master of ceremonies and orchestra director.

Harcke, Theatre Organist, Is Dead in San Francisco

Henry Harcke, prominent San Francisco musician and theatre organist, and member of the examination board of the musicians' union, dropped dead of heart attack last week.

He was at one time manager of theatrical companies in the East. Recently he became business manager for a local music publisher.

Organist Fills In On Bill When Act Fails to Appear

During the course of the stage presentation at the RKO 86th Street theatre, New York City, last week one of the acts on the bill failed to appear. Due to the type of act preceding and closing the show the balance of the program could not be shifted to fill this spot, therefore the manager called on Arlo Hults, house organist, who had finished his organ presentation just before the stage show started, to fill the spot.

Hults made an impromptu speech before playing and then played five minutes of classical music. The applause at the finish of his concert was as great as that accorded the bill's headliner, and was noted as proving that a good organist is an asset to a theatre's presentation.

Two Former Theatre Organists Feature of Hotel Broadcast

Hilda Stone and Don Vernon Geyer, former theatre organists, are now being featured over the radio at the console of the Plaza hotel grand organ in San Antonio.

ORGAN SOLOS

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) in his organ concert this week, featured a number of popular and new tunes and incidently gave next week's feature picture a great plug, by featuring the song, "Huckleberry Finn," which is the title of the picture. Opening with Walter Donaldson's latest tune, "Without That Girl," Crawford followed with "Huckleberry Finn," "The Lady of My Dreams Taught Me How to Play the Second Fiddle" and "It's the Girl." The third number offered is a great novelty tune and Crawford got a great hand at the finish of it. Each of the numbers was introduced by slides in a clever manner and slides bearing the words (lyrics and choruses) were shown as he played each song. Crawford's solo was well played as usual and proved highly entertaining to this audience.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) offers a stunt that is different and well liked. He makes a record of one of his songs, "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountains," then sings and accompanies the record, harmonizing his natural voice with his recorded one. He promises to make a record of the audience singing at each performance next week at the Mastbaum as a farewell treat before he leaves Philadelphia for a vacation.

DICK BETTS (Stamford Publix Palace) presented a clever idea in his "Social Club" solo which he played last week. Opening with a little intimate talk about a social meeting or party, Betts then played a special lyric version of "Moonlight On the Colorado" each line of which was the title of some popular song. It was an effective opening and Betss had no difficulty in having the audience sing the balance of the program. The songs were: "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams," "Dream a Little Dream," and "Roll On, Mississippi." Dick's cleverly worded chatter and gag slides between numbers was enjoyed by the audience as was the entire solo.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) offered his "Musical Follies" for the audience. As console rose into view, Hornig was playing "Alexander's Ragtime Band," accompanied by orchestra conducted by George Wild. Orchestra played with him throughout organlogue. Colored slides were interspersed with word slides, to introduce each part of specialty. Words were flashed about "Come on and join our show," that Hornig would be the interlocutor and he had invited various well known minstrels like Lew Dockstader, Eddie Leonard and others to join "our show." First flashed was "Darktown Strutters' Ball," with words. After this came picture of Eddie Leonard and words flashed for "Ida." Then Hornig gave a novelty with his hands doing a soft-shoe dance on keys of the organ and the audience was invited to whistle the accompaniment. He then played "I Ain't Got Nobody," with words flashed. Then Ted Lewis' picture was flashed and he went into the strains of "When My Baby Smiles at Me," and words were shown. Then he went into the finale with "Dinah, Is There Anyone Finer," with the entire company and orchestra.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) offers "Your Part of the Program." He asks in opening that the audience co-operate in singing the selections, the words of which are flashed upon the screen. Numbers include "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," "I Surrender, Dear," "Now You're in My Arms," "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." Martin offers encouragement and comment between songs, while Orville Rennie, tenor, assists in livening things from his perch atop the organ.

MERLE CLARK & ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) presented a song-fest this week that brought back memories of childhood to the audience and also gave an advance plug to next weeks feature picture. Clark first sang a specially written "welcome back' version of "Moonlight Saving Time," to Elsie Thompson who returns to this house after an absence of three weeks. Miss Thompson then made her appearance at the twin console as the audience gave her a great reception. Clark then explained about "Huckleberry Finn," next weeks picture and invited the audience to sing some of the old "kid" songs, namely; "Huckleberry Finn," and "Freckles," "At this time Clark talks to Elsie about her childhood and also about a letter she was supposed to have received. Elsie answers by singing, "I Find I Can't Write the Words," They finish the solo with a duet of "Huckleberry Finn," which the audience sing and which gets them a good reception.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) recently offered the following late song hits as his organ solo: "Whistling In the Dark"; "Out of Nowheres"; "Lazy River," the tune that is taking the Alamo City by storm; "Let's Get Friendly"; and then closed his musical rendition with "By My Side." At this particular time (Saturday) the house was filled to capacity and the large audience really showed their appreciation by singing every line of the song slides with the organist. A big hand came at the finish and the entire program was well received by the patrons.

DON BAKER (Staten Island Paramount) presented an organ concert of martial airs called "Step by Step," which proved highly entertaining to this audience. Opening with "Step by Step," Baker followed with the famous marching songs, all played in a martial style, of France, Sweden, Italy, England and America. Toward the end of each number, side lights revealed standard bearers of each nation, standing behind a scrim curtain. For the grand finale, Baker played our famous marching song, "Stars and Stripes Forever," at the finish of which Miss Liberty was flashed on the screen. The use of special lighting effects and short prologues in a concert of this type enhance the program and when it is offered in conjunction with fine organ playing it makes for an excellent program.

Drops Jazz for Classical Music at Shea's Buffalo

Management of Shea's Buffalo theatre has learned that a large section of the Buffalo public long thought, that symphony overtures are preferable to hodgepodges of jazz, with blaring brasses drowning out the strings. Accordingly, Charles Manning, new director of the pit orchestra, is planning to play overtures of that type, and will augment the symphonic ensemble.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

I READ YOUR DEPARTMENT "YOUR Public," in the Herald of June 27.

I am naturally interested in your endorsed list of pictures, which you will issue each month, and I ask that I be placed on your mailing list.

This is a most important help to managers who are anxious to give their patrons good, clean features.

By checking up through your agencies, I have been able to eliminate some pictures that would not have satisfied and added some that are being well received.

Our folks want us to get away from the gangster and sex stuff. As we play only three shows a week, we should be able to get family pictures that will satisfy.

We are sorry that Norma Shearer is given features that disappoint our audiences. Her acting is wonderful, but many of our patrons think the boundaries are overstepped. I am afraid they will injure her as a star of the first magnitude.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, New York.

Box Office Reports

READING THE JULY 11 ISSUE OF Motion Picture Herald, I notice your remarks in reply to Miss E. A. McKibbons' plea for a "Straight From the Shoulder Tips" department.

I, too, miss this department a great deal since you discontinued it. I cannot see how you can hope that the reports from the big city theatres can even partially take the place of this department.

They cannot show the box office value of a picture. These theatres that give the reports are, in many cases, theatres that depend upon some other attraction for at least a part of their grosses.

Then, too, a chain owned house that was producer owned might be tempted to give unusually large box office figures for one of their own pictures and report a low gross on a competitor's pictures.

And the fact that the grosses you report on a certain picture playing in a certain house are sometimes different from another magazine's report of the same showing would make one suspect that the reports cannot always be accurate.

But, most important of all, pictures that do good in one locality do not do good in another. Pictures that New York likes may be considered rotten in some little southern town.

There are numberless reasons why these reports cannot be depended upon. Please give us the old department.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

"Take 'Em or Leave 'Em"

I NOTICE ON PAGE 26 OF A RECENT issue of the Herald you ask for exhibitors' opinions on the picture industry, and am sending the following, hoping, but knowing that it will do no good, as nothing but protests have gone in from small exhibitors since the introduction of sound, with the result that pictures get worse.

Talkies have just about wrecked the movie business, especially in the smaller places, but, as I often have been told, "Pictures are made for the key cities," and it doesn't do the little fellow much good to rebel. He can "take 'em or leave 'em." Talkies are fast going the way of the stage on account of the dirt, gangster, and sex stuff portrayed. New York evidently controls the output, and everyone knows that New York isn't American—it's foreign and completely out of step with the great majority of American people. Producers seem to think the public appreciates the "wisecrack," drunken scenes and all "hot" stuff, but what we need here is pictures that the whole family can come out to and enjoy. We don't cater to the lower element of society—besides, these are the ones that are "broke" nowadays.

I have been told often that if we showed better pictures, our old patrons would come back, but judging from the titles of the new product they are going to be even worse, with the exception of perhaps one company.

So, I am entering a vigorous protest against the present type of pictures, which is driving exhibitors out of business.—P. E. Doe, Electric Theatre, Arcadia, Nebraska.

Industry's Opportunity

RIGHT NOW THE INDUSTRY IS UNDER severe scrutinization by the public because of the wide publicity given to the report of the Research and Educational Department of the Federal Council of Churches, and the producers themselves can do much to offset this attack by leaving all pictures out of their new schedules which would tend to bring more unfavorable criticism upon the industry and to the exhibitors in general.

The motion picture industry today has a wonderful opportunity to render a valuable service to exhibitors and the theatre-going public as a whole, by producing clean, wholesome, refreshing pictures that will help people to forget their troubles for a time at least. Anyone who is acquainted with conditions today knows that nearly everyone has plenty of grief and sorrows of his own, without having it shown on the screen as entertainment and have to pay for it besides. The writer feels that a good many will agree with him in saying that a concentration upon productions of such type of entertainment as "Cimarron," "Life Of The Party," "Laugh and Get Rich," and a few others of various companies' newer product, which I have not as yet had an opportunity to review, will react very beneficially to both the industry and the public, financially mentally, morally and physically. J. C. Jenkins, who has been around "a bit" himself as anyone knows who is religiously reading Motion Picture Herald, says in his "Colyum"—and we believe that he is summing up the whole situation correctly in a nutshell when he says it—that: "If producers would stop trying to corral the market and would produce FEWER and BETTER pictures, this business would right itself." Also we believe that "J. C." voices the opinion of thousands of exhibitors all over the United States and elsewhere, in that statement.—Kenneth W. Thompson, Adams, Wis.

Addressing Rita C. McGoldrick

I APPRECIATE YOUR DEPARTMENT of the Herald. You have a great big job and it's a help to me. People here want clean pictures with an appeal to children, and they want their children to come if we'll only give them decent pictures.

Our business on "Tom Sawyer" and "Daddy Long Legs" far surpass any other pictures, and we play the biggest pictures right along. "Daddy Long Legs" grossed nearly three times as much as "Free Soul," and both were played in August and both on Monday-Tuesday. I think producers are not giving enough consideration to the children, our future patrons.

I enclose a clipping from the Charlotte paper. This seems to speak for 99 per cent of the mothers in this town.—A. F. Sams, Jr., Playhouse Theatre, Statesville, N. C.

Barrymore Play First to Test Revival of Stage

Ethel Barrymore in "A School for Scandal" is the first play to be booked into the Orpheum in San Diego, Cal., in an attempt by Fox West Coast and Fanchon & Marco to revive the so-called legitimate stage there. It will be presented August 10.

If the experimentation proves successful, it is said that Fox West Coast may devote one house in each key city to the stage drama.

"First Aid," Sono Art Film, Nears Completion on Coast

Sono Art's production, "First Aid," written by Michael L. Simmons, is now being completed at the Metropolitan studios in Hollywood.

Grant Withers has the leading role, with Marjorie Beebe, Donald Keith, Wheeler Oakman, Phyllis Barrington in support. Stuart Paton directed.

DEAR HERALD:

AN OPEN LETTER TO MISS LOIS WILSON

Dear Miss Wilson:

There are two pronounced elements in our nature that are constantly warring for supremacy. One is pessimism and the other is optimism. Our experience in viewing pictures for the past year has rather given pessimism the best of the argument and caused us to wonder whither this industry is drifting. Then, all of a sudden, along comes SEED and optimism takes on new courage and new hope and extends thanks and congratulations to you for the remarkable performance you gave in that picture.

Seldom, if ever, have we viewed a character more perfectly portrayed than your portrayal of the mother role in that picture; in fact, you played it so perfectly that it caused us to wonder if possibly you might be acting a part of your own life experience.

The industry is indebted to you and to Universal Film Corporation for giving to the public a picture of merit, and one that will build confidence in the minds of the people in the screen's ability to teach a lesson that is indeed worthwhile, a lesson that has been sadly lacking in the bulk of the product of recent months.

We desire to express to you our personal appreciation of your remarkable performance in this picture and the hope that you will be given additional roles commensurate with your exceptional ability. More pictures like SEED and confidence in the industry will again be restored in the minds of the public. Thanks, Miss Wilson, you are a valuable asset to the industry.

Jaysee the Rainmaker

There, what did we tell you? Everything had begun to dry up until we crossed the Missouri river at Yankton, S. Dak., and crossed the border line of the great commonwealth of Nebraska, when clouds began to gather in the Northwest and the next day it began raining and kept it up all day until better than two inches of water has soaked this state and the corn is making so much noise growing that the chickens can't sleep of nights and golf balls are so wet and slippery that we sliced six of 'em into the Elkhorn river and killed three catfish and one mud turtle, by gosh, and if you want any rain send for us. AMEN.

It Won't Happen Again!

Say, George Schutz, where in —— did you get that picture you were running in our Colyum and trying to palm off on the public as a photographic reproduction of our Adonis features? You could be shot for less than that. That's a picture of old Chief Sitting Bull that was taken just before he went into the battle of "Wounded Knee," and it looked about as much like us as Al Christie's Airdale looks like Crockett Brown's bullfoundland pup. That picture would queer us with every blonde and brunette in the country. We know what was the matter with you; you were jealous. Folks, there's a pal for you.

We didn't suppose that Mrs. Freise of La Crosse, Wis., would go and broadcast that golf game we played with 'em after they had framed up on us by having us up to their home to dinner and stuffing us with all the good things to eat there were in the country. They did it on purpose, too, and when we went out to play we had to drive and putt with one hand and hold our stomach with the other, and it's no wonder she beat us.

That's the way it is with a woman, though; they'll frame up on you and then show you no mercy when they get you down and out. The next time we go back there we are going to play golf on an empty stomach and then it will be a different story.

Have Patience, Folks!

B. W. Merrill of the Lyric theatre at Edgar, Neb., writes the HERALD and says he wants them to keep sending the magazine, but he won't renew his subscription until we come down there and get it.

John Cosner of Cosner's theatre at Sargent, Neb., is kicking like a bay steer because we haven't called on him for a year—maybe it's two years. Lawrence B. Wise of Elden, Iowa, says he is out of the theatre business for the present, but he says he wants us to come and see him just the same. So there you are. Now listen, boys. This is a big country, and there are a good many thousand theatres from Pennsylvania to the Pacific Coast, and April Shower can't do better than 85 miles per hour, and while we deeply appreciate your interest in us, and deplore the fact that we can't call on you oftener, yet there is a limit to all things.

We recently made a trip clear up to Port Arthur, Canada, to call on some of our Canadian friends (for the HERALD knows no international boundaries), and we can assure you that we have been taking in a lot of territory both under the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, and both flags look pretty good to us, but nevertheless we'd like to visit you fellows, and we are going to do so at the very first opportunity, and that's the best we can promise you at this time. It was mighty nice of you to write the HERALD and invite us to visit you and we deeply appreciate your interest in us. Thanks a whole lot.

A girl would be a whole lot safer in a saddle nowadays than she would be in a rumble seat.

Paging Clara Bow

We wonder if KICK IN is to be Clara Bow's last picture. We hope not, for we would much prefer to remember her as a ribbon counter clerk rather than a convict's wife. KICK IN, as you already know, is another of those underworld pictures in which Clara plays a tearful role which is in direct contrast to the role she played in IT, which role made her a worldwide favorite. To see her in KICK IN now is like pouring sour cream in your coffee. Come on back, Clara, and give us some more of your old-time stuff.

A few misguided gentlemen have been heard to remark that we are passing through a financial depression, but that's all applesauce. How could there be a depression when thirty thousand saps will gather in a stuffy stadium, at from five dollars a head and up, to watch a couple of pugs maul each other for thirty minutes? No, there hain't no such animal.

A man will pay 20 dollars for a ringside seat to see a couple of bullnecks black each other's eyes and think he got his money's worth, but if he pays one cent more for gas at Bill Smith's pump than Tom Jones is selling it for, he bellers like a bull calf and tells the public how he has been hijacked. Barnum was too conservative; there are just twice the number he claimed there were. We agree with George Bungle. George, you know, says there are two many pallbearers for this depression, and George is quite a philosopher.

Says Hartman:

C. M. Hartman, of the Hartman Theatres at Carnegie, Okla., writes to the HERALD and says he has watched our reviews of pictures ever since we have been writing for the world's greatest magazine and that we have never missed fire once in all that time. Well, that's putting it pretty strong. We have always had a lurking suspicion that we knew a good picture from a poor one, but we never knew before that any one else held to that opinion. Our reviews of pictures are not of a great deal of value because the most of them have been played by the bulk of the houses before we get to see them out in the smaller towns, but if we were located at the seat of production, our guess is that our reports on pictures would, in many cases, hardly coincide with the reviews of those much more qualified.

Thanks, C. M., for your good opinion of us, and will you kindly remember us to Mrs. Hartman and your darling little daughter. We hope to see you some time this fall or winter.

For the next few days it is just going to be too bad for some of those rainbow trout up in Long Pine creek at Long Pine, Neb.

All right, George, let's go.

101 MILLIONS SPENT UPON STUDIOS IN HOLLYWOOD IN LAST FIVE YEARS

Many Millions More On Expansion Programs

Expenditures Permanently Anchor Production to Los Angeles Area, Says Chamber of Commerce

More than $101,000,000 has been expended in land, buildings and equipment in the Los Angeles County area by motion-picture production companies, and many millions of dollars more are being spent now or will be spent during the next few years for this same purpose in expansion programs already arranged for, says the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

This expenditure, coupled with the natural advantages of the Southland, which originally induced them to locate there, permanently anchors the studios to that section.

Fox Film Corporation is building Movietone City, which, when completed, will represent in land, buildings and equipment an investment of $30,000,000. The largest talking picture studio in the world is located there. An additional $5,000,000 will be expended in buildings and landscaping.

Approximately $6,000,000 has been spent in new building construction at RKO studios the past five years, and adding to this the $3,000,000 invested in equipment brings this studio to a total expenditure of $9,000,000. Approximately $1,000,000 additional is planned for this studio in the coming year also, a film laboratory costing $750,000 and various improvements to other buildings on the lot will be built.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios in the last five years has invested $5,000,000 and new construction contemplated for the near future approximates several more millions in cost. Ground was broken recently for a new $1,000,000 film laboratory.

The new plant of Mack Sennett, Inc., has been erected within the past five years, involving an outlay of about $2,000,000. It was completed in 1928 and consists of 26 buildings.

Pathe Studios, Inc., has expended approximately $1,250,000 in expansion and improvements. Included in this is $95,000 spent for new property, giving this company 66 acres of land in Culver City.

Seven sound stages, administration buildings, carpenter and electrical shops, wardrobe buildings, property shops and casting offices, costing $1,500,000 and containing $1,000,000 worth of equipment have been built in the five-year period by Joseph M. Schenck enterprises.

Tec-Art Studios spent approximately $200,000 in the five-year period on new building construction and $400,000 in equipment.

Since 1927, when Tiffany Productions, Inc., took over its present studio property, $370,000 has been spent on new building construction and $485,000 on equipment.

Charlie Chaplin spent $50,000 for construction work at his studio in the past five years. About $25,000 was spent in studio equipment and in the coming year it also is reported that Chaplin is planning the erection of a five-stage studio at a site not yet announced.

Metropolitan Sound Studios, Inc., Hollywood, spent approximately $1,000,000 on new construction and equipment in the five-year period. This year the company contemplates the erection of a new administration building. This studio is the home of Harold Lloyd productions, Caddo productions, Rogell productions and 12 other producing organizations.

Hal Roach Studios in Culver City added $150,000 in new construction and $350,000 in equipment in the last five years to studio equipment. The majority of the building work was for sound stages.

New building construction at Columbia Studios approximated $2,000,000 in the past five years with an additional $1,500,000 spent for equipment.

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., has invested approximately $17,000,000 in the period.

First National Productions Corporation broke ground for its new studios March 28, 1926, on an alfalfa field in Burbank. In November of 1928 First National was purchased by Warner Brothers and a great program of expansion planned.

Paramount Publix studios are spending large sums for the construction of a four-story administration building, two sound stages, an assembly plant and several sound-projection theatres. In the past five years this company has expended approximately $20,000,000 in its studio expansion program.

Paramount Opening Jubilee With 15 Completed; 15 to Shoot During August

Paramount, beginning the celebration this week of its 20th anniversary, plans the production of 15 new features during the month of August. Already set for release are 15 of the 1931-32 feature schedule. Early New York openings which inaugurate the celebration are "An American Tragedy," "Huckleberry Finn" and "Silence." Others among the completed 15 are "Secrets of a Secretary," "Murder by the Clock," "Caught," "Daughter of the Dragon," "Monkey Business," "My Sin," "24 Hours," "Personal Maid."

Of the 15 scheduled to go into work this month, at Hollywood and New York, George Bancroft's "Rich Man's Folly" is now in work, and "The Cheat," with Tallulah Bankhead and Irving Pichel, and "Sal of Singapore," with Gary Cooper and Claudette Colbert are to be completed at the New York plant in Astoria.

The remaining 12 include "The Touchdown," with Richard Arlen; Ruth Chatterton in "Once a Lady"; "Bachelor," featuring Paul Lukas; William Boyd in "Come On Marines"; Fredric March and Miriam Hopkins in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"; Ernst Lubitsch's "The Man I Killed," with Phillips Holmes; "The Dover Road," with Clive Brook; "Girls About Town," featuring Kay Francis; Sylvia Sidney in "Ladies of the Big House"; "Working Girl," with Peggy Shannon; Marlene Dietrich's next, which Josef von Sternberg will direct and the Percy Crosby story, "Sooky," with Jackie Cooper and Robert Coogan, directed by Norman Taurog.

Zenith Projector Sales Increase

Gross figures of the Pulverman Corporation of Duluth and New York are reported as showing substantial increases in sales, with the Duluth plant working overtime to fill orders.

J. V. Cremonim, vice president in charge of sales, both foreign and domestic, and pioneer in the sound field, notes the growing popularity of the product as the basis of the increased sales. The company manufactures the Royal Sound Reproducing Apparatus and Zenith Projectors.

First United Artist's '31-'32 Film Opens at Rivoli Aug. 25

"The Unholy Three," starring Ronald Colman, will be the first of United Artists new season's product to be released, the picture opening at the Rivoli in New York on August 25. General release will be September 5. The second release will be "Palmy Days," starring Eddie Cantor, according to Al Lichtman.

The company's third offering will be "Street Scene," which will have a national release October 17.

Big 4 Names Edward L. Klein As European Representative

Edward L. Klein has been appointed Big 4 representative in continental Europe, Africa and the Near East, with headquarters in Paris.

He will handle the distribution of six Westerns, six Wally Wales Westerns and two two-reel comedies.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Lend Me Your Ears!"

WEBSTER defines the word "manage" as follows: —To control or direct the movements or workings of by manipulation.—To direct or conduct the affairs of.—To guide or restrain by address.—To carry out by action, effort, or skill of any kind.—To carry on or regulate business or affairs; make prudent or thrifty use of means.

How much of the above do YOU actually do? And in its application to this business are you a showman or a janitor?

Not so long ago Frank Whitbeck asked that question of the managers of the West Coast Circuit. From personal observation we can agree with Frank that many we met were janitors, not managers.

Let's look the situation over clearly. How much of the burden do you actually carry on your own shoulders? The bookings are generally handled by the home office or divisional booker. The assistant watches the house staff and general operation of the theatre during show time. He also looks after the ordering of lobby and sign work, changes on the marquee, and the dozens of other odd jobs around the house.

The chief trouble as near as we can figure out is that most managers don't manage anything. Especially themselves. That's the worst of it. If they only handled themselves in keeping with their responsibilities it would indeed be an achievement.

Taking a last minute look to see if the house is ready to open. Dispatching a messenger to the newspaper office with to-morrow's copy. Asking the assistant how the show ran off yesterday. Reading the communications from the home office. Answering them with information furnished by a member of the staff. Signing the reports that go to the office. Such activity can hardly be classed as managing.

To be a manager you must personally supervise every detail in the operation of your theatre. No single item is left to the decision of others. Schedules should be worked out according to YOUR ideas and not the man in the booth or the assistant manager.

Creating new ideas in every department. Different ads. Improving the cleanliness of the house and the way it is being cleaned. Keeping an eye on the equipment to insure proper care and attention. Working out seat-selling stunts. Making civic contacts. Being active in the affairs of your community. Watching . . . experimenting . . . improving . . . creating . . . suggesting . . . stimulating . . . each and every thing about your theatre and the way it is being run . . . that's managing.

Running a theatre is like owning a little industry of your own. But there must be a head to it. You must be the pivot around which everything revolves. Let it start rolling without your guiding and restraining hand and it will soon get out of control. Then, Lord help that little industry.

Habit is an important factor in the handling of any job. But make sure that yours are good ones. The bad habits are so easy to cultivate that it is no small wonder recent years have witnessed many bow-outs in show business.

Weigh carefully every important move you make before you put your foot in it. Don't enter into any kind of an agreement involving your theatre unless you can put a stop to it the moment it proves unwise. Snap judgment is just another way of saying poor judgment. The smart business man knows that he who plays with fire gets burned.

Sell yourself completely on the idea that YOU are the manager of your theatre. Convince yourself that every detail in the operation of that enterprise is up to you. Don't relegate that authority of judgment to any one else. Be open for suggestions. But make your own decisions.

Nutting Arouses Public Interest With Two Stunts

Two stunts recently put over by Floyd C. Nutting, manager of the State Theatre Minot, N. D., helped a great deal to arouse local interest in "Trader Horn" and "Daddy Long Legs."

The photo of the much-lettered automobile will convey a good idea of how the estimating stunt was run on "Trader." Heralds were circulated about town to acquaint the reader with the fact that guest tickets might be obtained by anyone coming nearest to naming the number of "Traders" painted on the car. The auto was parked in front of the theatre daily one week in advance of showing and during showing it was placed in the show window of the motor company that donated it. The company also gave the services of an attractive young lady driver who also did her share in circulating the entry blank heralds, the latter also supplied by the dealer.

When playing "Daddy Long Legs" he featured another guest ticket gag in all newspaper advertising, making a tie-up with the classified ad department for the insertion of local telephone numbers in 10 different ads. This idea tied in nicely with the picture on account of the heroine receiving her name from a telephone book. This point was brought out in the ads.

Both of the above stunts are excellent examples of what can be done without extra cost to the house. In the former, the motor company was glad to be tied in with the idea for resultant publicity and in the latter case the classified ad manager knew that his page would command attention from many additional readers through the tie-up with the theatre. All of which is passed along for the benefit of his fellow members by Nutting.

Played 'Whoopee' So Made Whoopee, Did Wm. R. Bartholomew

He certainly made whoopee when playing the picture by that name, did W. R. Bartholomew, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Rockport, Ind.—to the extent that the entire town knew something unusual was going on when he pulled his ballyhoo stunt. All you need is the right picture, an old Ford and a lot of noise.

A regular Amos 'n Andy Ford was pressed into service for the occasion, decorated with bright colors and "Whoopee" and playdates painted all over it—a la collegiate style. Two three sheets hung from the sides and a special board was constructed for the back. The occupants consisted of four chaps dressed in assorted costumes and what was perhaps the crowning achievement was an artillery bugle, key of C going all the time, and a husky voiced fire bell that could be heard all over town. Two miles out of the city the whoopee business started and by the time the Ford reached the main districts the whole population was out of doors, windows or what have you to see what was disturbing an otherwise peaceful community.

That was certainly whooping it up, Bartholomew, and we are glad to know that this method helped bring in good business so we'll hand it along to other managers who have one of those Amos n' Andy Fords parked out in the back alley. And while we think of it, Round Table members, let us give the Club welcome to this new member who has recently become owner-manager of the afore-mentioned theatre. He claims to be the youngest owner-manager in our ranks—22 years old this October and in the game since 14, with experience ranging from handy boy and usher to projectionist and acting manager. Prior to acquiring his own theatre he served in various capacities with Publix and the F. & R. circuits. He neglected to send along a photo or we'd let you see what he looks like. Next time maybe.

Bickford Gives A New Slant To Use Of Postcard Mailer

Something new in the line of mailing cards can be credited to Geo. D. Bickford, manager of the Garden Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, the novel twist lying in the fact that the card appears to be a personal message from the theatre cashier to the patron.

Here tiz:

Dear Madam:

Remembering that you wish to be advised when an outstanding picture plays the Garden, I wish to remind you that Gloria Swanson's new picture "Indiscreet" opens at our theatre Wednesday this week.

I have induced our manager not to charge advanced prices as has formerly been the custom on all Swanson pictures. Matinees will remain 25c until 6 P.M. and 40c evenings.

Liberty gives the picture three stars and other reviews posted in our lobby assure you of some real entertainment.

Sincerely,
Fannie Huggins (signed)
Afternoon Cashier at the Garden.

This is a novel little gag to our way of thinking and ought to prove a welcome diversion from the run o' mine post card mailers. Thanks to Bickford for sending it along and we hope he'll think up some more of these.

Ray Brown Used A Popular Magazine To Plug "Trader"

The extensive circulation of a popular weekly fiction magazine was used by Ray C. Brown, manager of the Ohio Theatre, Lima, Ohio, as part of a campaign to exploit "Trader Horn."

It was arranged to have special letters distributed by the carrier boys with each copy of Liberty Magazine, with special cards placed on all newsstands, Banners were also circulated throughout the city by the magazine delivery trucks.

Another "Trader" stunt that captured a lot of local attention was the running of a "whisker contest," using photographs of prominent people with a full growth of whiskers sketched on by an artist. Prizes and guest tickets were awarded those correctly identifying the be-whiskered pictures.

A stand-in with a news and magazine distributor has often been the means of helping a theatre manager secure circulation of a message and so we're passing along Brown's tip-off as a reminder to keep on the right side of this merchant. The whisker contest is another gag that usually gets its crop of answers from the public, whenever it can be tied in with a whiskered character of sufficient importance.

Heat Spurs Howard Waugh's Activities; Makes Own Weather

The hotter the weather the harder he works, does Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., also familiarly known by aliases of "The Old Colonel" and "Voice of the South." But Howard makes his own weather whether or not, so that's that. Just recently he showed his complete disregard for 104 in the shade by knocking off a couple of stunts on "Smart Money," a title by the way, that has corking possibilities for merchandising tie-ups.

There's a couple of hundred Piggly Wiggly stores down his way that came right across when he suggested advertising a number of specials through the use of the title tie-up with his theatre.

You will note by the accompanying reproduction of the herald that a display of the merchandise was made in the theatre lobby and also that the house received a great break on name of theatre, picture and playdates. And all, as we gather, at no cost to the house. He also tied in with a furniture store and a number of others on the same idea, all of them working out most successfully for all concerned. Circular price tags, about 6 inches in diameter, stating that Smart Money would buy this and that article, were attached to the advertised merchandise. The tags also carried name of theatre, picture and playdates.

Extensive circulation of a message was secured through use of the above and certainly this title is a natural when connected with the present "buyers' market." Smart Money is doing the buying these days and the title is a crackerjack for tying in with the offering of especially priced articles of merchandise of wide range. Waugh's suggestion is a good one and we will expect to see this title featured in a great many advertising stunts. Let's hear from you, Howard. Regards to the Mrs.

Cecil Gwinn Has Artist Who Makes Striking Displays

We're publishing a sample of the foyer displays being turned out for Cecil Gwinn, former manager of the Fox D. & R. Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash. Erling Espedal is in charge of the art department and we are indebted to William Evans for sending in the photograph from which the cut on this page was made. He also sent another, but the strong lights inside the display blurred it to an extent that good reproduction could not be accomplished. However, this other one will give you an excellent idea of the effectiveness of the artist's work.

We believe you'll agree that the display made for "Kick In" is both attractive and striking enough to draw the eyes of anyone passing through foyer or lobby. Note how the center photo is brought up by use of vivid lighting and the pleasing tone lent by the filigree work on both sides.

In future issues of this department we will hope to include further evidence of this artist's handicraft so will depend upon Evans to shoot it in. We'll certainly pass on to Charley Branham and Marshall Taylor the Hello from Evans, but the best we can do right now is through the medium of these pages. At the first opportunity the greeting will be made a personal one.

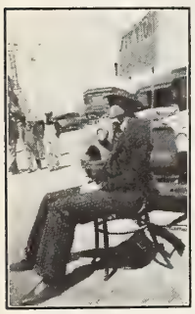
AN EFFECTIVE GANGLAND FRONT!

For a second-run showing of "Little Caesar" at the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, Wash., Manager John Danz constructed a lobby and street display that captured plenty of attention. Making a cut-out of Edw. G. Robinson, as Rico holding a pistol, Danz attached a frame, studded with electric bulbs, to the weapon. A flasher gave the effect of bullets coming from the gun in Rico's hand. This novelty effectively helped along a week of fine business. Also note the generous display given over to frames on Laurel & Hardy shorts.

Letter From John Gray Reveals He's Busy Selling Shows

There's plenty of evidence in a recent enclosure from John Gray, manager of the Oklahoman Theatre, Hobart, Okla., that this Round Tabler has been very much on the job, tie-ups, ballyhoos, heralds, co-ops and numerous other signs of his recent activities all pointing to a successful season.

During Easter time he tied up with a local department store for the staging of a fashion show that went over in great style, the store paying for everything in the way of expense. On "Scandal Sheet," he got out a special herald bearing the same name as the title and an ad on the reverse side paid for the entire run. The newspaper was given a small box on the first page and this concern furnished the first run gratis. Other tie-ups included a Senior Girls' voting contest, with awards made by leading stores, and the issue of a special card to school pupils entitling them to witness the first chapter of a serial for an admission of 10 cents.



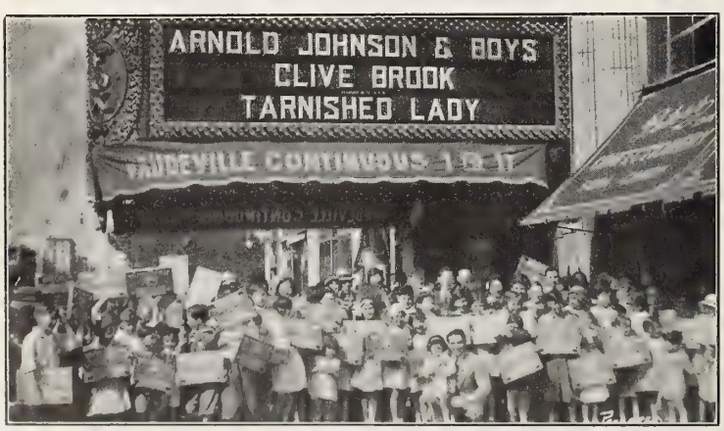
A collection of snap-shots reveals that he used a small dirigible as a street ballyhoo for "Hells' Angels"; an undertaker's hearse bannered with a sign reading, "For The Service Of Those Who Die Laughing at 'Sit Tight';" an old auto chassis with sign reading, "Practically Reduced to a Wreck," for "Reducing"; a walking sign ballyhoo on "Tom Sawyer"; barrells placed on several street corners for "Reducing," with signs reading "Barrells of Laughs Await You," etc., and a caged lion cut-out for a truck ballyhoo on "Spell of the Circus." The accompanying cut will show a figure sitting in a chair on the sidewalk which was successfully used in connection with "Sit Tight." Faintness of detail in a majority of the snaps prohibit reproduction of other samples of his work.

We've skeletonized the above for the reason that John has not furnished a great deal of detail but believe that the outline will give all readers a good impression of what he has been doing to sell shows in Hobart.

Spencer Exploits Bank For Big Tie With Thrift Game

A Thrift-Game tie-up with a local banking institution recently proved a corking means of securing a load of publicity and acted as a builder of good-will for the Fox-Audubon Theatre, New York City, writes Perry Spencer, division publicity manager for the Fox Bronx and Manhattan theatres.

From one of the New York banks that stresses "thrift" he secured 10,000 "thrift games," each game having a claimed retail value. Special coupons, with information how to secure one of the games, were distributed in local schools and carried in the Fox Amusement News, the division newspaper which Spencer edits.



When these coupons were properly filled out instructions directed the holder to present them at the Audubon door on leaving the theatre auditorium and receive one of the prizes. The stunt helped to greatly stimulate Saturday trade, over 700 kiddies stopping to take home a game, and as evidence we are reproducing a photo taken in front of the theatre which shows the kids with the boxes under their arms.

The stunt worked so well at the Audubon that it was tried out in the Fox-Park Plaza and Crotona Theatres, New York City, in the immediate future.

May Suggests Novel Way to Make Use Of Old Organ Console

A novel method of pressing your old organ into service these days is recommended to Club members by Edward C. May, manager of the Riviera Theatre, Rochester, N. Y. Prior to taking an active part in the theatre management this member was a versatile and particularly well known organist, appearing at one time or another in practically every western New York theatre; hence, we believe what he has to say on this subject may be regarded as authoritative.

Shortly after being transferred from the Liberty to the Riviera his old attraction for an organ prompted a desire to put the house instrument in use; not in the ancient manner, with solos or slides, but something different. Here's how he accomplished his aim at the small cost of $22.50.

First, he enlisted the services of a reliable organ repair man, paying for his services with some well planned publicity which brought him additional work. Next, he secured the services of several young students who gave their help in return for the experience gained. This group constructed a platform 4 inches high, placed it flush on the bottom of the console, with four castors attached. Pin blocks were then placed in the orchestra pit and inside the console, the cable was split and 72 feet of the flexible kind added. The instrument was then lifted on the stage, ready to be moved around there or rolled any place in the theatre.

A "phantom organ" was then advertised to the Rochester public, an instrument which could be heard but not seen and as the audience had become accustomed to seeing the organ in its old location they were mystified by the sound coming from several different points in the house. The following week the management presented the organ with the "phantom organist," who was dressed all in black and but vaguely seen by aid of a very dim spot. As soon as the number closed, organist and console had again disappeared. This was continued for several weeks and at present the instrument is being used for song novelties, but in a different position each performance.

Believe it or not, there's still a lot of people who take keen pleasure in organ renditions and there can be no doubt that interest can be increased by the addition of this phantom effect. May is therefore passing it along to those members who, since the advent of sound, have put slip covers over the house console and are at a loss to know what to do with it. The Club will look forward to hearing more about this manager's activities up in Rochester.

Otto Meister Recruits Kiddie Cowboys To Exploit A Western

That most every kid is the owner of a cow boy suit of clothing was the idea used to exploit "So This Is Arizona" by Otto Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisc., and the youngsters proved their interest by making it a gala event. Meister, through newspaper advertising, direct-by-mail and trailer announcements, made known to his public that a photographic contest in connection with the picture would be held at the theatre during the showing.

He got all the kids to come to the theatre wearing their cowboy outfits and tied up with a local photographer who, in his advertising, gave prominent mention to the stunt. The kids were lined up in the lobby after each matinee and evening performance and a political official was appointed judge. As the winner of each performance was chosen the photographer issued an order on his studio to have a large cabinet photo taken free of charge. The kids fell for the stunt in a big way and western atmosphere greatly helped to build up gratifying business for the picture.

In almost every town, even the smaller ones, the average boy owns a cowboy costume and most of them get a great kick out of showing them off. There are dozens of western pictures that the above stunt can be tied in with, just as successfully as Meister did with the above named picture. This is the first contribution we've had from this manager and if the foregoing is a sample of his average work we feel sure that his brother managers will benefit through hearing from him again.

George, Brown And McGinnis Put Over Big Lima Campaign

Three tear sheets sent the Club by Douglas George, in charge of advertising when Warner Bros. acquired the Ohio, Sigma and State theatres in Lima, Ohio, contain ample evidence that he and the three local managers ushered in another Greater Movie Season with a corking campaign. Ray Brown manages the Ohio; Lew Smith is the manager of the Sigma, and H. G. McGinnis is in charge of the State.

This group of showmen promoted five full pages of publicity in two Lima papers and many of the local merchants liberally supported the move with generous displays of tie-up ads. Cuts of Warner officials, photos of the local theatres and their managers and pictures of coast activities were spread through the sections.

Other features of the campaign consisted of 50 three-sheets, announcing Greater Movie Season; all houses decorated in gala attire, special announcement trailers at all theatres; Mayor issued official proclamation, same being used in ads; the Sigma tied with Kresge's store for give-away of star's photos with each purchase of a "Fifty Million" a special sundae; the State had a man parade in full dress for "Man of the World," and the Ohio had an Austin street ballyhoo on a "Connecticut Yankee."

Since waging the above campaign George has been transferred to Alliance, Ohio, where he is managing the Strand Theatre and also taking care of advertising for the Morrison and Ray Brown is now city manager in Lima, in addition to being at the helm of the Ohio. The Club will look forward to hearing a lot more from all of the above-named showmen.

Marpole Obtains A School Endorsement As Plug On "Skippy"

An unusual amount of worthwhile publicity was gained through the whole-hearted endorsement obtained from school superintendents on "Skippy" when this picture was played by Jack D. Marpole, former manager of the Paramount Theatre, Ogden, Utah. Certainly, a boost of this kind has untold value.

The "Supers" had seen the picture at a special preview screening. And they thought so well of the picture that they immediately dispatched letters to the principals and teachers throughout the city and county.

Quoting from a part of the superintendent's letter, "SKIPPY is the type of thing that could not be put across the legitimate footlights. Its wholesome philosophy could not be reflected from the printed page. It could not be told, as a story, by mere words. It is an enchanting and beautiful page of life, as honest as an old-fashioned garden and as exhilarating as the first breeze of Spring. In a way that is refreshingly different; it has everything. And as far from the usual cinema emotional conventions as daylight from dawn."

The above comments and others were incorporated in the letter that was read to every child in the schools thorughout the city and county.

That's a corker, all right, Jack, and there can be no question that this endorsement gave this picture a big boost in your community. More power to you, and here's hoping you get more of them.

Eddie Hitchcock With U. A.

Eddie Hitchcock, formerly director of publicity of the Paramount Theatre, ace Publix house in New York City, recently joined Hal Horne's staff at United Artists Pictures Corporation, where he will be engaged with publicity duties.

Hitchcock's name is a familiar one to Club readers for the reason that he has been a consistent contributor to these columns. In addition to his connection with the Paramount he was publicity man for Horace Heidt's Californians and was also prominent in Philadelphia theatre circles.

CONGRATULATIONS, PUBLIX!

Because this issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD memoralizes the Twentieth Anniversary of the Paramount Publix organization, the Managers' Round Table department takes this opportunity to extend congratulations to this company on the occasion of its birthday; and to convey an appreciation of services rendered by a highly efficient corps of theatre managers. Many valuable contributions to showmanship in these pages have originated within the ranks of this group of men and to them we give full appreciation for their share in the success of this department.

Size Of Display Is What Hits The Finn, Says Paavo Talvela

Some extremely novel stunt or an ad of huge dimensions is needed to impress the Finnish movie patron, writes Paavo Talvela, of the Suomi-Filmi, Helsinki, Finland, and from a glance at the several snap-shots he sends the Club can easily see that this idea is being forcibly carried out.

Look over the poster on "Atlantic" in the layout which we are reproducing on this page. Owing to the small size of the cut it is difficult to convey to members the exact dimensions of the poster but believe us when we tell you that it completely covered the entire side of a three-story building. What might be taken to correspond with our 24 sheet sign boards will be seen in the circular arrangement of a board placed in one of the city squares. It will be noted that the ads can be seen from all angles. There is one of these at either end of photo. Also take note of the posters on Von Stroheim, Betty Compson and Fanny Brice. In other portions of the layout a good example of the large-sized lettering appears along with a Pickford-Fairbanks ad. The "Hollywood Revue" sign is displayed from the top of the Kino-Palats, the theatre.

The Club is appreciative of the fact that you and your associates of Suomi-Filmi liked the International Number published in February in that it inspired you to send us more evidence that you are on your toes over in Finland, and hopes to hear from you again in the future.

While Mr. Talvela is not the manager of any one theatre, having charge of a number of houses in his zone, he recently became a full-fledged member of this Club.

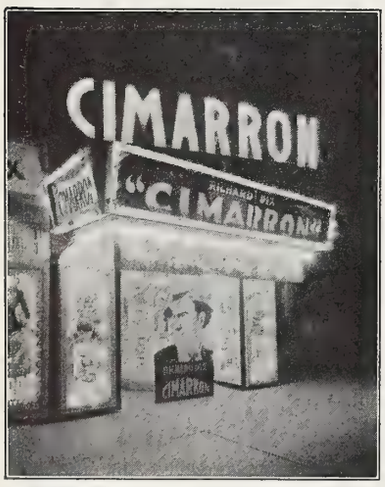
McCarty Gives His Ideas On What Is Best Advertising

In line with recent discussions in this department regarding the most valuable forms of theatre advertising, Mack McCarty, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Logansport, Indiana, does not believe that any two theatres can advertise in the same way owing to differences in population, type of patronage, and type of theatre. But he does believe in having an attractive front display on all occasions.

Take for example his own situation, which is running a theatre in a town of about 20,000. When he arrived in Logansport this house was closed, owing, he says, to the fact that no advertising effort of any strength had ever been put forth. Nothing beyond a front display of some 11 x 14 photos and one sheets had ever been used, which is the reason given for the house being closed.



A considerable portion of patronage for this theatre is drawn from the surrounding country and it's McCarty's system to rig up a front that more or less borders on the extreme, his experience teaching him that this type is particularly attractive to country people shopping for entertainment. He believes that they read every poster that is displayed and form their opinion of the value of the offering by the type of front display.

We are publishing a photo of the Paramount's front on "Cimarron" which conveys a good idea of the way he dresses up his house. Another point he stresses is that he has made it his business to personally know at least two-thirds of his patrons, their means of livelihood, etc., in order that these matters may be discussed when he meets them at the theatre. In other words, it makes them feel as though the theatre manager is taking an interest in their affairs and it is therefore productive of more consistent patronage. Certainly, there's a great advantage in knowing folk.

We quite agree with McCarty on the subject of attractive theatre fronts for a drab looking front most certainly makes the same kind of an impression conveyed by a shabbily dressed person. He's passing the idea along as a reminder to managers who are up against similar conditions to extract just as much as possible from the advertising value of their main show window.

LAWRENCE NOW DIVISION MANAGER

Schine Enterprises, Inc., have appointed Sid Lawrence District Manager for the State of Ohio, which means that he will cover the entire state. He will make his headquarters in Piqua, due to the fact that this city is centrally located.

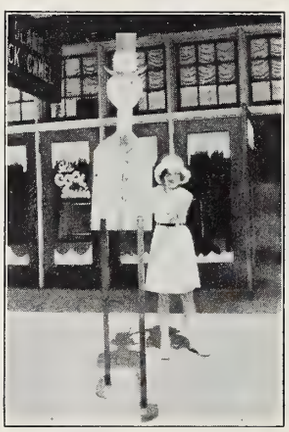
Lawrence has been with Schine Theatres for some little time, being formerly at the Palace in Lockport, N. Y., and this appointment is a promotion in every sense of the word. The Schines are branching out in Ohio and it assumed that the new D. M. will be busily engaged—but not too busy to remember that he is still a member of this Club.

Joe Hewitt Used Good Gag To Sell "Daddy Long Legs"

A crackerjack stunt for use with "Daddy Long Legs" was recently put in effect by Joe Hewitt, manager of the Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

About a year ago toys such as the replica seen in the accompanying photo were much in evidence in all parts of the country. At that time Joe's show sense asserted itself and he stowed the idea away for a time when it would prove a natural for some picture. And then "Daddy Long Legs" comes along and you can decide for yourself whether or not it's a corking gag to pull in connection with this picture.

We're not going to stretch our imagination too much in attempting to describe the mechanical details of Joe's long legged ballyhoo, leaving that part for him to explain in a future communication. It would appear that "Daddy" is made out of compo board and wood, having some sort of a hinged connection to the legs which permits the taking of long steps. It is apparently pushed about by a youngster (if we're wrong just correct us, Joe). Anyway, we'll agree that it ties up finely with this picture and when we disclose that it cost but $2.50 and the time taken by the house artist to do a small amount of lettering, we believe it practical for anyone to try out. He also had a couple of pajama clad beauties, not shown in this photo, and the combination of the two made a decided hit.



Hewitt's memory was certainly working when it occurred to him to put the above gag into effect and he's to be congratulated for utilizing such an inexpensive and effective means of advertising the picture in question. We feel sure that he will be glad to give additional information as to construction, etc.

Weekly Tab An Aid To Box Offices In McCarthy Division

The extensive circulation of a weekly four-page tabloid paper in communities of West Frankfort and several other towns in Southern Illinois where Fox Division Manager L. J. McCarthy holds forth, has been productive of much public interest and is thought largely responsible for a great deal of steady patronage in all theatres under his supervision. The publication of the tab was put in effect by McCarthy himself and Lon Cox, manager of the Fox-Strand, West Frankfort, does the actual editing of the sheet.

The tab contains a generous helping of Hollywood news and production notes and the pages are illustrated with mats of popular players and ad layouts of coming attractions. A story on the front page goes into detail concerning a Fox-Personality Girl Contest which is to get under way in the near future. The back page is devoted to advertising the several Fox houses in this zone. Oh, yes, the color of the tab is pink.

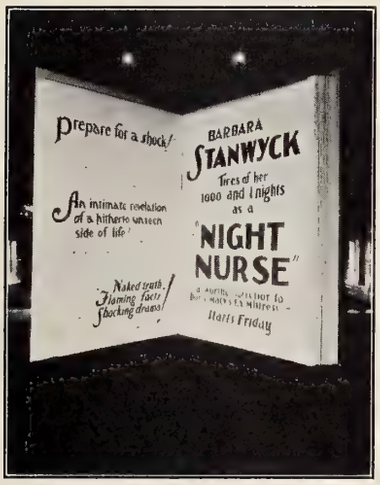
Cox is also having considerable success with the issuing of a Matinee Card, given out to lady patrons until ten have been accumulated. The holder is then entitled to a guest ticket for any matinee performance.

The tab paper stunt, in addition to proving a business booster for the theatres mentioned above, has apparently met with success in many other sections of the country for we have had occasion to examine quite a number of them from different cities. In practically every case comment as to their efficiency as an interest stimulator has been favorable. In case you want to get further information, as to cost, etc., make a call on your local newspaperman or printer and he will be able to tell you all you want to know. In the above case the papers were distributed by mail. For special exploitation they can also be handed out by newsies.

Two Dandy Stunts Put "Night Nurse" Over For C. Carroll

Public interest responded in a big way to two stunts recently put over on "Night Nurse" by Charles P. Carroll, manager of the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., and as a result of his ingenuity the Stanley chalked up one of the best weeks in the history of the house. Both ideas were tied up with the book.

The first of these was a cleverly gotten up little pamphlet entitled "Confessions of a Night Nurse," as written by the heroine of the Macy novel. The "confessions" ran to about 1,200 words, was neatly printed on glazed paper and had an attractive cover. On the back cover was a mathematical stunt by which one could, by adding up certain columns of figures, ascertain his or her normal blood pressure. Distribution of these booklets ran into the thousands.



Prepare for a shock!
BARBARA STANWYCK
Tires of her 1000 and 1 nights as a
"NIGHT NURSE"
An intimate revelation of a hitherto unseen side of life!
Naked truth. Flaming facts. Shocking drama!
Starts Friday

The second stunt was another book which was fashioned into a very striking lobby display that took up considerable space. An enormous book, practical in every way, was manufactured to contain printed matter and enlarged stills from the picture. A reproduction of the title page is shown by the accompanying cut. Crowds of people, intrigued by the opening page reading "Prepare for a Shock," stopped at the display to read the pages and examine the pictures of the several scenes. There was considerable pictorial matter in the book and this materially added to its value.

We have a copy of the booklet before us and there's no question but that it is gotten out in a way to excite the curiosity of the reader. And we'll venture an opinion that every page was read by the thousands reached through an extensive distribution. The lobby display certainly was a corker and one that can be easily adapted to other pictures of this type. Some New York newspaper columnist recently opined that "nurse themes" were going to be all the rage this coming season so these two stunts of Carroll's will be good ones to remember. Should anyone want additional information as to how the books were made, copy, etc., we feel sure that Charley will be glad to supply it.

In a past issue we referred to a stirring campaign waged by the Stanley in connection with the running of the Bobby Jones Go.f Shorts. There was a tremendous response to the inauguration of a Bobby Jones Tournament and now we have two front pages of the second section (Sports) of a leading paper before us showing how the publishers cooperated. Some break, we'll say! Across the top of one is a heavy streamer head reading "Bobby Jones Tournament Entry List Closes Tomorrow." The other page contains a fine photographic layout of the winner and other contestants and a two-column lead story of the event. There have been some fine campaigns made this season on these shorts and it is to be hoped that everyone who played them took full advantage of the vast exploitation opportunities offered. Those who did have found that it was a sure-fire method of obtaining some very profitable tie-ups.

We are also publishing a recent sample of the kind of lobby displays being turned out at the Stanley. The figure was made by the art department of the theatre, the money bags were promoted from a local "armored service" and the sole cost including sand for the bags, was $2.80. Good looking display for that amount of money, don't you think?

Bloomberg's Float Wins Approval; It Is A Corking Idea

For a stunt to plug "Women of All Nations," P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Salem, Mass., put over an idea which can probably be classed as original as far as this picture is concerned.

The accompanying snapshot reproduction tells the whole story, that of a float which paraded through the town bearing a bevy of attractive looking girls dressed in different national costumes. A couple of ushers dressed as doughboy and marine also lent color to the setting.

An important detail, in addition to the fact that the float was the means of making a most impressive ballyhoo for the above picture, was that it was practically a costless piece of advertising. The truck was promoted from a local dealer, the girls were promoted from a dancing school and the bunting was loaned by the local Elks Club. Two boys gave their services as cornetists and stayed with the float all day. Naturally, the ushers gave their services.

Bloomberg was commended for this piece of work by one of the best known publicity men in the East, he having said that to his knowledge it was the only stunt of its kind he'd heard of in connection with this picture. And so we're passing it along for the benefit of his brother Club members.

Combs Boosted His Trade By Calendar And Pecan Nut Gag

J. C. Combs, manager of the Palace Theatre, Crane, Texas, one of the "Okay Theatres," has a Calendar gag which has proven a corking business booster for his house. There is a give-away connected with it and the cards are pased out at the box office. In addition to prizes there is also an opportunity offered to patrons to become the owner of a week's pass to the theatre. Each week there are designated merchants, whose ads appear on the card, tied-up with the awards. We are reproducing one of the cards on this page and know that J. C. will gladly send additional information to anyone who will but drop him a line. The cost of the whole stunt is negligible.

When he played "Cracked Nuts" a little gag was used that certainly whetted the curiosity of his public. A regular sized envelope was distributed containing a herald and a cracked pecan nut. The envelope was sealed and the hard contents prompted everyone to open it to see what was inside. Naturally the herald was read. And if a herald is read, that's all that can be expected.

ROBERT BENDER'S EXPLOITATION MANUAL

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second and last installment of Robert Bender's Exploitation Manual, the first part having appeared in the August 1 issue of this publication. Mr. Bender is Northwest Division Manager for Fox-West Coast Theatres.)

— Part Two —

MUT DOG SHOW

Stage one on your stage. What if they do some barking and a couple of them get in a fight? It would be good entertainment. Give a prize for the best dog and a prize for the poorest, etc. Have the boys lead the dogs around the stage. This ought to be fun.

ABOUT MUSIC THEMES

Have the organist play the theme song with the advance trailer. In every case be sure to utilize one of the primary advantages of your theme song hook-ups by getting a local dealer to furnish his own singer to plug the song at the theatre during the week in advance of play dates.

Sing the song in the lobby with your radio hook-up on the ballyhoo truck and sing it inside the theatre with the slides.

Attach a herald to every copy of the song the dealer sells. Give him a credit line for the song in the imprint space of the heralds.

Put a three-sheet cut-out in front of his store with a sign plugging the theme song and the picture.

Get the dealer to buy along the bottom of your newspaper advertising, or, better still, use his ad as the first in a cooperative page.

Tie up the dealer on some kind of song or music contest. Consult the press sheets for more ideas.

Theme song hook-ups represent one of the biggest cooperative deals ever effected between theatres and music dealers.

Just so sure as sound is fast stabilizing itself as an integral part of the industry, just so sure will song hook-ups become a regular part of your routine. Get set now! Think about sound and ways to get the most there is to get out of the newborn common interest between the music world and the movies.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES

Get into the libraries whenever your picture offers an opportunity. Have neatly lettered cards on the desks and bookmarks placed in the books that are being taken out.

WEDDINGS

Get after recently married couples on pictures where such a stunt applies. If you are inviting some of them free as a wedding gift get some publicity on the matter.

SCOOTER CONTEST

This should go well with the kids. It could include kids with model automobiles as well. Have it on the street with police protection.

BOB SLED CONTEST

This should go well for the winter. Give prizes for the kids with the fastest sled. Stage it on a hill with proper precaution against accidents. Southern California theatre managers may safely ignore this suggestion with exception of Lake Arrowhead district.

PIANO CONTEST

The following details of a piano contest conducted at the Pontiac Theatre, Saranac Lake, N. Y., have been supplied by Mr. L. H. Raymond.

The Dixie Piano, made by Davenport-Treacy, was given gratis by the Adirondack Piano Company. The piano, a small but high grade instrument, sells for $250 retail.

Votes were given away at the theatre and had to be exchanged at the dealer's store for a certificate. This gave the dealer a chance to sell his goods. Girls, grown-ups as well as kids, got into the contest, which practically was a popularity affair.

The piano was displayed in a window, as the lobby of the theatre was too small.

Votes were given out as follows:

> VOTES
> THIS TICKET ENTITLES YOU TO 100 VOTES IN THE PONTIAC THEATRE-ADIRONDACK PIANO COMPANY POPULARITY CONTEST. Votes do not count until exchanged at the Adirondack Piano Co., 6 Academy Street for a certificate. SAVE FOR YOUR GIRL FRIEND.

The certificate was in two parts, one of which was used by the theatre for counting.

Plenty of advertising was given the stunt, which lasted some time.

Be sure to get several girls interested at the start so the campaign can be conducted with a smash right from the drop of the hat. Announce the weekly results on your screen and in programs. Daily announcements would keep the interest going.

CHAMP TEAMS ON STAGE

If you have a championship team in any sports, get them to be officially welcomed in your theatre. Go after the mayor, etc., have presenting of cups and medals on the stage and the members of the team as the guests of the theatre. The crowd that will be interested in this will swell your receipts, in addition to adding to your good will.

SERIALS

Watch your press books for serial stories. Plant these serials with your newspaper. If newspaper is running a serial put your tie-in ad at the end of the serial during the last week of its run as an advance "Teaser."

FREE RADIO BRINGS ADDITIONAL BUSINESS

Three hundred dollars above average receipts were netted by Manager Fred Brown of the Fox Theatre, Green Bay, by giving a radio free to the holder of a lucky number The radio was displayed in the lobby and coupons given to each patron for two weeks in advance. The radio was donated by a local dealer

BOOK STORES

Watch your press books in advance of play dates to see if the story of the picture is out in book form. If it is, go after your book dealers to get copies and plant them in their windows with mention of theatre, etc.

CROSS WORD PUZZLES

Many press books contain good cross-word puzzles on individual pictures. Sell the idea to your newspaper to print these. Prizes of passes can be offered for correct solutions.

Y. M. C. A. STUNTS ON STAGE

If the institution has good athletic teams get them on stage for demonstration of Y. M. C. A. work. Good Pyramid Team. Padded Horse, Parallel Bar Teams, etc.

Perhaps the Y. M. C. A. has some good juvenile boxers who would raise a laugh. This should not cost the theatre any money and should be a good ad for the Y. M. C. A. and goodwill builder.

HARMONICA CONTEST

In some towns Rotary Clubs are fostering harmonica bands among boys and girls. If you are in such a community make use of this band. However, harmonica contests are good whether such a band is organized or not. Grown-ups still like to play the "ole mouth organ."

"OUR GANG" CONTEST

Prizes for the best make-up resembling the different members of "Our Gang." This idea can be developed into a parade and stage stunt in theatre.

Elimination contests can be held on several nights. Ballots or volume of applause can decide the winners.

Properly handled this should get the theatre plenty of money at very little cost. Possibly the newspaper would like to tie up with you, but it is not essential.

BABY FASHION SHOW

If you can use children on the stage, try a baby fashion show as a direct box office attraction. No children over four years of age—younger the better. Inject comedy.

"SHORTS"—CLUB TIE-UPS

Watch your short subjects continually. Possibly a newsreel subject will have a particular appeal to a section of your community.

For instance, golfers, hunters, billiard players, baseball, football enthusiasts, could give a play if you get to their organizations and let them know what you have.

Use the mails as well as personal word to the secretaries.

Such special groups may bring you from $5 to $100 on your show, as well as interesting people who are not regular attendants.

"MY MOST EXCITING MOMENT"

This idea can be worked into an essay contest on war pictures with the cooperation of your newspaper, for war veterans or the general public.

WALL PAPER HERALDS

These are always attention attracters. Get some old samples from your wall paper dealer and print your message on them.

R. F. D. MAILING LISTS

Find out from your postmaster how many boxes there are on the different rural routes running out of your city. Print your message on postal card and tie up in packages the proper number for each route. The delivery man will distribute them.

TELEGRAMS

Telegram blanks are always good for heralds when not used too often. Distribute them by boy dressed in telegraph company uniform and obtain signatures. Use signatures for mailing list.

ARMY "A BOARDS"

Individual pictures offer opportunities to obtain the use of these boards for advertising purposes.

DRUGGIST

See druggist about national cosmetic samples to give away or for use as prizes at matinees.

Artz Makes Strong Appeal to Kiddies With Special Show

A strong appeal to the kiddies was made by W. Walter Artz, manager of the Ambler Theatre, Ambler, Pa., in the way of what was billed as a "Big Four Hour Show," starting at 1:30 P. M. and running through the afternoon session.

An 8x11 herald announced to the kids that the big show could be seen for the sum of ten cents—one dime—and the numbers, which ran from 1 to 6, included a feature comedy and all kinds of short subjects calculated to make a hit with the youngsters.

On the bill was the comedy feature, "The Hot Heiress;" an added feature, "Under Texas Skies;" the second installment of "Heroes of the Flames;" a comedy, "Twisted Tales;" a Vitaphone skit, "On the Job," and last but not least, a request was made to the kids to bring their doggies for participation in a dog show to be staged in the theatre. Prizes were offered for the biggest, smallest and cleverest doggies. The reverse side of the herald advertised the feature attraction for the evening of the same day. This is certainly going after kiddie business with a wallop and there can be no doubt that Walter not only did capacity business but paved the way for a steady increase in patronage from the youngsters—a move being made by many these days who have found out that kids do manage somehow or other to extract the necessary funds that will admit them to a theatre. And the above method of making up a special bill, with direct appeal to the younger element, appears an excellent means of stimulating attendance.

BENDER'S EXPLOITATION MANUAL

Make most of Thanksgiving, decorate your lobby. If there is a football game be sure to tie up with it; have sandwich man on the field.

Be sure to have something arranged for this annual event.

Ask readers to write their replies concerning the stores advertising on the page. Send replies to stores and get tickets for the best answers.

"Show People I Remember and Why." This is the title for a contest on "Show People." Write answers to newspaper and tickets for prizes.

Tie up with automobile dealer for the use of one of his models for an endurance contest, applicable to some picture. Start the contest a day in advance. Have nurses in car and proper banners. Get newspaper tied in with proposition. Automobile agent should help on this. Have car drive past theatre many times and have contest end in front of theatre. Banner could say your picture starts so many hours after the start of the contest.

For girls with the best boyish bob and dressed as boys. Could use them on the stage and let applause decide the winners. Give prizes.

If conditions permit put a banner across the street from your theatre and have light from your theatre on it for night displays.

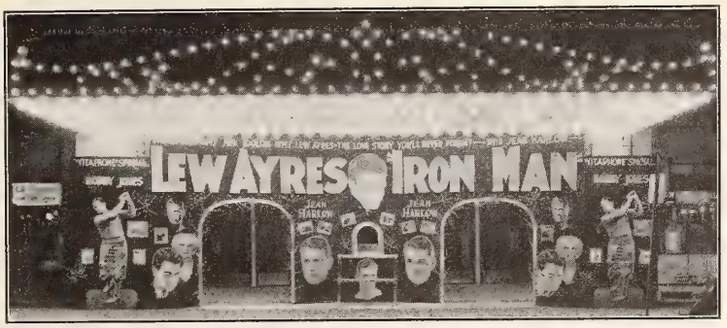
Invite all the twins or triplets on pictures where such a stunt applies.

ARTHUR K. DAME SAYS:

"I thought you would be pleased to note how we successfully carried out one of your suggested stunts—that of the long tailed dog contest in connection with "SKIPPY" as originated by Charles O'Donnell and printed in the June 6th issue."

Manager, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H.

EXAMPLE OF WHAT ONE MAN CAN DO!



The above photo of a front on "Iron Man," etc., was designed, painted and erected entirely by Alvin Hostler, manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Pa. It proved a real flash, with a color scheme of black, silver and green, set off by apple blossoms, and the management received plenty of favorable comment. Note also the prominent placing of the cut-outs on Bobby Jones shorts.

Fred Perry Leans Toward The Use Of Atmospheric Stunts

Atmospheric stunts play a heavy part in exploitation campaigns of Fred Perry, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Binghampton, N. Y., a specialization in this phase of the work having reaped gratifying results at the box office. A few examples of what he's doing along these lines follow:

When he played "Fighting Caravans," several men representing cowboys and pioneers were employed to ride about town and an old desert schooner, with waterbarrel and other old-time paraphernalia, was driven through the streets during the engagement.

During the showing of "Reaching for the Moon," one of the theatre boxes was made up with appropriate scenery, with a moon shining down and a spotlight turned on a string quartette, playing the theme song just before the start of the feature. Likewise for the showing of "Trade Horn" the lobby was given African treatment with the help of local taxidermists and considerable interest created by a striking animal display.

Another advertising hook-up he tried a short time ago was the installation of a refreshment booth, artistically decorated and arranged in the mezzanine floor, where local packers of a good brand of coffee served patrons free, and a local baking company furnished crullers.

We are always glad to hear from an experienced showman like yourself, Fred, and we're passing along your suggestions to the rest of the Club. It is our recollection that Binghampton used to be a crackerjack showtown, and undoubtedly still is; hence, we'll be looking forward to hearing a lot more about your activities. It's always good to hear that a manager enjoys reading these pages and thanks for your toast to the continued success of this Club.

Symon Gould Gets Out Novel Herald To Sell Broadway

We're sorry that we cannot reproduce an 11 x 18 herald gotten out for the Warner Theatre, New York City, by Publicity Director Symon Gould but even if we could both sides would have to be shown to get a correct idea of what it's all about. So we'll have to do our best with a brief description.

The front is a reproduction of one of the city's tab sized newspapers, with corresponding display of type and size of sheet. The head reads, "Murders Unsolved!" There follow photos of Arnold Rothstein, Vivian Gordon, Starr Faithfull and a large photo of Sherlock Holmes, the latter captioned, "Famous London Detective-Criminologist Urged to Tackle U. S. Mystery Killings." A short story underneath the caption outlines the detective's willingness to come out of retirement. The bottom margin advertises "Sherlock Holmes' Fatal Hour," at the Warner. On the reverse side are four reproduced reviews from leading dailies.

Most of you will recall Symon Gould's name as one long associated with the motion picture theatre. Not so long ago he was engaged in a "Little Theatre" movement, that of establishing a chain of small houses in the principal cities. New York City was the nucleus of the move and it was gradually extended to other points where many of these houses are enjoying a steady patronage. Gould is now on the main stem in New York City, where exploitation stunts either border on the sensational or are not done at all. We will be interested in further accounts of what he is doing at the Warner.

THIS DISPLAY SOLD SHOW UP-STATE!

Adults as well as the kiddies got a great kick out of viewing the lobby display made for "Skippy" by H. C. Lee, manager of the Babcock Theatre, Bath, N. Y. It was placed in the lobby four days prior to opening and attracted so much attention that many brought along kodaks in order to take a snap-shot.

Bob Sparks Stages Bathing Girl Tie-Up With Merchants

A bathing girl contest, staged for two nights in conjunction with the showings of "Kick In" brought compliments from both patrons and sponsors of the affair, according to a report from Robert D. Sparks, manager of the Temple Theatre, Arcadia, Texas. And as long as this torrid weather continues the stunt should prove popular.

Eleven merchants were tied-up with the stunt and each of them entered their "girl" to vie for championship honors. Twenty-two merchants originally agreed to participate but owing to some shyness displayed by desirable contestants the number dwindled to eleven.

The merchants all used their windows for display of large cards five days in advance, copy urging people to see their respective entrant. Bathing apparel was also tied-in with the displays in many instances. Eight days in advance a story announcing the event broke in the paper and two others followed, including two on the front page. A full-page of co-op ads broke on opening day.

Inasmuch as the merchant stood the expense of buying his entrant a costume and devoted time to searching out the girl, the theatre stood the expense of prizes, the increased attendance more than making up for the small outlay. A local orchestra was prevailed upon to play on the stage both nights for the advertising received.

Just prior to the appearance of the first girl, a cute little bathing beauty strutted across the stage, accompanied by a blare of trumpets and a drum roll, unfolding a banner with appropriate credits to those sponsoring the event. She then stood near the side of the stage and changed the cards as each contestant appeared.

After all girls had appeared individually they were lined up across stage and as their names were called stepped up front where they were judged by amount of applause. A winner was chosen each night and these two were pitted against each other in the finals for first and second prizes.

This one ought to be a fine stunt to pull during the bathing season, or any other time for that matter, for a group of pretty girls generally makes an interesting stage novelty on account of local interest in the participants. Further, this is an example of what we may expect in the way of future contributions from this new Club member. Judging from the calibre of this stunt, we go on record in the belief that he's a live wire showman.

Stilt Stunt Helps George Seed Garner Capacity Business

The cashier had to stop selling tickets at three o'clock in the afternoon as the result of a corking little publicity stunt put over by George Seed, manager of the Supreme Theatre, Livonia Avenue section of Brooklyn, N. Y., in connection with "Daddy Long Legs," another picture getting its share of exploitation these days.

The excitement was supplied by ten boys, dressed in quaint costume, walking around on wooden stilts. Hats and trousers were designed from cretonne paper and each boy had a sign on his back telling readers to follow "Daddy Long Legs" to the Supreme. Everything was made up by the house staff at negligible cost.

This one certainly brought home the bacon for Seed and he's so enthusiastic about the idea that he's passing it along for the benefit of other members. Keep up the good work, George.

Popular Fare Of Town Ascertained By King's Canvass

To ascertain the likes and dislikes of his many patrons, J. C. King, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Harlingen, Tex., made a canvass to find out the best type pictures, most popular stars, etc.

A man was engaged to do the canvassing in a house-to-house call. Among the questions asked of each one by this young man were: 1. How often do you attend theatre? 2. What theatre or theatres do you attend? 3. What nights do you generally attend theatres? 4. What type of picture do you prefer? 5. Your three favorite stars? 6. What picture or pictures that you have seen appealed to you most? 7. What coming picture or pictures are you anxious to see? 8. Through what medium do you keep in touch with attractions at theatres? 9. What Valley newspaper or newspapers do you subscribe to? And, of course, the person's name, address, phone number, etc.

The people seem quite willing to state their viewpoints, as they somehow feel that they are partially dictating the policies of the theatre. And the newspapers carry a daily story on the stunt setting forth the compiled data to date. When completed, the data gathered will be tabulated to be used as a guide in booking of pictures.

The process is a rather long one, but inasmuch as the theatre gets newspaper publicity daily on it, it proves a worth-while stunt. And in addition, any manager will be in a better position to choose the proper kind of pictures which in return should be better patronized than heretofore.

Jack Goodman Uses Picture Title For Spread Catch Line

The title of "Meet the Wife" was used as the catchline for the promotion of a double truck on this picture when played by Jack Goodman, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Scranton, Pa.

It's meet the wife at so and so's and buy her an electric washer; or meet her at your clothier's and let her see how well you look in one of those Blank brand suits, and a dozen other ads built along the same lines. For the interest-getter a number of unnecessary or misplaced letters of the alphabet appear some place among copy of the ads and the first twenty-five to send in the solution become entitled to pairs of guest tickets. Incidentally, the theatre got a fine break on the page and, as you are well aware, at no cost.

The above is a very attractively gotten-up spread and we are glad to pass the idea along to this manager's brother members. There are many angles to this co-op page stunt and each week some manager discovers a new one to work out. As fast as they come in we print them so if any member is holding out on us, now's the time to shoot it in. Thanks, Goodman, and keep up the good work.

MICKEY MOUSE ON PARADE!

In conjunction with a Fanchon and Marco presentation of a "Mickey Mouse Idea" Bill Thomas, publicity director of the Pantages Theatre, Hollywood, Calif., (Rodney Pantages, Mgr.), organized a parade of the female "Mice" through the main streets of the film city. Certain tie-ups were effected, such as a stop at a well-known restaurant for a huge ration of cheese for the "Mice"; a peek at the inside of a nationally advertised electric refrigerator, and you will also note that transportation was taken care of by a local auto dealer.

A FRONT THAT SPEAKS FOR ITSELF!

Credit Sigmund Haller with the splendid front pictured above. It was designed for the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, when that house played "Front Page" and made of white silver, trimmed with black and orange letters. Much favorable comment on its effectiveness was expressed by local citizens.

Harry Stearn Gets A Valuable Merchant Aid For "Kick In"

Hitting his usual stride in the way of making successful tie-ups, Harry Stearn, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Wilkesbarre, Pa., recently effected a number of these stunts that resulted in a lot of publicity for "Kick In."

A local restaurant gave a window display and a card inside and each copy of menu had a stickler with copy of show. The restaurant also used 14 inches of newspaper space on a co-operative nature.

The Martz Bus Line carried banners on both sides of one of their advertising buses all week from 11 A. M. to 6 P. M.—visiting all the neighboring towns as well as through various parts of the city. This was put over at no cost to the theatre.

A sporting goods house ran a ballyhoo through the streets, the outskirts of town and also to the ball park where a league game was in progress. The ballyhoo consisted of a man and a girl attired in bathing suits on a wagon drawn by a horse. The girl sat in a sun chair and the man sat on the driver's seat driving the horse. On the sides and rear were banners advertising the show as well as the sporting goods house. This sporting goods house also dressed up the lobby with the latest in sporting outfits. All of this was at no expense to the theatre.

11,000 tabloids were made up as the Orpheum News Weekly on Clara Bow and other Paramount stars and pictures. These tabloids were distributed around from house to house, in parked autos and in parking stations. This was one of the best means of advertising in a long time and it was all gratis through the co-operation of a printing company.

Inasmuch as a lot of stress is being laid on "costless advertising" these days (always has been the "cats," we think) the above indicates that Stearn garnered a whale of a lot of free advertising. But that's one of his specialties, so we're not surprised at the extent of his activities. He shows that it can be accomplished and that's what we want to get across. Good work, Harry, and lots of luck working out that next stunt we'll expect to hear about.

Gus Mitchell Bills Two Counties For A 30 Mile Coverage

Two counties were plastered with announcements, window cards and photographs when Gus Mitchell, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Newton, N. C., waged a campaign on "A Free Soul," covering an area of over 30 miles. He also had special announcements mailed out to theatre-goers over the county and had heralds distributed in a house to house canvass.

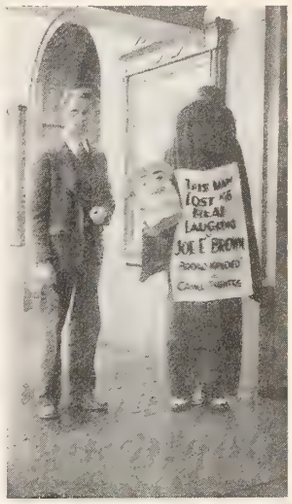
In building his newspaper campaign he started his teaser ads ten days in advance of opening and then continued to insert copy every other day, concluding same on opening day. Time was also obtained from a radio station some fifty miles away and announcement made on the second day of run that the picture could be seen in Newton. Other effort consisted of slides and trailer and a special lobby display made from stills and photos and a painted banner hung across the front.

This is the first time we've heard about Mitchell's work and we are glad to welcome him as a member of this organization. We will hope to hear more from him in the future concerning show selling in his section of the country.

Ballyhoo And Swap Ad Contest Garner Business For Lynch

Eddie Lynch, manager of the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., is still batting them over the center-field fence in his town. Samples of recent work that we've come across include some novel street ballyhoos and a tie-up with his local newspaper on a "Let's Swap" ad contest. The former helped boost business for "Broadminded" and "Cracked Nuts" to the capacity mark and the latter not only materially helped to bring new trade to the house but proved a good all-around business stimulator. Eddie is ably assisted in his work by M. J. Carroll, to whom we are indebted for information concerning the following:

For "Cracked Nuts" he used two ushers, one dressed in the costume of a drum major and the other a la Cameo Kirby, and had them parade a baby carriage through the town. A big doll, swathed in regulation baby clothing, was given prominent display throughout the tour. A sign read, "Just a Couple of Cracked Nuts—Now Playing at the Cameo Theatre."



Ushers were again used to ballyhoo Joe E. Brown in "Broadminded" when that picture was shown. Note the headless figure in the accompanying photo which bears a sign reading, "This Man Lost His Head Laughing at Joe E. Brown in 'Broadminded' at the Cameo Theatre." In both cases, this and the above, the necessary garments were promoted from city merchants without cost to the theatre.

We are also reproducing a copy of his "Let's Swap" ad and to our way of thinking it's one of the best constructed ads of this kind that we've ever seen. The layout is particularly well done, as to copy, boxes and borders, and you will also note that it is a combination of Swap Ad and current attraction. The mat of Mary Pickford, instead of detracting attention from the contest really dresses up and lends tone to the whole layout, at the same time calling the reader's attention to the fact that this picture is being shown. It is to be hoped that Club members will be able to read the staggered copy in the center of the ad. If too small however, a magnifying glass will bring it up for anyone who wants to follow out the general scheme. The staggered copy is also a good example of the pleasing effect produced by setting up type in a way that is different from the ordinary method.

We believe that most members are familiar with Swap Ad contests, as examples of several have been published in this department from time to time. As a matter of fact this idea was hashed around not long ago in these columns in a controversial way, H. M. Addison, of the Penn Theatre, Pittsburgh, having claimed honors for originating it here in the East. He is yet to be challenged by any other Club member.

As a reminder, however, it is a tie-up with your newspaper by which the advertiser receives a pair of guest tickets as an inducement to insert an ad. The cost of the advertisement is thus practically offset by the free tickets. It generally carries strong appeal to the classified ad manager for reason that it is a means of garnering additional space for his department.

KEEP POSTED ON CONVENTIONS, ETC.!

Just as we keep a check on national events through contact with the United States Chamber of Commerce, so can you keep in touch with coming events via your local Chamber and other organizations.

Make it a point to check up on these matters every few weeks by meeting the secretary. They are always in communication with bodies arranging conventions, etc., and can keep you posted.

Very often this knowledge serves to effect some kind of a ticket-selling idea, binding the theatre closer to the Chamber.

Thames Makes Hit With Audience By Staging Band Act

Big town atmosphere was injected into a stage presentation at the Saenger Theatre, Vicksburg, Miss., by J. F. Thames, Jr., through a tie-up with a local dance orchestra, many of the patrons complimenting this manager, as they left the theatre, upon the effectiveness of a set that was constructed at very small cost.

In connection with the above a revolving platform was used as follows: a black drop with orange stripe down the center was secured from a dancing school without cost. Directly in front of this was the 16 feet square platform upon which the whole orchestra was mounted. Just before the curtain was raised, the former organist who donated her services, rendered an organ solo lasting five minutes. As the orchestra began to play the platform was slowly revolved until it had turned completely around, with musicians facing the audience. Five snappy numbers were played and the audience signified its appreciation by loudly applauding for more.

The color scheme on the inside of the platform was in various hues of orange, red and yellow, sprinkled with silver flitter and it made quite a flash. Novel lighting was effected from the use of olivettes and indirect lighting from within the platform.

Here's a suggestion for members who may wish to vary their regular week in and week out programs with an added attraction that can be promoted at small outlay. Local dance orchestras can be found most anywhere these days and they are generally willing to perform for the publicity received. If the leader, or some other player, will act as an M. C., or maybe the theatre manager himself, it often injects additional color to the occasion. Thames' patrons liked the stunt and he's passing it along as a reminder to others.

Bill Brown Plugs German-Made Film In Two Languages

A lot of interest was created in his neighborhood in advance of the showing of a German-made picture, "Gretel and Liesel" when Bill Brown, manager of the Fox-Lefferts Theatre, Richmond Hill, N. Y., distributed colored heralds with one side printed in English and the other in German. They were large enough to give a good display to the several exchange cuts and he stressed the point that whether one understood German or not the picture would be enjoyed. Another point he brought out was that the story was similar to that of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew."

Brown's show selling work is familiar to most readers of this department and he generally comes through ace high, whether it's the selling of foreign film or one made in this country. We'll admit that the former are harder to put across and note that he did not lose the opportunity of making an appeal to German speaking people in their own language.

C. Ryan Encourages Kiddie Trade With New Selling Angles

If you are fortunate enough to belocated in town or city that boasts a beverage manufacturer or distributor, perhaps you can make a tie-up for a Junior Saturday Matinee which will prove as effective for building hot weather trade as the following stunt did for District Manager Charles J. Ryan, located at the Buckingham Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Tie-ups for the serving of iced drinks to the kiddies in torrid weather is not a new idea but the way this was handled has some new twists; and after all, new angles to old ideas are what we're all in search of in these days of highly competitive selling. The following was good enough to boost Summer matinee attendance from 700 to 1,200 and we'd call that pretty snappy work.

The manufacturers of an iced chocolate drink were tied in with in this instance and they provided every child and adult who attended the matinee with a free glass of the beverage. They also installed two dispensing units in the lobby and furnished the services of two uniformed attendants. This drink happens to be called "Kayo" and there is a comic strip in one of the Sunday papers entitled Kayo Mullins. A boy who at one time appeared in a Paul Ash act was dressed up the same as the cartoon character and provided a 7-minute act of songs and monologue that delighted the children. Two days previous to the matinee little "Kayo" toured the theatre neighborhood in an Austin auto and wherever children could be found and handed out a 9 x 12 hand bill announcing the program. Inside the theatre the kids were told that if they would bring in four corks from the Kayo bottles a Kayo Club button would be given them entitling the holder to special privileges and gifts at meetings to be held every four weeks.

The above is in line with country-wide effort being made by theatre managers to encourage kiddie patronage. As Ryan points out, the youngster of today is tomorrow's fan who will be an important factor in what's what in entertainment. Every Junior Matinee turns out hundreds of the best little word of mouth advertisers procurable. To our way of thinking Ryan's Matinee tie-up is not only a fine idea for the hot weather weeks but is one which can be successfully adapted to many other lines the year around. An iced cold drink would naturally delight the kiddies during the hot weather but there are also many other small articles that could be worked in for all kinds of seasons. It necessarily follows that this idea is then not limited to beverage manufacturers but applicable to many others.

Travelling Auto Effectively Used For "Trader Horn"

A travelling auto ballyhoo was effectively used in selling "Trader Horn" when this picture was played by E. E. Whittaker, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

The car used was a new coupe with the title of picture, "Trader Horn" and "on the talking screen at last" written all over the body and fenders. The car visited all the city schools during recess for three days in advance of showing and also did the neighboring towns as well as the city itself.

The man at the wheel of the car would pass out estimate cards to all that gathered around. Prizes were offered to the persons nearest estimating the correct number of titles on the car. The car attracted lots of attention and undoubtedly sold many tickets for the picture.

The above appears to be a gag that can be used with the title of most any picture and the Club thanks Manager Whittaker for passing it along. Let's hear more about what you are doing, Whittaker, in the way of selling shows down in Charlotte

Carden And Slentz Team Up Again To Garner Free Space

It's really not news when we inform other members that the well known team of Roy Slentz and C. E. Carden have been grabbing a lot of free space for this feat appears to be one of their specialties. This time, it's newspaper tie-ups again, together with some unusual makeup for an ad on "Front Page." These two are, respectively, manager and advertising manager of the Worth Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.

In advertising "It's a Wise Child," they tied up with the newspaper on the Want Ad page. The paper kicked in with a three-column by 8½ inch ad on the picture together with details on how one could win guest tickets to see the picture. Scattered through the Want Ads were sentences or phrases pertaining to the picture. The idea was to clip them and arrange neatly.

In advertising "Skippy," the paper kicked in with another 3-column by 8½ inch ad depicting various scenes from the picture, especially of individual scenes of Jackie Cooper. Contestants in this instance were offered guest tickets by filling in the balloons as to what was possibly said by the persons shown on the ad.

An excellent tie-up was also effected with the Fort Worth Public Market whereby they ran co-operative ads in the paper tying in their copy with the stars appearing in pictures at the Worth.

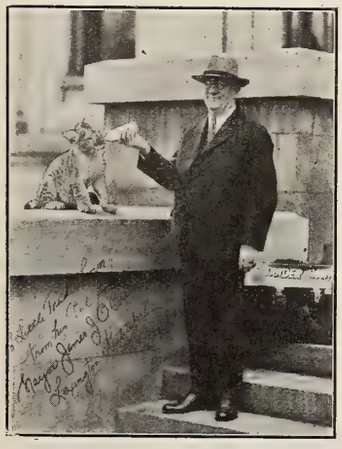
As for the co-op ad in "Front Page," it was quite unusual in make-up; all the merchants' ads appearing on a background of type from a front page. The caption at the top read, "The news on this page is as important as that on the front page." And every one of the ads carried the line, "A Value of 'Front Page' Importance." The theatre carried its ad on the picture in top center.

Most of you are familiar with the work of the two men mentioned above and know that they've been consistently putting over many effective stunts. We wonder what they're up to right now in the way of socking the hot weather bugaboo and will expect them to let their brother members in on the methods employed.

The Mayor Assists Annabell Ward To Crash A Newspaper

A fine publicity break was recently secured for the Strand Theatre, Lexington, Kentucky, by Miss Annabell Ward during the run of "Trader Horn" at this house. Miss Ward is the assistant manager and publicity director of the Phoenix Amusement Company, operating the Strand and Ben Ali Theatres.

We have before us a tear sheet from the amusement section of the local newspaper which carries a three-column cut that runs almost a half-page in depth. It shows a front view of the City Hall where no less a personage than Mayor James J. O'Brien can be seen holding a bottle to the mouth of a cub lion which is the property of Miss Edwina Booth and caught by the "Trader" company when on location in Darkest Africa. The bottle which the Mayor is calmly holding undoubtedly contains milk—not the liquid that this city used to be famous for dispensing when entertaining important visitors. The cub will be returned to the film star as soon as it completes a tour of the larger cities.



We congratulate Miss Ward for obtaining this corking publicity tie-up with such an important personage. Any theatre that can rate a news story with a mayor surely is in for its share of public attention.

SCHOOLS REOPEN SOON!

It will be well to keep in mind that the schools will be reopening again early next month. This may suggest to you some tie-up with local merchants dealing in school supplies, etc.

Make it a point to contact your school authorities right from the start of the fall session with a view of securing indorsements for pictures warranting such approval. They can also be asked to preview special productions and express themselves for use in your newspaper ads.

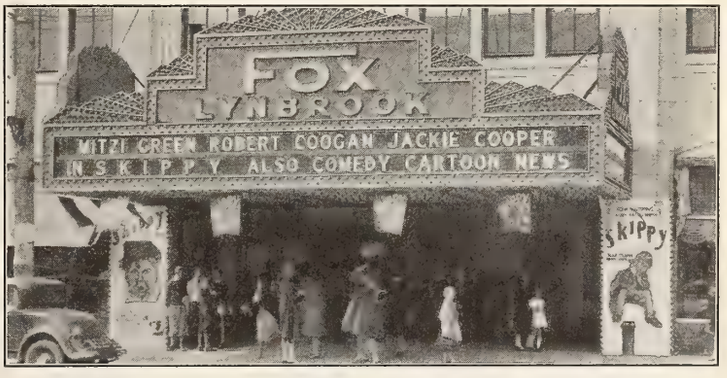
Educational bodies are valuable assets to theatres knowing how to handle them. Here and there you may find a "crab" to deal with, but as a general rule they will cooperate for any worthwhile picture.

MacLevy Plugging Local Enterprise For Summer Boost

According to a recent communication to the Club from Monty MacLevy, former manager of the Fox-Lynbrook Theatre, Lynbrook, L. I., N. Y., he lately contacted a number of local organizations and succeeded in effecting several tie-ups which materially aided the box office and proved a means of building further good-will for his theatre. In his work, he was ably helped by Assistant Manager George King.

As one of his moves he secured the services of a well-known orchestra leader and teacher to conduct the Fox-Lynbrook Junior Symphony Orchestra. Twenty-five members had already been enrolled, schools had been contacted and it is expected that a fifty-piece orchestra will soon be fully organized for Saturday matinees.

He has also engaged a well-known singing and dancing instructor for the promotion of a free school along these lines. This instructor already has a dancing school in Lynbrook and on Saturdays takes her place at a desk in the theatre lobby, enrolling the kiddies as they come in. George King has arranged with a local photographer to furnish the theatre with a picture of every pupil who becomes a member of the club. A special trailer is run and additional interest obtained by the placing in the lobby of a 40 inch by 60 inch frame for views of the dancers.



Baseball clubs are also coming in for their share of attention this summer in and around Lynbrook. There is a pro team there that draws approximately 1,500 to 2,500 people at its games. The theatre prints up a two-side throwaway with one side for scores and schedule and the other for a theatre program. This was done in conjunction with the Valley Stream Theatre, managed by MacKenzie and formerly supervised by MacLevy. These throwaways are distributed at the game and to homes, and printing costs are split between the two theatres.

Other activities include a similar baseball tie-up with a nearby high school and the promotion of a Theatre Party for the benefit of the Junior Class dance. This stunt helped the Class put over its sale of tickets and at the same time boosted business at the box office.

All the above stunts have been engineered within the past few weeks and they appear to be excellent means of helping along business during the summer months. The combination of Junior Orchestra and the dancing singing school can be accomplished at no cost to the theatre and it is figured that within a few months a local revue and concert can be put over which will be good for a two or three days' stand. There is also the large amount of established good-will to be taken into consideration. The Club wishes Monty and his associates unlimited success in his promotional ideas.

A WEST COAST SIGN ATTRACTS!

Photo above shows a night view of a compelling sign erected for "Skippy" by Charlie Wuerz, City Manager for Fox-West Coast in San Bernardino, Calif. This shot was taken by Wuerz, himself, and the sign was an effective means of ballyhooing the title for a considerable distance around the neighborhood.

Preview Plug For Film Nets Perrin Plenty Free Space

A preview held for prominent citizens and a tie-up with the local Kiwanis organization resulted in a whale of a lot of publicity for "Skippy" when this picture was played by C. T. Perrin, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo.

Eight days in advance the invited guests at the preview included the Governor of Wyoming and his wife, the Superintendent of Schools, School Principals, Clergymen and representatives of all luncheon and civic clubs. Permission was secured to publish the Governor's endorsement.

A tie-up was made with the local newspaper for a front page story which made an offer of free tickets to anyone who could not afford to pay their way. Anticipating the greatest response to this move from kids, an avalanche of requests was avoided by explaining to applicants that these tickets were to be distributed through schools to deserving pupils. Teachers used their judgment as to this distribution and 500 tickets took care of all requests, including the small percentage of adults.

Arrangements were also made with the Kiwanis for distribution of free tickets to the "Under-privileged" school children, a cause which the club was supporting. The club paid all printing costs and several members became so enthused over the picture that they put up essay contest prizes for the children.

That certainly was getting to the kid end of it, Perrin, and it ties-in with the idea of "women and children first"—and the rest is easy. He's passing along this series of stunts for the benefit of his brother members, with the hope that they, too, will reap a like benefit should they adopt his plan. Next time he writes we'll be looking for information on how hot weather trade is being kept up to mark.

Satz Knows How To Bring In The Kids During Hot Months

How to compete with swimming holes and ball games when 100 in the shade weather inspires kiddies with intense thought about these two popular pastimes, is seen in a recent stunt put over by Bernard Satz, manager of the Casino Theatre, Ware, Mass. It takes a good stunt to do this, but you'll recall that Satz is a live-wire showman.

This manager is a devout Rotarian, in addition to acting as song leader and director, and arranged to have this organization sponsor a Kids' Free Morning Show. The local chief of police, also a Rotarian, who is a great booster of recreation for the kiddies also lent his cooperation to the move. Fifty merchants were approached, most of them members of the organization, and asked to contribute samples of merchandise for the give-aways. Thirty-eight of them responded with product that ranged from ice-cream to house paint. Boss Ralph Snider contributed the theatre, the Boston Film Board of Trade donated a real program of comedies and Boy and Girl Scouts, as well as everyone connected with the theatre, watched carefully over the children. The show was opened by a reel giving a talk on Safety by a State Trooper. 535 bags containing 38 useful gifts were handed out to the kids.

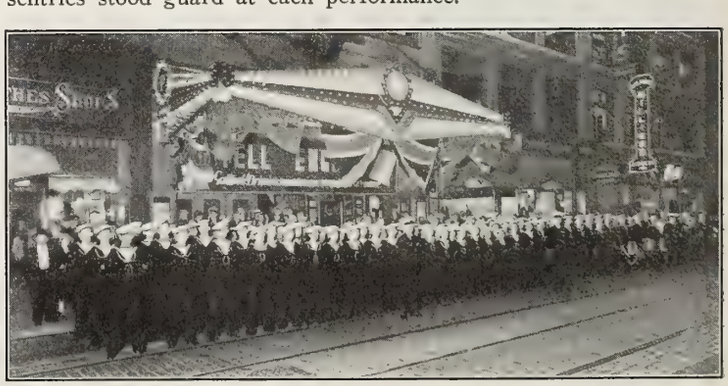
A humorous slant was given the affair on account of the inclusion of a bottle of ginger ale in each bag. The Chief of Police told the kids that inasmuch as he was responsible for the empty bottles they should be returned to the station house. Satz went him one better by telling them that if they were returned to the theatre the bottles would be redeemed as a 5 cent credit on a 10 cent admission. Bernard thinks some of the kids put one over in that he made rebates on over 600 bottles, only 535 having been handed out. We have a small snap-shot showing an army of kids lined up in front of the theatre with the bags but it's not sharp enough for good reproduction. Just take our word for the fact that plenty of them attended the performance.

Any stunt that can pull kids away from playgrounds, particularly during vacation season, is certainly worthy of much consideration and we can vouch for the fact that this one went over in bang-up style. His tip-off on the surplus bottles is interesting.

Cleary's Campaign On British Picture Brings Nice Return

Although the weather was very hot and effects of the world-wide business depression were being felt, the campaign made on "Tell England" brought most gratifying returns to the box office of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, managed by Thomas Cleary.

He held a Military Night and had all the prominent regiments of the city parade to the theatre as guests for the occasion. Following Military Night, he held a Naval Night and invited a whole company of the Naval Cadets, a photo of this outfit in front of theatre, appearing on this page. In keeping with the picture theme the entrance and front was dressed with flags, a ship's compass and other nautical equipment placed in the lobby and two uniformed sentries stood guard at each performance.



Other publicity effort included the distribution of 15,000 two-for-ones; 8,000 bookmarks and 20,000 cards to the householder, and 500 cards to leading city merchants, the latter carrying a special plea to patronize a British-made picture and to help publicize same by allowing space on bulletin board for enclosed card.

In addition to having a smartly dressed theatre for the above picture we think most of you will agree that a considerable mailing effort was put forth. It was instrumental in producing brisk trade. Thanks are also extended to C. E. Duffey for sending this matter in.

"Here are Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor in the romantic Cinderella story that their fans cry for."
—ROBERTA NANGLE, Chicago Daily Tribune

"MERELY MARY ANN should make itself a lot of money in the loop and outlying houses."
—CLARK RODENBACH, Chicago Daily News

"This is another DADDY LONG LEGS in popular appeal. It is very rare for a star to have such good luck in two consecutive roles as has befallen Janet Gaynor, and her popularity rating should take a great jump . . . In fact, MERELY MARY ANN is just about all right in every particular. It should be as popular as DADDY LONG LEGS, even more so. It is the kind of picture which keeps the great majority of the public faithful movie fans." —GENEVIEVE HARRIS, Chicago Evening Post

And Bob Montgomery in "THE MAN IN POSSESSION" and Ramon Novarro in "A SON OF INDIA" and soon, your darling GRETA GARBO in "SUSAN LENOX"—Ain't we got hits!

"HEY! GIVE US THAT SPOTLIGHT!"

The first three M-G-M new season releases continue our amazing hit record!

BUT, wait till you see these Fall Flappers grab the spotlight—

PARDON US—Laurel-Hardy feature comedy knocks Houston for a loop. Laurel-Hardy leap into front-rank feature class!

THE SQUAW MAN—Cecil DeMille's thrill drama takes the top dough in Providence. Warner Baxter, Lupe Velez in Big Cast!

GUILTY HANDS—Coast preview sensational. Critics rave. Lionel Barrymore's crowning dramatic effort. Watch!

One, two, three—and that's just a starter!

Another European Outrage

THAT all-seeking periodical of science, the monthly Abstract Bulletin, issued by the Kodak Research Laboratories, now solemnly records the issuance of French patent No. 689,130 to one Mr. S. Sawaragi for "a substratum of beer, sodium silicate and white of egg, to increase the adhesion of chromated gelatine," in a photogravure process. We have plenty of eggs in the picture industry on this side, but if beer is to become an important component, so many problems loom we refuse to increase the alarm by naming them. Meanwhile it is admitted that a seidel of Pilsner applied to the customer might make many a production look better.

"Always Belittlin' "

WHAT with a break in the heat wave and some cheerful wisps of news here and there percolating through the industry, this promised to be a rather good week until "The Presbyterian," published in Philadelphia, came along with this item of comment:

> ". . . . We saw 'Skippy,' which is making its appeal to children. To us, it was not funny, and was utterly wrong in its general philosophy, and also presented a sickly sentimentalism on the part of silly parents. It was harmful in quite another way. When the respectable people positively refuse to patronize these evil and cheap pictures, the movie managers will change their selections. At no place is that great industry so sensitive as in the box office."

Now after all if they are going to pick on "Skippy," we might as well give up and confess there's nothing to be done about it. Maybe a screen version of "Sanford and Merton" would get by. About Mr. Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" there would be some doubt, especially in the "Slough of Despond" sequence. After all, maybe the picture industry will just have to get along without pleasing everybody all of the time.

"Finders Keepers"

THE penetrating M. Marcel Rouff, writing in the Mercure de France, complains most bitterly that the cinema must abandon aping the theatre and borrowing wholesale from literature. He cites the cry of some expert who demands: "When shall we have a Shakespeare of the cinema?" Now we are willing enough to let by-gones be by-gones and say nothing about Mr. Shakespeare and the deer poaching episode, but if there ever was an artist who "took his own where he found it" it was the same Will Shakespeare. The evidences are fairly clear that he refurbished, wrapped up and relabelled as his own about everything loose among the arts that he could use. The method is excellent, if one can get away with it—and both Mr. Shakespeare and the motion picture have.

Notice to Mr. Winchell

WE seem to be in a jam with Mr. Walter Winchell of that literary palladium "The Daily Mirror" of New York, over the important subject of syntax. It appears that Mr. James Cunningham, the peerless grammarian of our "Asides & Interlude" page, hurled a charge of infinitive splitting at Mr. Winchell, and then went rollicking off on his vacation.

Now comes Mr. Winchell, clutching at any weapon which comes to hand, to assault us in retaliation. He encloses an advertisement, torn in angry haste from a motion picture publication, in which Warner Brothers robustly busted the code with the phrase "We defy any company in the business today to even promise you," etc.

Mr. Winchell cannot put us on the spot by citing against us what some exuberant advertiser may do in space purchased for the purpose. But never-the-less, if Mr. Charles Einfeldt of Warners, or any other competent copy writer, wants an infinitive split we'll help him. Under provocation, in this weather, we'd even sunder a genitive gerund. This is notice to Mr. Winchell that we are in the picture business and infinitives will have to take care of themselves, just as lonesome prepositions do.

Neatly Attended to

WE are not in the personal prattle business, but there is that about the conduct of the domestic differences between Mr. and Mrs. John Gilbert which is worthy of note in this industry. Ina Claire has received a divorce in Los Angeles from Mr. Gilbert in a brief and quiet session behind closed doors and with no fanfare of the publicity so commonly attendant upon such happenings in the world of the screen. It has been demonstrated that it is possible, even in the exhibitionist motion picture industry, for persons who so desire, to keep their private lives private.

It's All Our Fault

THE week's motion picture references in the news of the daily press includes a United Press dispatch from Florida concerning a domestic disaster, containing this paragraph:

> After sending her eight-year-old son to a moving picture, Mrs. S——— shot herself through the head. . . .

Doubtless two or three uplift clubs will now pass resolutions condemning the motion picture industry for this matter and demanding that Mr. Will Hays do something about it. When mothers will do this sort of thing obviously the theatres should be abolished.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

THE PHOENIX of MUSKOGEE in OKLAHOMA seems to have discovered that it is just possible that the motion picture is probably more a symptom and expression of public taste than a moulder of it. It editorially remarks:

The Gangster on the Screen

If one should care to take the time to scrutinize the aims and actions of censorship and reform organizations of almost any species, he usually can find something, if not ridiculous, at least highly amusing. And censorship of motion pictures has proved no exception.

That is not to say that movie censorship has failed to accomplish some worthwhile things in tidying up the silver screen. No one would deny for an instant that the elimination of smut and filth from pictures was anything but necessary and welcome. And despite the fact that the industry has done most of the purifying of its own accord, the censors must be given credit for furnishing the initial impetus.

However, the reformers seem never to be content, especially the self-appointed kind, a poignant example of such discontent being the recently voiced demand of the New York Society for the Prevention of Vice that newspapers wage a war against "the display of murder and torture of defenseless people being portrayed day after day on the screens" because "their continual display is creating an unshockable public."

We cannot believe that the gangster film is seriously corrupting the minds of either the youth or the grownups. We have yet to see the gang leader, the "hero" of the picture, really glorified in any film. He invariably has to pay the price before the picture ends. But even if the temporary glamour of the gangster chief outshines the beneficial "moral" the picture carries, why try to suppress it? The gangsters and racketeers are with us. Why try to hide the fact? Isn't it better to "expose" their activities to the public as a warning until such time as the gangs themselves can be abolished?

THE GAZETTE of BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA raises a question as to the ultimate value of the visual education experiment with talking pictures recently conducted in Washington.

Eye-Learning

A novel experiment in the value of films for educational purposes has been undertaken in Washington, D. C. A boy and a girl from every state, with their teachers as observers, take examinations to show what they know about certain subjects. They see specially prepared motion pictures dealing with those subjects, and take examinations again to show what they have learned.

They will probably produce written evidence that they learned a good deal. For they will be keyed up to observe the pictures closely; and it is doubtless true that we naturally learn more quickly with the eye than the ear. Yet it would probably be a mistake if any sweeping changes in educational method were made as a result of apparent success in such tests. What would a test show a year later?

Learning acquired easily and rapidly may be forgotten in the same manner. Impressions from motion pictures may be fleeting. The mind has little time to assimilate them, and other impressions may crowd them out. Can there be much genuine, enduring education without serious study and effort?

And it has become almost axiomatic that "trade follows the film." Fleeting impressions?

MR. G. A. ATKINSON, film critic of the DAILY TELEGRAPH of LONDON, has just relieved himself of two pulsing columns of unhappiness about the American motion picture industry, presenting such altogether remarkable news as this:

> Nothing, apparently, can stop Hollywood from driving to self destruction. The endless procession of sex-and-crime movies has caused American cinema theatres to close down in thousands, and has caused hundreds of others to revert to variety.
> Sex-and-crime movies have practically killed the picture going habit in the States, and have seriously affected the box offices in this country, despite the strength of the British film boom.
> The whole world seethes with complaints about the prevalent type of talkie, and people interested in social welfare are everywhere organizing to fight for cleaner films.

Mr. Atkinson proceeds to enumerate an array of motion pictures of American origin which he deems, it seems, a menace to the world, heading his list with "Bad Girl," which he assumes is just the sort of picture that those words would spell to him. As one adventures through Mr. Atkinson's patriotic paragraphs, there appears an extraordinary discussion of a British International production entitled "Uneasy Virtue." Mr. Atkinson has some slight qualms about that title, but lightly tosses it off as the influence of a British public "steeped in Hollywood tradition." This picture is, he says:

> The most delightfully witty entertainment that the British industry has produced. . . . Margot Grahame and Dodo Watts also do well, and the studio work, particularly the garden scenery, is very good, indeed.

"Oh, to be in England, now that April's there."—THE EDITOR.

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER, consistent with the American newspaper policy of attributing everything but merit to the motion picture, would now advise making Mr. Will Hays a czar of the calories, too. It is one of the most constructive of recent editorials on this industry:

> Fads follow fads. These are the days of vitamins and calories. Also the days of diets. Out in Los Angeles motion picture stars, fearing that their bones will not be conspicuous enough if they eat nourishing food, go through a process of starvation. Result, living skeletons painful to look upon. Will Hays ought to see to this. Give the poor sufferers something to eat, even if they do put on the delicate curves of womanhood instead of creating the impression that they have been turned out with abandoned horses to graze upon desert sage brush.

CALL PROTEST MEET ON MGM CONTRACTS

21 Exhibitor Units Agree to Attend New York Session—Fox Policies Also Attacked

Sales policies and contracts of M-G-M are the target of a protest meeting called by the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern Delaware, in letters to all exhibitor units throughout the country. The meeting is to be in New York, at a date to be set within the next three days, and 21 associations thus far have signified their intention to be represented.

The Pennsylvania - Delaware exhibitors protest M-G-M's announced stipulation that 19 specials be played on percentage ranging from 30 to 35 per cent plus score charge. They say the days of the week on which the pictures are to play also are stipulated. The exhibitors contend that independents cannot make a profit paying more than 25 per cent and point out that the circuits pay only 20 to 25 per cent and no score charge. If the M-G-M plan is permitted, other companies will follow suit, they warn.

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of M-G-M, replied to the protest that the company is trying to conduct its business on a basis it considers fair.

Eleven of the 21 units object to the sales policies of Fox as well as M-G-M, objecting to the substitution latitude under the Fox contract. All 21 organizations also are prepared to fight for elimination of the score charge.

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied, in Chicago conferring with Allied leaders on the operators' strike, plans to attend. Allied in a recent bulletin attacked the M-G-M and Fox contracts and deplored the lack of general adoption of the clauses agreed upon at the 5-5-5 conferences.

The proposed meeting had not as yet been brought to the official attention of the MPTOA. The usual procedure would require that the matter be placed before the president and directors before any stand could be taken.

Houses Readying for Labor Day

Theatres darkened during summer months are preparing for Labor Day reopening. Estimates of 1,000 reopenings on that day have been made following a nation-wide check.

Some Managers Haven't Heard, It Seems

Plunkett Suggests Throwing Away the Rubber Stamp at the Headquarters in Broadway

The week has brought avowed and unavowed evidences that the motion picture industry is becoming markedly conscious of the limitations of the "remote control" method of theatre operation. The circuit movement, geographically and financially expanded with that swift extravagance of enthusiasm which so often characterizes motion picture movements, is now being both publicly and secretively subjected to revisions.

With every circuit executive stoutly proclaiming the enduring success of his special sector of the industry, endless meetings, conferences and debates are being held over plans for reversion of theatres to prior ownerships, in terms that are given the coloration of sub-management, rentals and the like.

May Turn Back 20 Per Cent

In substance it appears that the producer-distributor concerns have arrived at the conviction that they can afford to dispose of some none-too-profitable holds upon the retail market in behalf of thereby creating some exhibitor buyers for their pictorial wares.

It is the confidential forecast of one circuit executive of high status, made in an unwary moment, that perhaps as many as 20 per cent of the circuit owned or controlled houses may ultimately be found turned back to individual ownership and operation.

This trend has been under way for some months, as evidenced by a tabulation presented on this page. However, the biggest single gesture toward the elimination of the "remote control" method of theatre operation came within the week with the announcement of a complete decentralization of theatre management for Fox theatres, effective August 31. This is not to be confused with other Fox theatre transactions by which a considerable array of houses are being turned back to original owners or delivered to other managements, including notably the negotiations in progress with M. E. Comerford for taking over some 35 theatres in the upper New York state territory and adjacent regions.

140 Theatres Affected

The Fox decentralization plan will affect between 140 and 160 theatres, which will now be split into new groupings of territorial units. The line up of division managers is: Manhattan, Bronx and Long Island, Harry Woodin; New Jersey and Brooklyn, Harry Goldberg; Albany and Buffalo, Marshall Taylor; New England, Herschel

ROWLAND MADE A VICE PRESIDENT OF FOX ORGANIZATION BY CLARKE

Administrative Duties in New York Office

More Structural Changes Shown in Company Than Previously Made Under Clarkes' Presidency

Richard A. Rowland, youngest among the founders of the modern era of the motion picture and widely experienced in production, distribution and exhibition, has been appointed a vice-president of the Fox organization by Harley L. Clarke, president, effective this week.

Mr. Rowland's duties, according to accurate but unofficial definitions, will be of "an administrative character in the New York office."

Several Organization Moves

The appointment of Rowland comes coincidentally with a number of organization moves in the Fox offices, including the realignment and consolidation of publicity, advertising and public relations activities under Glen Griswold, Chicago publisher and journalist in the financial field who joined the Fox organization some months past, and a movement toward the decentralization of Fox circuit theatre operations. The week thereby has brought more structural changes in the Fox organization than have previously been made since the coming of the Clarke administration.

For twenty odd years the new Fox vice-president has been genially known to this industry as "Dick" Rowland. His motion picture career began with the Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company in Pittsburgh, Pa., a business which he inherited from his father and began to administer when a lad in his teens. He began dealing in motion picture films in the earlier days and developed a system of exchanges which eventually were sold, at an amazing figure for the period, to General Film Company. Mr. Rowland, however, swiftly reestablished himself as a distributor of motion pictures and for a time most profitably held for his territory the franchise on the Paramount product. He founded the original Metro Pictures Corporation in 1915 and went forward with it, continuing to that year of destiny when almost concurrently he engaged in the production of the spectacular success of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and sold his company to Marcus Loew.

Next With First National

Mr. Rowland's next important connection was with First National Pictures Corporation in charge of production, a post which he held until the swift but brief impact upon that company of Joseph P. Kennedy and Mr. Kennedy's then chief of cavalry, E. B. Derr, in 1928.

Mr. Rowland has an imposing estate on the Boston Post Road at Rye in Westchester County, where many personages of prominence in the industry have these several years enjoyed the hospitalities of the household, to say nothing of the wide shaded verandas and the hemlock hedged swimming pool. In the fleet of motor cars is one Hispano-Suiza roadster which can do 110 and often has done better than 90.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND

The operations of this "Dick" Rowland have ever been marked by a debonair manner and a somewhat sporting outlook on the show business as one in which staid business judgment can well be enlivened by a spirit of adventurousness.

This trait was exemplified and evidenced markedly in Mr. Rowland's acquisition and production of "The Four Horsemen." This story had nothing to recommend it to the picture industry, superficially. It was a war story in an era when war stories were most especially dead. The author of the novel, Blasco Ibanez, a Spaniard, was unknown to the American public, unknown to the whole public of the motion picture world. But, to Mr. Rowland's eye there was significance enough in a line he saw in an advertisement in the book section of the New York Times. That line said "forty-first printing."

The story could be had for $10,000 and a percentage, and, said Rowland, "I was sure enough there was something in it to take a ten thousand dollar chance."

Incidentally, Mr. Rowland had not then, and has not since, read the novel. He has at various times accumulated considerable fortunes and has often with varying luck, and sometimes spectacular results, operated in the stock market. He enjoys the thrill of action.

A. M. Botsford is succeeding Richard A. Rowland as head of the Paramount story board, inaugurated last spring. Arthur Mayer succeeds Botsford as director of publicity and advertising for Publix and L. J. Ludwig takes the post as supervisor for Publix in the Middle West.

Fox Consolidates Publicity Offices Under Griswold

The Fox Film Corporation is putting into effect a plan of realignment and consolidation of its publicity, advertising and public relations activities, including those representing picture production, distribution and theatre circuit operation. The reorganized department is placed under the charge of Glen Griswold, a Chicago publisher and journalist from the financial field. Mr. Griswold came to New York to enter the service of the Fox organization as a vice-president in charge of public relations, some months ago, at the instance of Harley L. Clarke, the western financier and utilities operator who succeeded William Fox as the executive head of the concern.

It is understood that Mr. Griswold will shortly announce the appointment of an operating assistant for his department, to be chosen either from the personnel of the staff, or, perhaps, bringing in a new figure from the outside.

This move is a part of a considerable sequence of readjustments of the Fox mechanism which appear now to be the result of the months in which Mr. Clarke has had the enterprise closely under his examination.

Mr. Griswold has been in newspaper and other publication work for some twenty years. He is best known for his connection with the Journal of Commerce of Chicago.

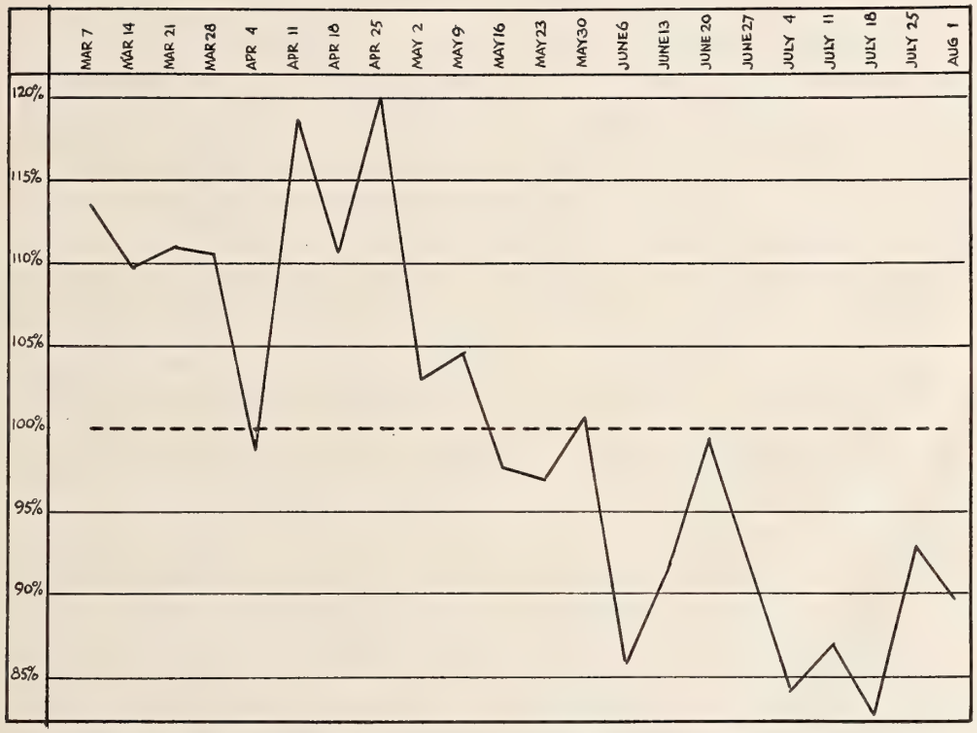
Mr. Griswold's first activities with the Fox organization were concerned chiefly with handling the publicity aspects of the corporation's financing. More recently he sojourned in Washington administering various aspects of the educational films tests made there with specially prepared Fox pictures at the instance of President Hoover. It is said that he had been especially commissioned by Mr. Clarke to make an intensive study of the motion picture public's reactions, the foundation of box office tastes and the origin of trends.

Mr. Griswold is somewhere in the vicinity of forty years of age, black haired and dark-eyed, with that vigorous sort of manner and gesture which is so often attributed to the cooling winds that sweep Chicago from Lake Michigan. He has a family devoted to going places in a motor car, but himself considers the American railway a great institution. His favorite flower is the brook trout (salvelinus fontinalis) which he orthodoxly pursues with the dry fly. He will not use worm bait, when any one is looking.

Extra Eastman Dividend Declared

Usual extra dividend of 75 cents has been declared by Eastman Kodak directors. This is in addition to the regular $1.25 per share payment on common stock, both payable on October 1 to holders of record on September 3. The extra has been paid regularly since 1925.

SOUND EQUIPMENT DEPRECIATION IS PLACED ON 5-YEAR BASIS BY U. S.



This chart represents the box office receipts in five Eastern cities from March 7 to August 1, a period of 22 weeks. The 100 per cent dotted line represents the average for the period. The five cities are New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore and Albany.

Ruling Expected to Effect Saving of Millions

Decision Favorable to Larger Companies, But Adverse for Operators of Smaller Theatres

The internal revenue department in New York has just rendered a decision placing the depreciation write-off on "original sound equipment" on a five-year basis.

This decision, executives point out, will have two effects upon members of the motion picture industry—one adverse, and one favorable.

The smaller exhibitor who has been writing off the cost of installation over a period of only two years will, according to executives, be placed on a five-year basis, with the prospect in view of making additional payments to the government on taxes for 1929 and 1930. The larger companies, however, on which the depreciation or amortization write-off had been set at 10 years, will gain through the new ruling.

While no executive wished to be quoted, it was estimated that a five-year write-off would effect a saving of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 a year to various factors in the business, including the producer as well as the exhibitor.

The government's decision read:

"Regarding deductions to be allowed motion picture corporations for depreciation or amortization of the cost of installing sound or talking equipment, the cost of the installation of the original sound equipment should be written off over five years, the service and inspection payments are allowable deductions, the incidental repairs which merely keep the equipment in ordinary efficient operating condition should be deducted as expense items and repairs in the nature of replacements with a life in excess of one year should be classed as capital expenditures or be charged against the depreciation reserve."

The term, "capital expenditures," refers to the installation of new parts, such as motors. Instead of writing off the depreciation on these new parts on the five-year basis, the cost is written off, it is pointed out, on the basis of the balance of the write-off period on the original equipment. In other words, it was said, if a new motor is purchased after the original equipment is three years old, the depreciation on the motor should be written off in two years.

In explaining the ruling, A. J. Michel, general auditor and assistant treasurer of Paramount Publix, took as an example a $10,000 installation. Under the earlier federal decision the depreciation, in computing taxes, would be at the rate of $1,000 annually. The present ruling increases the depreciation write-off to $2,000 a year.

The saving to be effected by the larger companies is potential, owing to the fact that several of the larger companies have based their tax computations on the five-year write-off period during the controversy with internal revenue executives.

Coast in Rush With Entries for Golf Tournament

The fifth annual Quigley golf tournament, to be given this year in Hollywood under the direct auspices of The Hollywood Herald, will be held at the Lakeside Club on September 13.

This year the rush of entries indicates a greater playoff than in the past, when under the direction of Exhibitors Herald-World, the tournament was one of the season's popular events among motion picture people.

Already, many handsome trophies have been donated by Hollywood and Los Angeles business enterprises.

In the preceding years, the Quigley tournament has brought to Lakeside men from every department of the studio—players whose names grace the marquees in every country; executives who direct the destinies of the industry; property men; directors; cameramen; and all others who devote themselves to pictures.

"Peg o' My Heart" to MGM

15 a Year from Warners in England for Foreign Mart

Fifteen features will be made yearly by Warners' proposed British production unit now being organized at London by Jack Warner who will lease a studio within one month. George Arliss, Dorothy Mackaill, Roland Young, Jamieson Thomas and other British stars on Warners' Hollywood lot will be sent to England for the new lineup, which is primarily intended as First National and Warner quota material, although it will receive world wide distribution under the combined banner.

Universal starts British quota production, with its own unit, on September 1.

No Salary Cuts at Erpi

Salary reductions ordered in pay envelopes of 1,000 executives and managers at Western Electric's plant at Hawthorn, Ill., do not affect employees of Electrical Research Products, which is a separate corporate identity and does not plan wage reductions, despite action of the parent Western Electric Company.

Ernest Shipman Dead

Ernest Shipman, 59 years old, independent producer and distributor and at one time associated with J. D. Williams, is dead. Some of Shipman's productions, made in Canada, were distributed by the old First National Exhibitors Circuit.

HOLLYWOOD CONSIDERS THE UNIT

Florabel Muir delves into the past success of unit production and says it can be done again now

By FLORABEL MUIR

Nothing that has happened in Hollywood this year has so stirred the imagination and the hopes of the movie producers as the announcement of the new producing firm of Lewis Milestone and David Selznick. Nothing seems to hold out more hopes for the twenty-odd thousand exhibitors throughout the land who must stand or fall on the product that Hollywood grinds out for their theatres.

The effect of the Milestone-Selznick venture on Hollywood has been something akin to the rising up of a prophet among a people sorely ridden and beset by misfortune.

Everyone on the producing front knows and has known for a long time that there is something radically wrong with the crop of pictures ground out during 1930 and for a good portion of 1931. Everyone has been groping for light. Hollywood has tried to gorge the public on the red meat of sex and gangster violence, sophistication, nakedness, and wholesale murder, and the public stomach has revolted.

Producers Baffled

The producers, all of them, have been completely baffled. They have my sympathy, for I know how hard they've been trying. They are striving rather helplessly, it seems to me, to find their way out of a wilderness —and if Lew Milestone and David Selznick, or anyone else, can point the way to them they will hail them as deliverers.

Just now the great cry is "unit production." Here is the Moses that will take us to the promised land where the cash registers are as big as ice boxes and the musical tinkle of silver never ceases.

Well, will it?

Let's look for the answer first in the records of some of these producers. The fact that leaps at the inquirer immediately is that all of them without exception were producing on the "unit system" while making the reputations they're living on today.

Why Not Again?

Well, if they did it once, why can't they do it again? The answer to that one is that they can if they will. And if they are given the opportunity.

Nothing is truer than that motion pictures run in cycles. The first few years of motion picture production were necessarily years of unit production. There was no such thing as a release date. Pictures were made on a when, as, and if basis. The exhibitor went to his exchange and selected his film. States rights were peddled on big ones. The road show was in its heyday. The producer got his on film rentals and the gravy was plentiful and rich.

Changing times, changing conditions. Immense combinations were formed in the picture industry. Great theatre chains were linked together. Mass production necessarily had to be a part of the system—and mass production in time becomes stilted, deadened, lifeless, uninspired production. As inescapable as sleep.

In those young and hustling days Ben Schulberg was not supervising the manufacture of a feature picture every seven days. No. Ben was working hard getting out perhaps half a dozen a year for release under the banner of his Preferred Pictures—and Preferred Pictures were so box-office that Adolph Zukor was glad to re-employ his one-time publicity chieftain to take the helm of Paramount. Zukor and Lasky themselves were unit producers in the old days when Mary Pickford was starting—the Talmadges, the De Milles, and all that crew who made movie history.

Ince Always Unit Producer

Never was there a better illustration of unit production than the old Tom Ince outfit. Ince was always a unit producer. The first big competitor of Paramount and Fox, the company that looked like a sure winner and should have been, was the Triangle. A venture built around the idea of unit production.

That Triangle did not last was not the fault of the unit system but of other internal causes. D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince, and Mack Sennett were all essentially unit producers. Griffith never has been anything else. Sennett remains a unit producer to this day—and extremely successful.

In truth, the real giants of film production never have been able to discipline themselves to any other way of working. Neither can the giants of film production today. The making of motion pictures must be of its very nature a highly specialized, individualized task, absolutely contrary and opposed to the idea that lies behind mass production.

Created, Not Manufactured

Good pictures are created, not manufactured.

As typical an example as you'll find of a successful unit producer is Samuel Goldwyn. An intense individualist, Goldwyn instinctively abhors the notion of turning out pictures like Henry Ford turns out motor cars. He's happiest when he has two or three stars to keep busy and he assures me that it's a year's work any time to discover and produce stories enough to occupy them. This year Sam has taken over responsibility for all production activities of the United Artists Corporation and he has never worked harder in his life in the interest of his exhibitors than he is working now.

A few of the outstanding pictures made under the unit plan were "The Miracle Man," "The Sea Hawk"—turned out at First National by Frank Lloyd—"Abraham Lincoln," which established Al and Ray Rockett as producers, "Birth of a Nation" and every other Griffith film, all of the Mack Sennett comedies, all of the Harold Lloyd comedies, several notable successes accounted for by Edwin Carewe, the Thomas Ince melodramas, the entire product of that very successful trio, Asher, Small & Rogers—and, of course, several dozen others which I couldn't remember even if I had space to list them.

Believed In What They Did

The point is that one and all these films were the individual product of fellows who believed thoroughly in what they were doing, who did not try to make a picture until they had genuine faith in it and enthusiasm for it.

You didn't hand a story to a director because someone in the New York story department thought it would be a good vehicle for some favored star and say: "Here's your story, now give us a movie."

That's what directors have to contend with under the mass system.

The director can't rebel; his bread and butter are at stake. Many directors are equipped with pretty mediocre abilities for their jobs anyway. In fact, you can't find enough either competent directors or competent producers to make the number of films now demanded. You never will be able to find them because they do not exist.

The answer to this problem, in the words of Goldwyn, is, "fewer pictures and better ones."

Too Many Films Made

Goldwyn said to me:

"The day of fewer and better pictures has got to come. Far too many films are being turned out of the Hollywood hoppers today. It is an economic waste to change programs too and three times a week. I give you my word, a good picture can draw the crowd to a theatre for two and three weeks even in the smaller towns.

"Any exhibitor would rather book two good pictures a month than eight or ten poor and mediocre ones. He will gross more and at less expense. As conditions are now, the good productions have got to hold up the rest. If the exhibitor could depend on getting two good ones a month and did not have to put up with the burden and the adverse criticism and the public grumbling that follow in the wake of the poor ones I am sure he would be a happier and more prosperous citizen."

Sees Need of Weeding Out

Perhaps the unit system eventually will bring us to this felicitous situation. Everybody hopes so. But before Utopia arrives there will have to be a merciless weeding out in Hollywood. Most of the present crop of producers will have to go and a good working majority of the directors, players, writers, and supervisors. They are not temperamentally fitted to supply the greatest entertainment medium in the world with its stock in trade.

An indication of the trend, growing stronger all the time, is the present situation in the short subject field. When sound first came in there was a scramble on the part of the lords of mass production to capture this lucrative melon for themselves. Two-reelers and one-reelers were turned out actually by the thousands. They were, taken collectively, the worst aggregation of Hollywood product that the world has ever seen or ever will see.

Condition Changed Now

Today that condition has been drastically changed. Maybe Mickey Mouse did it; I don't pretend to know. But it is a fact that at the present time some of Hollywood's

C. E. Richardson of Equitable Trust New Fox Executive

Charles E. Richardson, from the investment service department of the Equitable Trust Company, subsidiary of the Chase National Bank, is to join the executive staff of Fox Film Corporation.

No official announcement of the connection has been made and it is expected that a formal statement will be forthcoming next week.

Mr. Richardson was unavailable for a statement and none was to be had from the Fox offices, or those of the Chase National Bank. However, in view of his activities with the Chase interests and the large Chase interest in Fox financing it is to be assumed that Mr. Richardson will be given duties in that connection with the Fox organization. If he is to be added to the roster of Fox vice presidents it will entail the usual confirmatory vote of the board of directors.

It is understood that this addition to the financial staff of the corporation in nowise affects the position or responsibilities of W. C. Michel, vice president and treasurer, with whom, presumably, Mr. Richardson will work. What with the multiplicity of Fox activities and the scope of problems involved now in production, distribution and exhibition this increase in executive personnel may be taken as nothing more serious than an endeavor to get more work done.

Mr. Richardson spent Thursday in conferences bearing on his new connection. He will formally take over his new post next week.

First Court Test of Zoning Plans On in Nebraska

The first test of the zoning agreements attempted last year throughout the United States is now being made in federal court at Lincoln, Neb.

Charges of combination, conspiracy and restraint of trade for the purpose of controlling distribution of motion pictures in Nebraska and Western Iowa are made in the suit filed by W. N. Youngclaus, exhibitor at Madison, Neb.

The defendants are all Omaha exchanges and managers, also Publix and the MPTO.

Youngclaus' theatre is outside the protected zone by one mile, but Publix mapped him in, giving 90 days protection for Publix theatres at Norfolk.

Youngclaus is supported by the Allied unit in his protest against the allegedly unfair control of bookings.

What Sam Katz Says About Pictures

"Now the product is here," says Sam Katz in 'Publix Opinion.' And here is a digest of his comment on outstanding productions for the new season:

" 'An American Tragedy' has everything that a really fine, outstanding money picture should have. . . . 'Smiling Lieutenant' is unquestionably another smash box office picture. The same may be said of 'Silence.' . . . The Four Marx Brothers' picture ('Monkey Business') is the funniest laugh vehicle ever seen on the screen. . . .

" 'Huckleberry Finn' is a great kid picture and is funnier than 'Tom Sawyer.' . . .Then there is 'Secrets of a Secretary,' which is a splendid love story with a selling title. . . . 'My Sin' is great! You will see a new Bankhead. . . .

"Following the stride set by Paramount, Metro will give us 'Politics,' 'This Modern Age' with Joan Crawford, and a great Garbo picture, 'Susan Lenox.' . . . Also 'Sporting Blood,' the finest, most moving and exciting racing story, from an unusual angle, ever made.

"There are two Constance Bennett pictures, 'Common Law,' from RKO-Pathe, and 'Bought' from First National, the latter particularly being a strong box office picture. First National will also give us George Arliss in 'Alexander Hamilton' and Edward G. Robinson in 'Five Star Final,' which, from all reports, should be a record breaker. From Fox we will have 'Young As You Feel,' with Will Rogers; 'Merely Mary Ann,' the Gaynor-Farrell box office natural; 'Transatlantic,' a most unusual and gripping picture with Edmund Lowe, and 'Bad Girl,' which can be safely counted upon for consistent big grosses. To top all this we have a Ronald Colman and an Eddie Cantor from United Artists."

Other pictures mentioned by Katz are "Born to Love," "The Black Camel," "The Miracle Woman," "Murder by the Clock," "Public Defender," "Night Nurse," "Guilty Hands," "A Free Soul," "The Magnificent Lie," "The Man in Possession."

Approval of Short Films Shows Big Increase

Number of Good Productions Must Be Growing, Says General Federation of Women's Clubs

Eighty-five per cent of all pictures released in the first six months of 1931 were recommended by one or more of the five important national organizations which have developed a systematic preview service through which they are enabled to send to their memberships printed estimates of picture suitability in advance of release.

This interesting analysis is made from the estimates of the motion picture committees of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, Los Angeles Women's University Club and Y. M. C. A. National Association.

Of the total of 201 feature pictures reviewed, these committees recommended 170, or 85 per cent, and 31, or 15 per cent, were not recommended.

The motion picture committee of the Kansas City Women's Club previewed 250 pictures during the year ended May 1, and formally recommended 215. The St. Louis Better Film Committee found only four "objectionable" features out of 86 checked at 51 neighborhood houses.

In 1930, the Catholic Alumnae endorsed 49 per cent of all pictures seen. The 1931 figure, based on averages to date, will show a 65 per cent endorsement. This association finds "a particularly noticeable difference in shorts," with the endorsement figure jumping from 35 per cent in 1930 to an expected 87 per cent in 1931.

"It must be that good pictures are on the increase, for we found an average of almost 20 a month," stated the General Federation of Women's Clubs, commenting on the figures.

Another interesting observation on the lists may be found in their classifications. Of the 170 pictures recommended in the initial half-year period of 1931, 101 were rated for family trade by the various associations, and 56 as especially suited and entertaining to children from 8 to 12 years old.

In several instances committee chairmen have stated that because 31 were not recommended, it should not be considered that the public groups considered them immoral. They pointed out that many were not on the list of recommendations only because they were considered not meritorious, being rated as of mediocre quality or below ethical standards.

Four hundred and 13 feature pictures reviewed by various public organizations in 1930 were endorsed out of a total of 457 reviewed.

The organizations sending out the endorsed lists as a rule do not print titles of pictures that have been objected to. The lists aim to build public appreciation

THE BANKER AND THE MOTION PICTURE

Election of a majority of bankers to the board of Fox Films is expected to increase conservatism

By THE ANALYST

Election of a majority of bankers to the board of directors of Fox Film Corporation is not likely to be followed by radical changes in the methods of the company in producing pictures as has been anticipated by those familiar with the attitude of financiers towards the industry when financing has been sought. While the present situation in the Fox company is the first in which bankers have had an actual voting control of a major motion picture company, banking influence has been the predominating factor in Paramount Publix Corporation and Loew's, Inc., for many years, and at various times has been in absolute control of most of the other companies.

Due to the friendship between Otto H. Kahn and Adolph Zukor, Paramount has had the benefit of the guidance of Mr. Kahn's great banking house, Kuhn, Loeb and Co., almost since the nucleus of the present company was organized. For more than a dozen years Kuhn, Loeb and Co. have been represented on the board of directors of the company, and, while numerically in a small minority, these representatives have been a predominating factor in matters in which they chose to concern themselves. The same association has been true between Loew's, Inc., and Lehmann Brothers. Wadill Catchings, of Goldman, Sachs and Co., as chairman of the Finance Committee of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., was the guide of that company through its period of expansion; Elisha Walker, of Bancamerica-Blair Corporation was, and still is, the boss of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and in the case of almost any company a predominant banking influence can be uncovered.

The activity of the banker in the motion picture industry, however, has been confined to that feature of it which he knows best, the financial conduct of the company in which he is interested.

The attitude of the banker who is being coaxed to enter the industry is much different from that of the one who is already in it. From the outside he can find plenty to criticize, can name a lot of methods which should be changed, but a considerable part of this attitude is founded only upon a desire to formulate a strong reason as to why he cannot go into the proposition which has been submitted to him.

Once the banker enters into the proposition, however, his attitude is changed. He has seen financial probabilities in the proposition as it has been conducted in the past, or he would not have been instrumental in supplying the money to permit it to continue or expand. Bankers are conservative. They can be filled with theories and discuss them pro and con, but it is seldom that they will put them into actual use unless the methods already in use have proved their inability to make money.

In the case of the Fox Corporation, it can be safely said that the election of a majority of bankers has increased the conservatism of the board. It might be, if the seven banking members of the board would vote together as a unit, that widespread financial changes would be made immediately. The recent reorganization of the capital structure of the company, in connection with the refunding of $55,000,000 in one year debentures, showed that disagreement is possible. Halsey, Stuart and Co. withdrew from the banking syndicate during the negotiations, and this firm had been bankers for the Fox Corporation for years and had a contract to continue as such with several years to run. With Halsey, Stuart out, it was several weeks before the interests still represented in the company could agree upon a refunding plan.

That it took considerable time for the present interests to agree upon a refunding plan should not be taken as an indication that the new board of directors of Fox Film Corporation will not function. It includes a strong representation of the best banking and business brains of the country. Bankers on the board are: Albert H. Wiggin, chairman of the Chase National Bank; Cornelius Vanderbilt, also of the Chase organization; Matthew C. Brush, president of the American International Corporation; David K. E. Bruce, son-in-law of Andrew Mellon, treasurer of the United States; Edward R. Tinker, president of the Interstate Equities Corporation; Philip R. Clarke, president of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, and Frank C. Watts, chairman of the First National Bank of St. Louis. Big business is represented on the board by Harley L. Clarke, who was, before he entered the motion picture industry, and still is, president of the Utilities Light and Power Company; George M. Moffett, president of the Corn Products Refining Company, and Charles W. Higley, president of the Hanover Fire Insurance Co.

The prominence of these men in their chosen professions is surety that the Fox board of directors will never become a "one man" organization. This will militate against sudden and radical reforms. Any move that is made will represent a consensus of all members of the board. Changes will occur, but they probably will be so gradual that even those members of the company who will be most affected will hardly realize, except in retrospect, that they are working under new methods.

The influence of the banker on the motion picture industry has been given much discussion in these strenuous, trying days of the industry. "The coming of the bankers" has been a text of some excitement in every American industry. There was furore about it in railways, the motor car industry, even the ice business, all in their day. The obvious fact is that there is always a time in every real industry when it gets to the size and complexity of operation which require that it shall relate itself to the rest of the economic and industrial mechanism of the world. Businesses which use money in appreciable quantities will have banker contacts, and mayhap bankers' influences. One may judge from the observations of the author of the following article, a well informed financial writer in Wall Street, that the banker is now in the motion picture business about as far as he is in most—and no farther.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THERE has been excitement popping at the home office of National Broadcasting ever since a Midwestern paper published a yarn mentioning President Aylesworth as successor to David Sarnoff, chief of Radio Corporation, which is NBC's "pop." . . .

Appearance of the story embarrassed Aylesworth with Radio higher-ups and a secret check was made to determine its source . . . with the result that Walter Stone, director of press relations, now is pounding the pavements . . . while Aylesworth has dispatched his trusty aid, "Johnny" Johnstone, to guide—and guard—the destinies of NBC's future relation with newspapers. . . .

Division managers of Fox Theatres, and home office heads who go in for stinging and "burn-'em-up" letters to managers in the field, are taken over the coals in the current issue of the company's house organ. . . . The severe rebuke concludes with the wise suggestion that this inconsiderate type of correspondence must cease if for no other reason than "Even if he (the manager) hasn't any other troubles, why add to the world's misery with tough correspondence? Especially when it injures the man who writes it as much as it embitters the man who receives it?" . . .

A masterpiece of thoughtfulness in business operation. . . .

This would be done, it is said, by using the studios on a closely tied-up deal for production of industrial reels which Western Electric now contracts to make for leading industrial concerns. . . .

Erpi, however, this week denied that a "trade" deal is in progress, . . . but further than that cared not to comment. . . .

Chicago coppers, when they heard of the yarn, jumped with glee "to hear of Spike's plans for a trip to England, although whether or not a movie contract is the reason for his exodus makes little difference just so long as he leaves!" . . .

CIRCUITS NOW BUYING COMPETITIVE PRODUCT THEY WERE BUILT AGAINST

Industry Struggles for Sufficient Pictures

Contracts Signed Or Negotiated Give Paramount, RKO Radio and Fox Four of Circuits

Fourteen years ago Thomas L. Tally and J. D. Williams came out of the West and First National Exhibitors Circuit was thrust upon the vision of an alarmed motion picture world. It was a pooling of buying power to support "independent" production.

Whereupon Famous Players-Lasky Corporation set about acquiring theatres in order to protect its outlets to the market.

This development in turn was followed by the formation of circuits by all other major companies.

Today the circuits formed to protect outlets have placed upon their owners a responsibility not entirely anticipated. In order to protect and support their protective machinery, each and all of the circuits are industriously buying the competitive product they were erected against.

Now Struggling for Product

Each and every motion picture concern, with the once powerful monopoly of the General Film Company as its ancestral model, started its career with at least an assumption of a possible position of independent dominance. General could, and intended to, do all the motion picture business in the world. Today and now, taken as an entity comprising all activities from studio to screen, no motion picture company could exist without its competitors, and amazingly enough the industry now strives and struggles for enough product to keep itself in operation.

How this has worked out is evidenced in a summarization of booking agreements entered into, or contracts now in prospect, for the five major theatre circuits—Publix, Warner Brothers, Loew's, Inc., RKO and Fox.

How Bookings Work Out

Contracts already signed, or with negotiations underway, give Paramount, RKO-Radio and Fox four of the circuits; with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers-First National, three. Universal is third with two circuits on a national booking basis.

Negotiations with circuits have not been concluded, however. On circuit bookings, distributors point out, it requires from two to three weeks on each to arrive at agreeable percentages and outright buys, and protection arrangements. Although the selling season started early, sufficient time has not elapsed, they say, for the final signing of contracts.

While no M-G-M pictures, so far, are listed in the Warner circuit bookings, it is understood from reliable sources that amicable terms have been reached. This, to date, has not been verified by either company.

Bookings Made By Chief Circuits For New Season

The following purchases by the five major circuits for 1931-32 represent, in most instances, national purchases. Sectional bookings, bookers say, will include "everything." In the 1931-32 bookings there has been little change from last year but an important change is the Publix-Warner case.

Thin Copper Band Makes New "Armor Plated" Film

Perforations in stock are protected by a thin copper band, which "armor plates" film. N. Pederson, president of recision Engineering Co., which will market it, is the inventor.

Pederson claims his process guarantees against tearing or breaks due to worn perforations and the copper band is so attached to the film that it cannot loosen, although it does not enter the photographic "field."

Tighter Censor Laws for Britain

British leaders, led by Lovat Fraser, M.P., and Sir Charles Robinson, are arranging for a conference at London on November 14, at which will be discussed ways and means of tightening England's motion picture censorship laws.

New Technicians' Unit in East Will Develop Talent

Instruction of youths in photographic and sound technique at Eastern universities is planned by the International Cameramen and Sound Technicians Union of the U. S. and Canada, of which Sherman Pratt, of Brooklyn, is manager and secretary.

Qualifications for acceptance of "apprentices" are a suitable primary education, 18 years of age and references as to character.

The new "union" was started recently and intends opening headquarters in New York where, it is said, a free employment service to members will be inaugurated. Pratt states that offices will be opened at a later date in key cities, inviting free-lance cameramen to join in an effort to build up a national association entirely divorced from the cinematographers' unions now existing in Los Angeles and New York, both of which concentrate in respective localities.

Radio City Theatre Plans Are Filed

Plans filed this week with the Manhattan Bureau of Buildings for the International Music Hall, a central unit of the projected Radio City in New York and to be the largest theatres in the world, call for a seating capacity of more than 6,000. This is to be the principal theatre of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum circuit. The entertainment center, over which S. L. Rothafel will preside, will include this theatre, a second silent theatre and the forum.

The plans, filed by Metropolitan Square Corporation, provide for a 31-story office and theatre building to extend from Fiftieth street to Fifty-first on the east side of Sixth avenue. RKO will lease most of the offices as well as the theatre.

Senator Davis Urges Congress To Use Films in Safety First Drive

In a radio address to be delivered on Friday night over WRA at Washington, Senator James J. Davis, Pennsylvania, will discuss automobile accident prevention, the solution to which he believes is in the production of a series of one reel films which will depict safety and first aid and which can be borrowed gratis by private individuals, educational institutions and by all classes of civic, military and religious organizations.

At the next Congressional session, Senator Davis will introduce a bill asking Congress to appropriate $50,000 for the series, which will mark the first time that Congress has been asked to recognize the motion picture as a medium in a campaign to conserve human life.

CIRCUITS SELLING AND TRADING

Stuart; Midwesco and Chicago, H. J. Fitzgerald. The de luxe theatres will continue under the management of the following: Roxy, New York, Charles E. Kurtzman; Fox, Brooklyn, Monty Salmon; Fox, Detroit, William H. Raynor; Fox, Washington, Harry Crull; Fox, St. Louis, Harry Greenman. The official Fox statement follows:

> The chain idea of theatre management is to be abandoned by the Fox Theatres Corporation. This revolutionary change in operation announced yesterday by Harry Arthur, general manager, at a meeting of division managers, will set a new standard in theatre operation and is expected to result in large economies.
> The system is to be completely decentralized. Theatres will be grouped into districts approximately the equivalent of the territory served by film exchanges with a general manager in complete charge of each district.
> "We are confident that great economies will result from the new system of management," said Mr. Arthur. "Under the new plan every theatre will be given the most intensive supervision. Complete responsibility will be placed on the general managers, who in most instances will be within a few hours of every theatre in their territory. The result of this will be very largely to decentralize and to localize theatre groups. In many instances those local interests which once were represented on the board of directors and who, to a large extent, still are stockholders of the subsidiary exhibitor companies will be invited to resume that contact.
> "The new arrangement should also prove a stimulus to all producing companies. Under the system in general use heretofore, district managers and theatre managers were compelled to use whatever pictures were made by the controlling producer. Under decentralized management, studios will be stimulated to produce more pictures that will stand on their own merit."
> A few of the larger theatres, classified as deluxe, will be operated as separate units. Practically all of the excessive cost of the home office will be eliminated immediately. Henceforth the home office will have more to do with service than with operation. The general managers will be responsible directly to the board of directors of each local company.

The opportunity to remark upon the circuit reversion trend was presented to a number of theatre operation executives, with the result, more remarkable than amazing, that they seemed entirely sure and happy about the circuit situation and its continued prosperity. From their statements one would gather that reversion is an idle rumor possibly due to heat vibrations.

"Could Add 500"—Plunkett

Joseph Plunkett, theatre head of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, and with the long prospering experience of the Strand on Broadway behind him, raised a booming voice, reverberating with the fervor of his feeling.

"We have always operated on an individual basis. I don't know what you papers mean by individually, or independently operated houses! Why, today we could add 500 theatres to our circuit—we have an organization that could handle them."

This is not, however, to be taken as any announcement, that Mr. Plunkett is adding any 500 theatres to RKO at this time.

"Our theatres are operated on an individual basis," he went on. "We don't put a de luxe man into a small-town house, nor do we put a small-town manager into a de luxe theatre.

District Managers in Charge

"Every district manager is accountable only to himself, unless business slumps. They have entire charge of operation of their houses. If they want to cut here, or add there, that is up to them. I get a monthly report of the business done by their houses. If it is not what it should be, or what I believe it should be, then I take it up with them.

"I have in my office statistics from all the spots in which we have theatres. I have been in these cities and towns, and I know what conditions are. But I do not interfere with the operation of those houses.

"I have Joe Lee over in Brooklyn. He is the type of man to handle those theatres. I don't interfere with him. Over in Jersey we have the small-town theatre, and we operate it as such. In other words, we give individual operation to all of our theatres."

The solution of circuit operation, Mr. Plunkett intimated, is "the elimination of the use of the rubber stamp at headquarters on Broadway."

At Loew's, it was implied that if circuits moved slowly and carefully, "choosing their new theatres with studied selection, and operating from a sound foundation, without rushing and grabbing theatres without thought, there need be no reversion of circuit houses to independent operation."

Loew's, it was said, "does not contemplate reversion of any sort."

"Unfair Criticism"—Franklin

Harold B. Franklin, long associated with Paramount theatres, later with West Coast, and now operating the Hughes-Franklin group, responding to a wire, says circuit operation has been "subject to a campaign of unfair criticism."

"As a matter of fact," he said, "the most notable successes in exhibition in the past have been attained through chain operation. I refer to such operations as Balaban & Katz, Saenger, Finkelstein & Ruben, Skouras Brothers, the original Stanley Company, West Coast and many others.

"To blame the economic situation upon chain operation is a short-sighted policy. Because of the temporary business condition, it is inconceivable that such commercial organizations as Woolworth, Atlantic & Pacific, and similar chain operations would for a moment consider giving up important links in their chains.

"Theatre operation has been hit hardest during this period because it is only a branch of an industry that depends directly on public support for its incoming prosperity. Production and distribution income is assured through obligations assumed by the theatres.

Need Greater Efficiency

"It is unreasonable to assume that circuit operation as an institution is unsound because of current and, I believe, temporary financial conditions. We are merely faced with a need for greater efficiency for cutting our cloth to fit the present pattern.

"During the fat years, wastefulness ran rampant. It is always difficult to curb excess in boom times. Operations gathered barnacles of extravagance. Over-expansion, over-organization, over-buying — these are the warp and woof of inflation. Executive management was too ready to delegate authority to subordinates, and because of that, directing heads in some instances lost the personal touch that goes with intimate control.

"Those who are responsible for the profitable conduct of business at the customer point should not be burdened with distant and unsympathetic home office red tape. They should be given every opportunity to get back to 'show' principles. Such a policy will encourage responsibility and stamina at a time when it is needed most."

"Decentralization" excites the daily press

The New York Times editorial page has been considerably bestirred by the Fox theatre decentralization announcement, and proceeds to take its pen in hand to address to the motion picture industry and the world the following poignant lines:

"A picture-theatre chain operating some 200 amusement houses in the East announces a new management policy. Great economies are predicted, and at the same time the standard of amusement offered to the public will be raised. Individual exhibitors will be emancipated from the tyranny of the producers, who will henceforth have to sell their wares on merit. Only two years ago there could not have been the least doubt as to the nature of the new plan that was to bring about such rich results. Two years ago it would have meant merger, or combination, or community of interests, or some other arrangement or device by which the aforesaid 200 theatres were united with another 200 or 400 or 800 theatres to constitute a better system than ever. It was the time when the only synonym for Better was Bigger. . . .

"Today the system from which the picture theatre concern in question expects great economies in management and a notable improvement in standards is 'decentralization.' It is a return to the quest of profits and quality through the opposite of mass production. It is a recognition of the fact that size does not always mean economy, efficiency and improved product. . . .

"All through the announcement the emphasis is on concentration, on local and regional interest, on the individual theatre. The largest theatres in the system are to be independently operated. But only two years ago it almost had become inconceivable that theatres—or other business concerns—could make money and produce good things unless a super-Napoleon sat at a solid gold desk and refused to think of fewer than thousands of theatres or less than fifty million customers."

Chicago Closings Threaten to Jar Protection Plans

Disruption of Chicago's protection schedules is threatened by the closing of more than one hundred theatres there. Bookings of the closed houses have been canceled pending a settlement of the two-projectionists dispute with the operators' union. If the exhibitors win their point and a one-projectionist policy is endorsed by the union, the theatres—at least the large majority of them—will reopen.

Adjustments Asked

At the same time, the theatres remaining open are requesting adjustments of release schedules to meet the new situation, and the problem before the exchanges is to disrupt the city release program or have large quantities of film lying unused until a settlement is reached.

Then, too, if the theatres do not reopen until September all the August releases may go unplayed in the closed houses, as it is considered improbable that the reopened theatres would consent to playing August releases in September while other houses are playing the new product.

Several exchange managers say there is a legal problem also involved in determining whether the theatre closings come under the "strike" clause in the contracts relieving the exhibitor from rental liability. The losses to exchanges because of the closings are estimated at $25,000 a week.

Canavan Upholds Union

Independent theatres involved in the wholesale closing late in the week rejected compromise proposals to iron out the difficulties with the operators.

William Canavan, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, supports the two-projectionists edict of the Chicago union, but adds that the Chicago union is handling the fight there. If it ever were decided on a one-operator basis, Canavan intimated, he would consider revoking the Chicago charter.

Tom Maloy, indicted business agent of the Chicago local, said there was little likelihood that Allied leaders would be successful in their ultimatum that there must be a return to one-man operation or the Illinois Allied exhibitors would close their theatres. He declared that the agreement does not run out until January 11, 1932, and that he will not join in any conferences before that time.

Edward Donovan, reputed "slugger" and gunman for the operators' union, has been arrested and charged with the murder of Jacob Kaufman, insurgent union member who was shot to death just before he was to have testified to the grand jury concerning Maloy's regime as "czar" of the union.

So the Public May Know—

The unreasonable demands of the Motion Picture Operators' Union have reached a climax. Dictators in control of this Union are attempting to place a burden on the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of such excessive nature that, in times like these, they are nothing short of actual confiscation of our business.

Rather than accede to these demands, we are closing our theatres, numbering over one hundred, tonight.

So that the public may know, here are the facts:

The Motion Picture Operators' Union has decreed that two men be in the operator's booth at all times at salaries ranging from $90.00 to $175.00 per week per man for only thirty-two to forty-five hours of employment weekly.

This demand is unreasonable, as only one operator is necessary to operate the projection machine. In fact, over 12,000 motion picture theatres in the United States are operating efficiently and safely with one operator.

In other words, the Motion Picture Operators' Union demands that we employ and pay two men at high salaries to do the work of ONE.

We ask you to bear with us in our fight for fair play. We have no quarrel with Union Labor. We want you, the Public, to support the action taken by us as Motion Picture Theatre Owners. Any reasonable person can see that it is unfair, un-American and unjust to demand that we employ two men to do the work of ONE.

Upon receipt of twelve hours' notice that the Operators' Union will furnish one Union operator per shift, we will reopen our theatres, and thereby put back to work several thousand innocent employees who have been thrown out of work because of the unreasonable demands of the Motion Picture Operators' Union.

This advertisement, which appeared in Chicago Sunday newspapers, exemplifies the efforts being made to win the sympathy of the public to the cause of the exhibitors in the controversy with the operators' union. The union demands two men in the booth and is maintaining a wage scale which the exhibitors brand as oppressive.

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

SEPTEMBER, the pivotal month of the year in the theatre business, is just up the street from us now. The studios are rushed to the limit of their capacity completing important films scheduled for fall release. A few have stolen a march on the others and have had their late summer premieres. In every line of motion picture making there is the hustle and bustle of preparedness—and a conscious optimism.

To that steadily increasing percentage of the public interested more in the quality than the quantity of production the programs announced for the coming season are heartwarming. Every large producing company and practically all of the smaller ones have risen to the demand for family audience pictures.

September will see the beginning of a new era in juvenile pictures. To the theatre man who brings something of imagination and artistry to the building up of his programs there will be a new opportunity for the selection of outstanding short features. The coming year will have travelogues in natural color; adventure pictures taken in strange corners of the earth that will be of importance as educational drawing cards, and an effective means for interesting educators and school people in your higher class programs. There are several important football stories in the making which are timed for their openings in October. A few of the companies are making juvenile comedies in one and two reels, and there are three series of detective story thrillers in the two-reel form nearing completion.

The Rising Tide

The tide has turned in picture making and we are on the crest of better things. It has been coming in through the summer weeks with increasing volume, in fuller flood than we have realized. The preview groups in the national organizations engaged in distributing motion picture estimates to their memberships have been steadily at their work throughout the summer. Practically all of these groups publish a July-August list and these, in the past week, have had their summer releases. One of the most critical of them has appended to the list of endorsed pictures the following printed notice: "We are glad to call your attention to this crowded list. It is the first time in ten years that this Bureau has had more endorsed pictures through the usually lean summer period than we could accommodate on a four-page folder. Notwithstanding the fact that we are enduring a minor cycle of oversexed pictures, the majority of pictures are cleaner and finer."

These selective lists compiled independent of industry affiliation have become dependable barometers. Their present reading predicts fair weather at the box office.

September Suitability

Saturday, September 5 . . LABOR DAY (September 7) First Monday in September.

Labor Day is the official working man's holiday in the United States. It is the end of summer's vacationing and an important day to take cognizance of it in your theatre.

Cards announcing a special program for the occasion, or a Junior Matinee, might bear reprints of some of the famous pictures by great artists which reflect the spirit of the day, as, for instance, "Angelus," "The Gleaners," "Going to Work," all by Millet; "The Shepherd and His Flock" by Rosa Bonheur; "Morning" and "The Hand of Labor" by Breton.

This is an official holiday and your flag should be hung in a correct and prominent position. A leader of the community might be invited as a guest of honor to tell briefly the origin and some of the customs of Labor Day and its differentiation to Europe's Labor Day on May 1, which unlike the spirit of our's is characterized by unrest.

Public holidays are good days for family audience pictures. Consult MOION PICTURE HERALD's recently printed list of "Selections" for a booking that will not fail you at the box office.

Suitable shorts for Labor Day would be:

"Labor Day" (Fitzpatrick Holiday Short), All Star, 1 reel.

"Body Building," a Grantland Rice Sportlight. RKO-Pathe, 1 reel.

"Stamina," another Sportlight. RKO-Pathe, 1 reel.

"Plasterers" (comic sketch), Paramount, 1 reel.

"Village Barber" (cartoon), M-G-M, 1 reel.

"Village Smitty" (cartoon), M-G-M, 1 reel.

LAFAYETTE-MARNE DAY (September 6). This double anniversary is of particular interest to those communities of French origin or historic affiliation. The Marquis De Lafayette (1757-1834), whose birthday is celebrated on September 6, was a French general and patriot and a staunch friend to the young United States. In the World War, the Battle of the Marne on September 6 became a turning point date in the history of the world. In every city and town the Battle of the Marne may well be recalled by some appropriate reference in theatres, schools and clubs.

Suitable features would be:

"Iron Mask" (French History), United Artists, 8855 ft., Syn.

"Comrades" (World War Drama), Coop., 6 reels. Silent.

"Marianne" (World War Comedy), M-G-M. 10,282 ft. Sound.

"Glorious Betsy" (French History), Warner. 7440 ft. Syn.

NOTE: This is a particularly charming picture, and though two years old is well worth your booking.

Shorts:

"Aces Up" (cartoon of the war), RKO-Radio. 1 reel.

"The Americans Come" (Musical), U. A. 1 reel.

"Bully Beef" (Terrytoon animals in trenches), Educational. 1 reel.

"Men Without Skirts" (Comedy-doughboys in France), RKO-Radio. 2 reels.

"Parlez Vous" (Comedy, soldier life in France), Universal, 2 reels.

"So Quiet on the Canine Front" (Dogville comedy of World War—an addition to any program.) M.G-M 2 reels.

These combined anniversaries afford an opportunity to hang the American and French flags together, and the playing of the French national anthem as well as the Stars and Stripes.

HARVEST FESTIVAL, SEPTEMBER 11.

The following interesting paragraph is taken from the book "Anniversaries and Holidays": "The increasing emphasis upon community gatherings and revival of old world traditions is restoring the picturesque harvest festival in many communities. This is especially true where there are large foreign groups that appreciate the use of parks and playgrounds for a harvest festival of the nations. It is an important way to help on Americanization."

A foyer decorated with autumn leaves, boughs of fruit trees, corn and grape and the late flowers would be an attraction for children who, in their school work, are taught an intelligent understanding of the farmer's problems and the significance of the harvest. A representative of the agricultural department of any school might be invited to talk to your Junior Matinee on climate, tides, winds, blight and rains as they effect the work of the farmer.

Features:

"Evangeline," United Artists, 9 reels. This date offers a good reason for bringing this beautiful picture to your people.

Shorts:

"The Year" (Four Seasons), Pathe.

"Autumn" (Silly Symphony), Columbia. 1 reel.

"And the Green Grass Grew All Around" (Comedy song cartoon), 1 reel.

"The Animal Fair" (Fable), RKO-Pathe, 1 reel.

"Barnyard Concert" (Mickey Mouse Cartoon) Columbia.

"Barnyard Melody" (Fable) RKO-Pathe. 1 reel.

"Farm Relief" (Krazy Kat Cartoon) Columbia. 1 reel.

"Flower Garden" MGM. 2 reels.

"In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" (song cartoon). Paramount.

"King of Bugs" (Fable) RKO-Pathe.

"Old Hokum Bucket" (Fable) RKO-Pathe. 1 reel.

"Land of Evangeline," Talking Picture Epics.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, has a double opportunity for patriotic reference. General John Joseph Pershing's birthday is on September 13, while Constitution Day is on September 17. Both of these dates offer opportunity to invite as guests of honor Daughters of the American Revolution, Daughters of the American Colonists, executives of the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, Colonial Dames and local officers of the American Legion.

Features:

"Dawn Patrol" (World War Drama), First National. 9,450 ft. Sound.

"Doughboy" (World War Comedy), MGM. 6,840 ft. Sound.

Shorts:

"The Americans Come" United Artists, 1 reel.

"Here's Luck" (A.E.F. comedy), Universal.

JAMES FENIMORE COOPER, birthday September 15.

The author of the Leatherstocking Tales, which include "The Deerslayer," "The Pathfinder," "The Last of the Mohicans" and "Pioneers," is known through his writings and loved by every eager American boy. His birthday is a good day for a tieup with a popular book store, and with the organized scouts in your local schools. Members of writers clubs, book clubs, teachers of English should be your guests of honor at a Junior matinee featuring Cooper, his times and his books.

Features:

"The Lash" (California in 1846). First National. 7,110 ft. Sound.

"Big Trail" (Pioneer Epic), 9,720 ft. Sound.

"The Great Meadow (Pioneers), MGM. 7,243 ft. Sound.

"Overnight Telegraph" (Telegraph-Indians), MGM. 4,815 ft. Silent.

"Fighting Through" (Early West), Tiffany, 5,462 ft. Sound.

"Sons of the Saddle" (frontier days), Universal, 6,926 ft. Sound.

Shorts:

"Little Indian Weaver," RKO-Pathe. 1 reel.

"Bow and Arrow" (Sportlight), RKO-Pathe, 1 reel.

"Little Covered Wagon" (Chimpanzee comedy), Tiffany, 2 reels.

Exhibitor Can Start Business Revival In Community by Buying Now: Brandt

Exhibitors are key factors in the prosperity of their communities and by adopting a "Buy Now—Spend Now" campaign they can pave the way for immediate betterment of business conditions in their localities, says Joe Brandt, president of Columbia.

"All too frequently," Brandt said, "the importance of the exhibitor in his local community is overlooked both by the public—and unfortunately by himself. He fails to realize that his theatre is the hub of all community activities. Consciously or otherwise, he wields a tremendously important influence. Therefore, if he were to adopt the slogan, 'Buy Now—Spend Now,' and amplify his words by deeds, it is inevitable that the rest of the community fall in line and the obvious effect—immediate betterment of conditions.

"During the period of depression, through which they have passed, all too many showmen have allowed the physical appearance of their properties to run down. Marquees now need refurbishing; theatre fronts need repainting; interiors need redecorating.

"In other words, the exhibitor has within his power the ability to start the wheels of prosperity by revolving activities around his own establishment and the result is work for many people. The money thus invested in labor is bound to return many fold, because once in the possession of these workers, it will affect, not only their expenditures for motion picture entertainment, but also the welfare of every merchant in that community.

"Increased prosperity on the part of these merchants will ultimately be reflected at the exhibitor's box office.

"A theatre that has been redecorated acts as a stimulus to the other merchants in the community and before long, it is conceivable they, too, would follow the example set and have their places painted and brightened up. Thus, more money is put into circulation and the general economic improvement evidenced through the ordering of new fixtures, supplies and merchandise."

McGuirk, Others Sued for Million

John J. McGuirk, former president of the Stanley Company, was named with eight other Philadelphians, including Charles Denby, Jr., lawyer and son-in-law of U. S. Senator David A. Reed, as defendant in a $1,000,000 suit for damages for alleged failure to proceed with the organization of a company for the manufacture of colored films.

Plaintiffs are United Film Industries. Defendants, besides McGuirk and Denby, include Walter Eckhardt, Bernard R. Cohn, Abe Sablosky, Lewis Sablosky, Harry O. Schwalber and Charles Segall.

Defendants are declared to have interested themselves in organizing a company in 1928, to be known as Wolff-Heide Photo-Chemical Co. for exploitation of a color process, manufacture of which was at that time invested in the Photochrome A-C., of Switzerland. Plaintiff claims that after a stock interchange, the defendants secured control of Photochrome, and then refused to go through with negotiations to finance a new company with the result that the plaintiffs feel that they have suffered $1,000,000 loss.

Blue Law Fight On Again at Wichita

The fight for Sunday shows in Wichita, Kan., has been resumed, with Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Barron leading the way, with the support of the Greater Wichita Merchants Association.

Mrs. Barron, owner and manager of the Kansas theatre at Wichita, and Mr. Barron, manager at Pratt, Kan., had their theatres open last Sunday and intend to maintain this policy until the matter has been fought to a finish. The ultimatum of County Attorney George L. Adams, in line with his determination to enforce the state law, was challenged by Mrs. Barron.

Dark Theatres Ahead for Mexico

Taxation on non-Spanish talkers, raised from $2.75 to $50 per kilo is expected in Mexico to close all picture houses in the republic by August 31. Importation is made practically impossible, while domestic production is practically nil, a fact which Mexican authorities who sponsored the bill overlooked in their desire to "protect" Spanish pictures.

But It's Big Problem for Home Producers

Warner Is Latest to Announce Invasion and Universal Studio in September Is Reported

(London Bureau of the HERALD)

British exhibitors are welcoming the American producers' invasion, Warner and First National being the latest to announce their plans to produce in England. It also is reported that Universal will establish a studio in England in September.

But while British exhibitors see in the movement a solution of the booking problem presented by the quota requirements, how the home producers will react to this series of frontal attacks is something else again.

Favorable Reception

Radio forces were the first to break into the British production field, and the industry already has seen the two first pictures made in England. Paramount was the next invader and its initial effort had a very favorable reception at its recent premiere (incidentally, "These Charming People" seems to suit the British public, and the Plaza's walls have been bulging day in, night out). And now comes Jack Warner, "vacationing" in London, to set the trade by the ears with an announcement that his company is to go into immediate production in England with a schedule of at least fifteen pictures a year.

Exhibitors without a doubt will welcome the intrusion, for, the quota machinery being relentless, they often find themselves unable to book the British pictures that the law compels. It is, indeed, not infrequent that a defaulter on the magisterial carpet will plead that he is boycotted by the British distributors because of the manner in which their product automatically is booked into their own houses.

But what of the home producers? Perhaps they feel their strength is in their own theatres, but even so the challenge is serious as regards their outside bookings. And if what we have seen of the Anglo-American units is any criterion, there will be needed the infusion of a dash of ginger into our home-bred product to keep it up to the standard of quality that the newcomers already have created.

An Eye Opener

Though not altogether palatable to the English mind, it is none the less true that, until these international units showed them, the British public was not given a chance to appreciate what great film material—so far as the home market is concerned, anyway—is to be found in the British countryside and our own institutions. While American films were disseminating publicity for America, if needs be claiming the cooperation of the public authorities, social, civil, and so forth, we over here have appeared studiously to ignore the opportunities offered.

Claiming Exact Position With Three-Lens Turret

Three lenses of any size necessary for presentation of sound on film, disc or wide film, has been developed in a new three-lens turret to be marketed by Basson & Stern, Brooklyn.

The turret, it is claimed, makes possible exact position register. Each lens has a separate focusing device, and there are also provided adjustments for up-and-down and sideways movements of each lens, thus insuring exact lineup of the picture on the screen without the necessity of shifting the projector, according to the turret's developer.

Allied May Test Protection

"It is believed that within a short while two cases will be instituted in Allied territory to test the legality of the protection being imposed in the situations affected in favor of affiliated chain houses and against independent theatres," according to a statement from Allied's national headquarters at Washington.

Paramount, Carroll Contract; Universal and Boles in Wrangle

Universal is understood to be disturbed over its contract with John Boles and the differences are scheduled to be ironed out at a Universal City confab on Friday when both will discuss the elimination of the guarantee which gives Boles $100,000 yearly whether or not he works. His weekly stipend is $3,000.

The Nancy Carroll row with Paramount was ironed out this week when it was decided to continue her former $800 weekly salary, plus a bonus.

Films for Fire Prevention Week

Theatres, studios and exchanges are urged by the National Fire Prevention Association to "clean house" during "National Fire Prevention Week," October 4-10.

The association has collected 36 short reels which may be used by individuals and civic organizations in promotiong the drive against carelessness.

Paramount Votes Dividend in Stock Instead of Cash

Paramount Publix directors, at their meeting held this week, declared a dividend of 2½% in stock, equal to 1/40th of a share of common stock for each share held, payable on September 30, to stockholders of record on September 4.

President Adolph Zukor, in commenting upon the action of the board in declaring a stock instead of a 62½c. cash dividend, stated:

"Earnings of Paramount Publix for the first six months are conservatively figured (partly estimated) at $5,700,000, equal to $1.82 per share on stock outstanding. Records of the company show that during the last eight years the Company has averaged approximately 40% of its annual net income in the first six months of the year, and 60% in the second six months.

Cash Balance $8,400,000

"Company's consolidated cash balance on June 30th, is calculated at about $8,400,000. Bank loans outstanding at the same date were $5,000,0000.

"Ordinarily, therefore, no question would arise as to the continuance of cash dividends on the stock, as long as the ratio of current assets to current liabilities is, as it is now calculated to be, not below two to one and the ratio of tangible assets to indebtedness remained at least 1½ to 1, the maintenance of which ratios is required by the indentures securing the 5½% and 6% Bonds of the company, as a condition for the payment of cash dividends. Consideration must be given, however, in the spirit of due conservatism, to the following circumstances:

Payment Made in Stock

"Some time ago the company purchased certain theatres and other assets which it then believed, and still believes, to be valuable acquisitions, obtained at a fair and reasonable figure. At the time these purchases were effected, payment was made in Paramount Publix stock, with the right, however, to the vendors, within a certain time, to exchange such stock for cash at a price which would realize an amount which was not in excess of what the company did and still does consider a fair price for those theatres and other assets. Naturally, with the change in market conditions that has since supervened, it is more advantageous to the vendors to take cash at the figure agreed upon rather than stock. A certain portion of the total amount involved in this transaction has already been called for by the vendors and paid out of current cash resources prior to June 30th. As to the balance, aggregating approximately $11,500,000, it must be expected that a similar course will be pursued by the vendors.

"It should be understood that these transactions simply mean that the company is paying cash instead of stock, for the assets acquired. Normally, the capital expenditures thus called for would be met on the part of the company by the sale of securities to the public, but, in view of prevailing market conditions, it is not considered an appropriate course or in the best interest of its shareholders to dispose of either stock or long term obligations at this time."

Friends and Lovers

(RKO Radio)

Drama

A husband uses his wife as a decoy for blackmail. She falls in love—and the complications are the theme of "Friends and Lovers," formerly titled "Wine in the Blood," an RKO Radio picture which a Hollywood audience found mildly entertaining.

While the three principals, Lily Damita, Adolphe Menjou and Laurence Olivier, gave well-liked performances, the enthusiasm of those present was more pronouncedly for Frederick Kerr, as a delightful old roue, and Erich von Stroheim as a humorous blackmailer. The dialogue by Wallace Smith and the direction of Victor Schertzinger also excited comment.

The story is taken from the novel, "The Sphinx Has Spoken," by Maurice De Kobra.

Captain Roberts (Adolphe Menjou) falls in love with Alva (Lily Damita), decoy wife of Victor Sangrito, who blackmails the officer and the captain pays the 5,000 pounds, not knowing that Alva is in league with her husband. Alva finds herself in love with Roberts, but goes on with her blackmailing when Roberts returns to India. Now Alva acquires a new lover, Lieutenant Nichols (Laurence Olivier) and when Nichols is transferred to Roberts' command the two become enemies. Nichols is wounded by the natives and Roberts rescues him. They become friends. They meet Alva again in London and Roberts again is becharmed by her, whereupon Nichols tries to kill the both of them. Alva takes the wide road of Paris night life, but Nichols finds her and restores her to Roberts.

Supervised by William LeBaron and Louis Sarecky. Directed by Victor Schertzinger. From a novel by Maurice de Kobra. Adaptation by Jane Murfin. Screen play and dialogue, Wallace Smith. Art director, Max Ree. Assistant director, Sam Nelson. Cameraman, Roy Hunt. Sound recordist, Hugh MacDowell.

Fanny Foley Herself

(RKO Radio)

Comedy drama

Technicolor photography on the new high-speed film drew special attention in RKO Radio's "Fanny Foley Herself," taken from Juliet Wilbur Thompkins' story, with Edna May Oliver, standard vaudeville headliner, featured in the cast. The picture was viewed in Hollywood.

Fanny Foley (Miss Oliver) has been supporting her husband and two grown daughters with her salary as a comedienne of the vaudeville stage. The girls do not know she is a stage star. It is at the end of a particularly successful appearance that she receives word of the death of her husband aboard ship as he is bringing the girls home from a European tour.

The father-in-law offers to make the daughters his heiresses if their mother will leave the stage. She refuses. The girls learn of her career and are mortified. They leave school and take jobs, insisting that she come to live with them. At last she compromises with the father-in-law and he settles the three of them in a cottage on his estate. Then he tries to win them from their mother. She has told them that their benefactor is a former sweetheart of hers. The father-in-law hears of this, invites them to his mountain camp and they leave her.

She learns they are in difficulties and flies to them, making a parachute leap to safety in the rain and fog. She finds one of the girls has eloped with a poor boy and Fanny is overjoyed. She tells her father-in-law what's what and he asks her forgiveness. He adopts the other daughter and urges Fanny to return to the stage that she loves.

Rochelle Hudson has the first important assignment as Carmen, the daughter who elopes. Helen Chandler is the other daughter. Hobart Bosworth is their grandfather in the picture.

Carey Wilson, who did the adaptation and dialogue, and Mel Brown, the director, both took advantage of the humanness of the story.

Western

This western has action throughout. There is the triangle of ranchers, rangers and rustlers but there are several unusual turns to the picture.

Two honest rangers are set to fighting by the rustlers, who then murder both of them. Circumstantial evidence might lead to the conclusion that they have shot each other, but Ken Maynard, as the son of one of the slain ranchers, solves the mystery.

Besides the thrilling escapes there is hard and spectacular riding by Maynard. The cast includes Virginia Brown Faire, Frank Mayo and Charles King. Phil Rosen did the directing.

Graft

(Universal)

Melodrama

The duel between the corrupt candidate for political office and the choice of the reform party is the theme of "Graft," and whether the subject-matter was new or old made no difference to the preview audience at the Glendale theatre in California which literally cheered the production with its story of intrigue, kidnaping, murder and pursuits.

The central figure of the production is a cub reporter, the kind of cub reporter whom Lady Luck takes by the hand to guide him stumblingly and blindly into the story.

Through a discharged girl employee the district attorney is provided with sufficient evidence to indict the crooked party leader, but then the girl is kidnaped and the district attorney is slain.

That's where the cub reporter comes into the picture. He solves the crime and wins the daughter of the mayor-elect. She is Sue Carol and Regis Toomey is the cub. The audience took to Toomey's portrayal from the start and applauded the arrival of the police aboard the yacht on which he had been imprisoned.

Dorothy Revier was the kidnaped girl and Boris Karloff and William Davidson the villains. Christy Cabanne was credited with maintaining the swift action of a silent picture, but the story and dialogue in themselves presented surprise turns to enhance the action.

The story has Bob Custer, a bandit, resolving to go straight after the gang is pretty well broken up. He meets up with Blanco Kid, a former associate, as Blanco is framing the ranch owner's daughter into marrying him. Custer intercedes and wins the good graces of the girl. Later he is made foreman of the ranch. When he breaks up the robbery plans of the Blanco Kid, his past is revealed, but that means nothing when the ranch owner's daughter intervenes in his behalf.

Will plays the role of a razor blade manufacturer out to tie up the market on damascus steel. His antics on the boat and later in the desert afford plenty of laughs and opportunities for the Rogers philosophy and drollery. Romance is supplied by Joel McRae and Peggy Ross. All of the cast is quite adequate, but, as usual in Rogers pictures, this is pretty much all Will.

The Sidewalks of New York

(MGM)

Comedy

Old-fashioned slapstick without camouflage, and gags without any smokescreen, prevail in Buster Keaton's latest picture, "The Sidewalks of New York." Furthermore, it was just what the preview audience at the Alexander theatre in Glendale, Cal., was looking for, judging from its enthusiastic reception of the production.

Keaton's rough and tumble antics are augmented by Cliff Edwards who was responsible for many chuckles. Anita Page has a sort of background role as a typical New York flapper, all the scenes, as the title implies, being laid around the streets of that city.

Whether there was much plot or coherence to the story was not the question before the patrons. They came to laugh, and they did.

The story is by George Landy and Paul Gerard Smith and the direction in the hands of Zion Meyers and Jules White.

Directors, Jules White and Zion Myers. Story by George Landy and Paul Gerard Smith. Dialogue by Robert E. Hopkins and Eric Hatch. Photographed by Leonard Smith. Film editor, Charles Hochberg.

SHORTS

Knocking 'Em Cold

(Vitaphone)

Good comedy

Outstanding in the comedy of Vitaphone's "Knocking 'Em Cold" is the sequence in which an actor friend insists upon keeping one jump ahead of Andrew Tombes, boastful ham, in all his gags. The story is about actors and how Tombes' act is soured by his boarding house associates. His girl outwits them by giving him a new act as well as courage.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Mail

Good Cartoons

Though the dialogue and singing are all in Russian, the cartoons are well produced—and the picture is called the first Russian cartoon with sound and music. A mailed letter has in it a caterpillar and a leaf. The many processes of mailing them are shown before the letter is received and the butterfly appears.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Silent Partner

(Vitaphone)

Lots of fun

Billy Gaxton provides a lot of merriment-giving situations in this picture. How to keep the wolf on the other side of the latch is the problem. Billy has an option on a piece of property and finally disposes of it to his aunt's sweetheart after some skillful dodging of the collectors.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Naggers at the Races

(Vitaphone)

Laughs

There are laughs in this picture of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Norworth. They take a flier to the racetrack and tips is tips to the credulous Jack. And there are times when the both of them are nuisances to the other spectators.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Forehand, Backhand, Service

(M-G-M)

Sports

William ("Big Bill") Tilden launches a group of tennis reels amid breath-taking action on the court where he lays the basic foundation of an intimate knowledge of the fine points of this interesting game. Tilden photographs well and his enunciation is perfectly clear, both of which do much to enhance the entertainment value which reaches its height when Tilden reveals his championship strokes. Action is set on a private court which has as a background the picturesque landscape of a West Coast club. Running time, 9 minutes.

The Buffalo Stampede

(No. 6 of Vitaphone's Adventures in Africa")

Interesting

Water buffalo and tsetse fly vie for honors in this issue of the adventures series out of the chapters of expeditionary thrills of Dr. Wynant D. Hubbard's expedition. The water buffaloes win, because the shots show several of them captured. The dialogue keeps pace with the action.—Running time, 9 minutes.

A Burglar to the Rescue

(Universal)

Mystery play

This, the first of a series of mystery plays, concerns a crooked banker who had managed by chicanery to have an employee jailed. When he again finds himself short on his books he organizes a fake holdup. In the background, and retarding the action, is The Shadow, mystery figure of "Detective Stories." Running time, 18 minutes.

Gangway

(Vitaphone)

Funny

Joe Penner's comedy drew a good reception from the audience at the New York Strand. The story is of Joe's adventures when he substitutes for a gangster at a fashionable party and outwits some crooks, putting on the finishing touches with his song act.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Roamin' In the Gloamin'

(M-G-M)

Songs

Sir Harry Lauder sings "Roamin' in the Gloamin'" and "The End of the Road," two pieces for which he is popular. The reel was made in England by Welsh-Pearson, imported to the U. S. by Arthur Lee and as one of a series, disposed of to M-G-M. Sound is on a par with the American standard and production is average, though action slows down because of limited sets. Lauder has been placed on an unattractive stage as a music hall performer, in his native Scotch dress, and the invisibility of the audience, whose supposed voices are heard, creates a tempo of unreality. The usual humorous Lauder chatter fills in between songs. Running time, 10 minutes.

Old Songs for New

(Welshay)

Something New

Here is a new and wholly entertaining slant on the musical picture situation. Handsomely mounted and beautifully photographed in Technicolor, it is one reel of fast comedy, reminiscent of the "gay nineties" and old favorite tunes that thrilled our grandmothers, our mothers and—in some cases—us.

Bob Welsh and Frank Shea engaged Georgie Stoll's band, which is a pip, and built around it a clever little story of the Sousa march days, the Anna Held days, the Barber Shop Quartet days. It is a swell little revue, all packed into nine minutes. Full of laughs, tuneful numbers and excellent color added, it seems like the perfect recipe for a novelty single reeler.

The Panic Is On

(M-G-M)

Comedy

In this one Hal Roach gives Charles Chase a current—but unpopular—theme in which to work. Depression, hard times, economic slump and more depression are supposed to provide the background for comedy, but it appears difficult to reconcile both factors. Charley's intended father-in-law sets up the usual barrier for the daughter's hand by decreeing that the engagement cannot take place until Chase acquires $50,000. This is accomplished when Charley, after learning the "power of will and dominance in business," unknowingly joins a gang of blackmailers who seek $50,000 from James Morgan. Chase is assigned to the job and not until the gang fades out of the picture does he learn that Mr. Morgan is the girl's dad. The market crashes and Morgan finds himself on the same low economic plane as Chase. The rest can be guessed. Running time, 20 minutes.

Love Tails of Morocco

(M-G-M)

Dog Comedy

Predecessors in the Dogville comedy series are understood to have built up a reputation for this group. But few can surpass this one in production, intelligence in handling, story, dialogue and presentation all of which makes for an unusually splendid piece of entertainment. It is a burlesque on the influences which prompt adventurers and runaways to join the French Foreign Legion. The dogs turn in remarkable performances, and dialogue, of humans, which ofttimes tickles the ribs, fits perfectly. Running time, 16 minutes.

Radio Rhythm

(Universal)

Amusing effects

Some amusing effects have been achieved in this Oswald, the Rabbit cartoon, in the radio concert put on by the barnyard group. The cartoon has its familiar lines, but it ranks well in the series. The picture is directed primarily toward the interest of children. Running time, 7 minutes.

Hollywood Talks Unit Production

best talent is being exerted in the short subject field. Several two-reelers that I have had the good fortune to view in recent months have been far superior considered as entertainment to the seven-reel feature that was the piece de resistance of the program. Walt Disney went from a shoestring to a fat fortune in a couple of years with Mickey Mouse. Just now Bob Welsh and Frank Shea are turning out a series of two-reelers with both music and color that Paramount is snapping up eagerly. Mack Sennett, virtually closed down for a long time after the entry of sound, has come back with a bang and is knocking off some comedy wows. The same is true of the Christie boys, Al and Charlie.

So the idea of unit production is not exactly new. In fact it has never been away. Even some of the major film companies have been producing actually on a unit basis. "All Quiet" was in effect a unit product. So were "The Trespasser," "King of Jazz," "Alibi," "Bulldog Drummond," "The Bat Whispers." Roland West's new one, "Corsair," is a unit-system product.

For every one of these that old devil mass production has half a dozen lemons to offer, and who knows that better than the exhibitors who have had to show them?

To those who fear the problem of a release, there is this answer—one I once heard Joseph M. Schenck give to Sam Goldwyn when Goldwyn was bewailing the state of motion pictures:

"Never forget, Sam, that there's no substitute for a good picture, and if you turn out a good one all the releasing circuits will be begging for a chance to buy it."

And that's the truth.

Unit Shows May Go To RKO Theatres

Three acts of vaudeville and a closing lengthy stage show similar to units used by Publix and others are said to be under consideration for 175 theatres of the RKO circuit. RKO Theatres home office had no comment to make when queried yesterday with regard to the proposed change from the present straight-run-of-acts policy now prevailing at company vaude-picture stands.

S. L. ("Roxy") Rothafel this week took over new duties as supervisor and councilor of RKO stage talent and acts, visiting theatres regularly in the New York zone and "modernizing" production methods, settings and lighting. Birmingham Exhibitors Hear Echos of Summer Closing Fifteen suits, ranging in amounts from $120 to $135, have been filed in Jefferson County court of Common Claims at Birmingham, Ala., against Birmingham Theatrical Amusements Co., Inc., and a number of affiliated companies. These suits grew out of the recent closing of ten Birmingham theatres and represent wages claimed by employes of these theatres.

The suits charge these amounts as due the operators for work between July 20 and Aug. 1. The management of the ten houses closed for the summer because they, according to statements made at the time, were operating at a loss.

300 Fox Theatres Will Play United Artists Films

More than 300 Fox theatres are to show the United Artists product, Al Lichtman announced in New York in confirmation of the fact that peace has been declared in the United Artists-West Coast Theatres feud of last winter.

Doubles Study Completed Reels Under Laveillier-Meyer Plan— Dialogue on Positive Film

Synchronization of foreign voices following completion of the English version appears to be the solution in Hollywood of the foreign-version problem.

And although even this method is not fool-proof, inasmuch as it may at times be difficult to perfectly match in synchronization the strange vowels of a foreign language with the English lip movements of an American player, synchronization is about to be accepted by the majority of major producers as being far superior to the superimposition of foreign titles and dubbing systems now used extensively.

The technical phase of foreign versions has been the cause of much grief at the studios. Innumerable methods had been tried since sound's introduction; but only superimposed titles and dubbing offered relief to the problem. Both of these methods, however, have failed to register as being wholly practical and now the studios are preparing to return to the initial system of recording the dialogue of voice doubles to the action and lip movements of American players.

A new system, marketed by Laveillier and Abe Meyer, is said to reduce the attendant costs to a minimum and accomplish the completion of the foreign version within two days.

The system, briefly, revolves around the projection of each completed reel several times for the benefit of the doubles, acquainting them with the story and characterizations. The doubles, of course, are especially selected and trained to speak for the players.

Then the dialogue is prepared, carefully matching the lip movement of the English words, and finally written in long hand vertically on a strip of positive film. This also is projected for the trio of voice doubles. The words are written large or small to indicate inflection emphasis. Also, along the edge of the film a black, red or green line gives a cue to the doubles, who can take the strip of film back to their homes for rehearsals if they wish. A small dynamo and a light reflector are all that is needed for home projection.

Once the rehearsals are deemed satisfactory the synchronization is done, with the mathematical exactness of the sprocket holes eliminating altogether the human equation.

The effect is said to be startling. The observer sees Harry Meyers as a trained French actor, even the English Claude Allister well steeped in Gallicism and Laura LaPlante a smiling, vivacious French wife.

There are drawbacks, of course, to be encountered. The American players will have to, more than ever, study elocution. Experienced stage players lend themselves far better to the transcription of the dialogue because they mouth their words better, thereby permitting the transcribed foreign word to match more distinctly the lip movements.

"EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE SHOULD INSIST UPON GETTING BAD GIRL. IT IS A TRIUMPH FOR THE FOX PRODUCTION FORCES."

—Welford Beaton in the Hollywood Spectator

Instant recognition for that overnight star—James Dunn. Every exhibitor will echo—every theatregoer applaud—this showman's verdict.

What a performance—moving, magnetic, magnificent! Acting that carries the stamp of greatness—that reaches out through the darkened theatre and sways every soul, touches every heart.

Sally Eilers better than ever before. As great a picture as Fox has produced—from every angle.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Grosses from 29 key cities, compiled by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, bear out the statements made by Publix managers in telegrams to the home office that business is on the uptrend.

Although business done by the 164 theatres in these cities topped slightly the $3,000,000 weekly figure in February, a decided slump followed in the subsequent weeks and months. This downward tendency reached its low during the week ending July 15 and 16, when the total receipts from these houses was $1,882,279.

In the following week, however, grosses jumped to $2,024,443, followed the next week by receipts of $2,038,596. Again, better business registered during the week ending August 6 and 7, when the total reached $2,195,426.

It will be noted, also, that during the first week in August there were but nine new low grosses and two new highs, the latter being made by "Politics" in Buffalo and Denver.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

We wonder how many of you exhibitors really know how to enjoy a fishing trip. So many who go fishing think if the fish don't grab their hooks as soon as they throw it into the water, their whole trip is a failure and they go back home sour at the whole world.

There are two ways to enjoy a fishing trip, a right way and a wrong way, just as there are two kinds of music, music and jazz. And speaking of jazz: a dispatch from Maryland says that two bulls charged a jazz orchestra and broke up the performance. We are for those two bulls a hundred per cent. The trouble with this country is that we don't have enough bulls, but that's getting away from fishing.

Catching Trout Off Ice

We wanted our wife and Ruth to go with us up to Long Pine, Nebraska, for a few days' trout fishing in Long Pine creek, but no sir, they wouldn't do it, they wanted to go down to Omaha for a week or ten days and see the bright lights and watch the traffic signals change, and window shop, and breathe the smoke-laden atmosphere, and hear the streetcars go by right at a time when people ought to be asleep, and so we said, "All right, go ahead." Then we said to Marjorie, "How would you like to go trout fishing?" And she jumped up and said, "Dad, you have hit me a jolt right in my weak spot, how soon will you be ready?" Then she went into the bedroom and started packing her grip with powder puffs, lip sticks and other things necessary for a trout fishing trip, except that she didn't pack any fishing tackle. A woman has a notion that they can't catch trout unless they have a permanent wave and plenty of rouge. Our theory is that angleworms or grasshoppers are more necessary than beauty shops.

Well, we went up to Long Pine and put in three days fishing the creek and never caught a darn trout. We had three big rains after we got there and the creek looked like the tailings from a buttermilk factory and every trout in the creek was on a buttermilk diet and their local physicians had put a ban on angleworms and grasshoppers. It has been a lifelong custom of ours to not allow a physician to beat us out, so on our way back to camp we stopped in at a meat-market and told the clerk to throw us about eight of those trout he had on ice, and he said, "What do you want me to throw them to you for?" And we replied, "Well, so that when we get back to camp Marjorie can't say that we didn't catch 'em."

Fishing and Golf

We didn't catch a trout but we had a dandy time just the same. When it rained it was music to hear it patter on the roof; when it didn't rain the birds were singing in the trees everywhere and all Nature was doing her stuff and trying to make us welcome. Dewey Laws and his wife helped to make up a foursome in penny ante and we broke the whole bunch with a bobtail flush and that made Marjorie sore because she laid down a queen full.

Catching fish isn't all the joy of fishing. To make a fishing trip a success you should have a rain about twice a day to keep the grass and weeds along the creek wet. There should be plenty of mosquitoes of nights so you won't get sleepy. The cream you put in your coffee should be sour to match your disposition, and your bathroom conveniences should be at least a block away so you have to dress of nights when it is raining, and then, even though you don't catch a fish, you can tell your friends when you get home what a helluva fine time you had.

Fishing is like playing golf. If you drive just so every time, if you approach just so every time, if you putt just so every time, you would soon lose interest in the game. You have got to get in the rough occasionally to make the sport worthwhile; then when you do make a good shot or catch a six-inch trout, you get a thrill out of it.

The Facts

We find a notion among a very limited number of exhibitors that MOTION PICTURE HERALD has become to be influenced by the producers and large chain operators. Our long experience with the magazine warrants us in saying that nothing could be farther from the truth. The success of the Ford Automobile Company is dependent upon the success of the vendors of Ford cars. Should they fail, Ford would fail. Should the implement dealers throughout the country not be successful in the sale of the product of the International Harvester Company, the International Harvester Company would become bankrupt. Producers of motion pictures would be in the hands of a receiver within six months should the exhibitors of their product be unsuccessful and unable to successfully display their pictures. The same thing is true with trade journals. A trade journal, to be successful and to serve its highest purpose, must take cognizance of all branches of the motion picture business. It must treat all branches of the industry in an honest, conscientious and fearless manner. To slight any branch of the industry would be to weaken the influence of the magazine, a thing the HERALD has never done and never intends to do.

There is a complaint from some exhibitors that the HERALD made a mistake in dropping the department, "What the picture did for me," but the dropping of that department is hardly chargeable to the HERALD. The complexion of the industry has undergone a lot of changes since that department was started, and the period of its usefulness has passed. That was indicated by the extent that the reports to the department dwindled.

There is also some complaint that the HERALD carries certain departments that are of no interest and no value to the small exhibitor. That's true, we don't care for some of them ourself, but to eliminate them would deprive other classes of readers of news they are entitled to.

Someone writes about songs, and there probably isn't one exhibitor in a thousand who cares a whang about songs, but they should remember that there are a lot of fellows writing songs.

Ed Dawson writes "Up and Down the Alley" and we can realize that it doesn't mean a thing to the boys out in the tall grass, but they should remember that there are a lot of alleys in New York.

"Chicago Personalities" is about as interesting to the small town exhibitor as a carbuncle on the back of his neck, but they should not forget that there are more people in Chicago connected with the motion picture business than there are in the whole states of Nebraska and Kansas, not counting Nashwauk, Minn., and they are entitled to some representation.

The HERALD has a department known as "Voice of the Industry," and it is an open forum for all branches of the industry, especially the exhibitors, and they are invited to avail themselves of this department whenever they desire, and when they fail to make use of this department it can hardly be chargeable to the HERALD and leads one to question the sincerity of their criticisms.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD is NOT an exclusive magazine for any particular branch of the industry, but, as we have ofttimes told you before, IT COVERS THE FIELD LIKE AN APRIL SHOWER, and that's about all we care to say on this subject at this time."

We've got a very heavy golf date on for this evening at 6:30, and when you are thinking of golf you can't think of much else. Maybe that's a sign of mental weakness, but say, does anybody know where we can buy some trout?

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

PATHE HAS COME OUT WITH CONstance Bennett in two pictures of practically the same type, one with a rotten title, if you ask me, for a country town house, that is, "Born to Love," and "Common Law." I caught these pictures in another house and they are heavy sex stuff, dramatic pictures, neither one worth a nickel in a country town house.

It is my opinion that the money that will be made this year is with comedy and clever farce pictures. They want to laugh and when you get pictures, even not a big one, such as "Everything's Rosie," while it is not an elaborate picture, it gets the laughs, and that's what they want today. Also it gets the business.

Pathe will have to come a whole lot better than those two if Bennett holds her draw at the box office. She has a flair for comedy, and has shown that in two of her previous pictures made a year or so ago.

Look what Paramount did to Chatterton though they may have known she was going to another concern and worked the old army game and gave her "Right to Love," "Unfaithful," and one other that flopped in all the small houses.

Bennett made a big success in "Common Clay," but "Born to Love" and "Common Law" are a long way from the quality of that picture. But it is the same old story; one gangster picture, then they all made them until they killed off the box office drag, and now it is this other type that looks as though it will be done to death this year, judging from these two pictures.

There is no question that Pathe will point to what they are doing in the larger situations, but they have transient patronage and don't get the reaction we do in small towns to a picture that doesn't hit. Personally, I do not think they will do anything but be a detriment to any small house that runs them. I am close to the first runs in Fort Wayne, and some of my people saw both of them and the reaction was the same as mine; they did not like either.

Fox has a knockout comedy in "Annabelle's Affairs," and this is the type that is doing business for me. A great cast, and they put this picture over like no one's business. Roland Young is immense in his role. An outstanding performance that will keep them laughing all the time.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Looking Into the Future

Now comes a study of audience reaction even before the picture is produced.

Harry Chandlee, screen student and critic, has been engaged by Paramount at the Hollywood studios to inspect every script before it is accepted and determine audience value before the filming.

Writers' Agenda Issued

The agenda of the writers on the West Coast, which they desire to take up at the forthcoming conferences on studio writing problems, is now in the hands of the producers' committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Checking Service Expands

Federal Theatrical Service, headed by Harry Ross and with headquarters in Chicago, is planning further expansion. Branches of the checking company are opening in Minneapolis and Des Moines, and offices for Atlanta and Charlotte also are under consideration.

Stimulating Production

Ufa and Tobis in Germany, have instituted a fund of 100,000 marks as prizes for the best film subjects and scenario preparation, as a means of putting new life into production, according to a German trade publication.

Entertainment Tax Reduction In Berlin Finally Confirmed

The reduction of entertainment taxes for Berlin motion picture theatres, approved two months ago by the Municipal council and calling for reductions from 15 to 12 percent, from 12½ to 10 percent and from nine to seven percent, have been confirmed by the German ministries of finances and interior.

District tax collecting offices have been advised that the reductions may be granted retroactively as of May 1, 1931. No further alleviations are to be granted because of the critical financial situation of the city of Berlin.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 89

Question No. 89 was: (A) If the exhibitor asked your advice in the selection of a sound screen, tell us just what points you would give consideration. (B) Tell us just what is meant by "Absorption of Light," "Actinic Ray," "Angle of Incidence," "Angle of Reflection" and "Projection Angle." (C) Tell us just what chromatic aberration is. Describe its effects.

Your editor was agreeably surprised at the number who made at least reasonably good on this one. Here is the list: Lester Borst, Herman Billings, Thomas H. Harding, Phil Jennings, Tom Turk, T. Van Vaulkenburg, E. L. Mirgun, Robert Lester, William D. Hotaling, Leroy Bates, Andy Moore, Bill Sarlson, G. Doe, Alex Tipping, L. R. Sanders, T. L. True, P. L. Toeping, James McGuire, James Devoy, R. L. Banning, Paul Danning, George Thompson, Bill Doe, Pat O'Brien, John Forst, L. D. Lansaw, A. Tilson, Richard Singleton, "Chicago," John Williams, T. T. Tittling, John D. Day, D. Johnson, Nic Granby, Thomas Peters, Dave Channing, Peter Cermak, Dan Jacobson, Alonza Zerach, A. F. Boe, Dick Andrews, Frank D. Broyce, Frank Manning, S. John Gurdson, H. D. Cole and Charles Kane.

True, the list was not quite so long a list as usual; apparently many found themselves stuck, for the total number of answers was some hundreds lower than usual. However, I can appreciate the fact that these questions were not exactly easy, especially the first one.

I shall print the answer of James Devoy as setting forth all the facts most fully. He says: (A) First, I would advise my employer to examine the screen structure for what I would describe as stability, meaning by that the ability to stretch to a perfectly flat, taut surface, and stay put that way without tendency to sag after a time. Second, I would suggest to him the advisability of examining closely into the probable durability of the surface and the probability of its being cleaned with good results, or resurfaced at a reasonable cost. Third, I would suggest an investigation of the reflective powers of the surface and its powers of distribution of light, which latter I would suggest be guaranteed by the screen manufacturer, who must agree to make measurements after installation of the screen, remembering that light distribution, width of auditorium and vertical slating height are closely interconnected. I would direct the attention of the exhibitor to the fact that the character of screen surfaces has much to do with the color or tone of the reflected light, and suggest that this phase of the matter be given very careful consideration. I would advise the exhibitor to make close investigation of the percentage of light lost through the openings necessary to permit the passage of sound, and what, if any, effect the character of such openings may have on the sound.

(B) The term "Absorption of light" is used to express the percentage or amount of light absorbed by any surface with which light comes into contact. An "Actinic ray" is one which will set up chemical action in certain substances, such as for example, photographic emulsions. "Angle of incidence" is the angle at which a light ray strikes any surface. "Angle of reflection" is the angle at which a light ray is reflected from a surface. "Angle of projection" is the angle which the projection axis makes with a horizontal line. (C) Chromatic aberration is the quality of a poorly corrected lens which causes it to separate white light more or less completely into the colors of the spectrum. The effect is of course to make the light impure, which same may or may not extend over the entire field covered by the lens."

Gentlemen, I commend you to look over your answers and see how very far wrong many of you were on some points. I even recommend that those slated as having answered "At least reasonably well" examine brother Devoy's answer carefully. Some of you didn't get by with much to spare.

TO THEATRE MANAGERS:

Mr. Manager, sit you down comfortably and let us talk a few talks along lines which should interest you, whether you may agree with my 'umble self or not. Remember, though, that I neither am scolding or criticizing, but directing your thought toward channels possibly not yet as well explored as might be. If you really have explored the path into which I shall direct your thoughts, then surely no great harm will be done, especially if you burn up a good cigar while I talk through the medium of printers ink. If, on the other hand, your mind has not traversed this path, then possibly you will agree that it long since should have done so.

Mr. Manager, as I have before and many times said, the two chief things you have for sale to the public, in fact in many cases about the only things you have for sale, are the picture on your screen and the sound from the horns back of it. I came near writing "and the sound from your horns," but I guess that wouldn't make such a hit, what!

Of course I understand that psychologically you have sold a star, or rather the reputation of a star, before ever the theatre patron enters your theatre; also that you may have for sale the melodious strains emanating from a more or less excellent and elaborate orchestra. In a sense you also sell to the theatre patron courteous service by uniformed attendants, good ventilation, comfortable seats, and so on, but after all the excellence of the screen image and sound are by a very large margin your chief stock in trade. Without screen image and sound you might have all the other factors in the best possible form and still be unable to run your theatre.

And now, Mr. Manager, we come to the meat of this conversational nut, namely: just exactly how well are you yourself equipped to judge accurately as to the excellence of your screen image and its accompanying sound? Just exactly what study have you made of such matters? Are you able to look at the screen image in your theatre and pass reasonably accurate judgment as to whether or not it is too bright, or too dull? Can you say with reasonable authority whether the light is as pure as it should be? Can you judge as to the evenness of its distribution upon your screen? Do you know just what constitutes a glare spot? Are you aware of just what the effect of extraneous light striking the screen is? Do you permit projection faults to appear upon your screen without instant investigation and the assessments of proper penance in some form if they be due to preventable causes? Are you able to judge as to whether the sound results are all they should be in the matters of volume, distribution, clarity, and so on?

Do you not only enable your projectionist or projection staff to keep the projection equipment in the best possible condition, but also require that that be done, or do you "save" money by niggardliness in projection room supplies, which may be done only at the expense of lowering the excellence of results upon your screen or from your horns, or both, and therefore the sales value of your theatre's chief assets?

Mr. Manager, each of these questions and

An open air installation of Syncrofilm sound-on-films equipment has been made by a Weber Machine Corporation representative, E. M. Scribner, of Scribner Brothers, Schoharie, N. Y. The speakers are placed outdoors, the screen is put up on a building, and the projector and apparatus which provides the sound is mounted on a truck. Below is shown the booth containing a Powers projector, the Syncrofilm soundhead and a Powerized amplifier. The other picture is a side view of the tower and speaker.

Fire in Tampa House Does No Damage; Patrons Return

Fire, caused by a carelessly thrown cigarette, started on the roof of the Tampa theatre, Tampa, Fla., recently, but did little damage, due to the rapid work of the janitor in saving adjoining offices.

The fire chief requested the 500 patrons in the theatre to file out quietly. There was no confusion, and the audience returned for the completion of the performance after firemen had extinguished the flames.

Royal Zenith Sound on Two More French Liners

Royal Zenith projectors and sound equipment are being installed on the SS Paris and the SS France following the successful performance in the salon of the Ile de France, flagship of the French line. Talking pictures are to be shown on the Paris and the Ile de France during the cruises this month. J. V. Cremonim, vice president of Pulverman, made the arrangements.

Responsibility of Theatre Manager

all of them are perfectly legitimate. If you find yourself unable to give satisfactory answers to any of them, then just to that extent you are lacking in ability as a theatre manager. The questions, you will note, do not assume that you have any extensive knowledge of projection. It is hardly expected that you could or would. They do, however, assume that you will be able to judge accurately as to the results of projection, both in pictures and sound.

Does it not appeal to you that unless you are able to do that you cannot possibly be certain that your show is all that it should be? Think that over, Mr. Theatre Manager!

It is your business as a theatre manager to attain the very best possible values on your screen and through your horns. If you are unable to judge with at least reasonable surety as to when those results are 100 percent perfect, or just in what and how much they are lacking, then how can you be certain your box office is pulling 100 per cent, or just to what extent its lack of pull is due to faulty projection? Think that over, Mr. Manager, until we talk again. Meanwhile we would be well pleased to hear from theatre managers on this subject.

RKO DECISION BOON TO STAGE ACTS

Artists Are Encouraged by Vote of Officials

Attitude of Civic Organizations in Key Centers Leading to Revival of Shows

By ED DAWSON

One of the most optimistic notes sounded in recent months for the stageshow and vaudeville artists is the attitude assumed by district managers of Radio-Keith-Orpheum in their recent convention in New York at the Hotel Pierre.

Unless the screen entertainment can stand on its own, it was the opinion, and vote, of these executives that vaudeville, or stage acts, should receive top billing.

Talent has expressed a decided encouragement in this reversal of management conviction.

The vote of the RKO division managers comes almost simultaneous with the action by commercial organizations in the South protesting the abandonment of stageshows by Publix. In some instances a boycott of picture shows was threatened if the human element was not returned to the stage.

To meet this opposition to the elimination of stageshows, some managers are producing their own shows with local talent. Reports on such attractions have been highly favorable.

How immediate the change in RKO billing will become effective is problematical.

Chicago Hoodlums "Scare" Robinson

A vaudeville booking of Edward G. Robinson at the Palace, Chicago, was cancelled by RKO because of a rerouting of the Warner player over RKO theatres in the East.

Gossip in the Loop has it that Robinson was the recipient of threatening messages from Chicago hoodlums whose displeasure he is said to have incurred with his depiction of gangster roles, and that the cancellation was made at Robinson's request as a result.

Robinson was to have begun a week's Chicago engagement August 15.

Florence

This charming young lady, who is known professionally as Florence, has been featured organist in many deluxe theatres in the east for the past five years.

She is noted for her showmanship, good personality and pleasing singing voice, these three things being, together with her good organ playing, responsible for the popularity she has enjoyed in every house in which she has worked.

Florence has been away from Broadway and the organ for the past two years, but she has spent the time advantageously, making motion pictures on the West Coast.

Now she is back on the Main Stem and intends to go back to her first love, organ playing and presentations.

Paul Whiteman, band leader, has been named in a suit filed in the Chicago circuit court for $1,500 by Universal Pictures, Inc.

The suit was said to be in connection with contracts which Whiteman had signed. He is at present engaged for the summer season at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago.

Violin Gets Roxy Baton

Mischa Violin, co-conductor of the New York Roxy theatre orchestra, will make his radio bow as guest conductor of the Roxy symphony concert over an NBC-WJZ network on Monday. Violin will direct the radio programs for the next three weeks as pinch hitter for his associate, Maurice Baron, now vacationing in Europe.

Musicians Are In a Deadlock With Theatres

The situation between the musicians and the theatres of Indianapolis remains unchanged. Last week both the Lyric and the Indiana did away with stage shows due to difficulties encountered when trying to reach an agreement for next years' scale of wages.

Union officials say that they expect to reach an agreement with the theatres within a month. Theatre managers of the two houses affected say that if business holds up in the future as well as it did over the week-end they would not be particularly glad to see stage shows return.

A check at the Indiana, a Skouras-Publix house, last Sunday revealed that more people attended the theatre than on either of the two previous Sundays. With the reduction of price from 65 cents top to 50 cents anywhere in the house, the amount taken in was practically the same as the two previous Sundays. At the Lyric, according to the manager, A. J. Kalaberer, considering the amount of money taken off the overhead, they are making more money without vaudeville. This statement considers the weekend only, however.

Rumor has it that the Indiana will return to stage shows when the Fanchon and Marco units start coming through in place of the Publix units which they used in the past.

New Seminole Vanities Establish House Record

The Seminole, a neighborhood house at Tampa and operated by Publix, opened a second edition of their Seminole Vanities Friday and it established a new high record, breaking the record of the first edition.

Charles Kirkconnel, the manager, staged these reviews and they proved so successful that the first edition was brought downtown to the Victory for a run after the Seminole showing. Kirkconnel said the second edition also would be presented at the Victory following its run at the Seminole. The show has a cast of 25 individuals.

"Politics" and Old M.C. Force Four Shows Daily

Combination of Marie Dressler-Polly Moran on the screen in Metro's "Politics" and Wesley Eddy, former house m. c., on the stage, forced the Buffalo Fox-Great Lakes this week to change from its summer policy of three complete shows daily to four.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Capitol

Week ending August 13

The most entertaining part of the program this week is the feature picture, "Politics," which features Marie Dressler and Polly Moran. The stageshow, "Variety Revels," though it was good entertainment, in places, appeared to be sandwiched in, and though some of the acts and especially the ballet routines by the Chester Hale girls were good and effective, the bill lacked the usual spontaneity of the Capitol shows.

Yasha Bunchuk, conducting the Capitol Grand Orchestra, presented an entertaining and well-played overture of old Spanish tunes and new rhumbas, to a gratifying reception. The stage presentation opens to a smartly worked out setting of black and white, in which the Chester Hale Girls performed an effective toe routine on a flight of five steps, three-quarters the width of the stage. Jerry Coe, a clever showman, follows with his routine of good accordion playing and eccentric and "snake-hips," dancing, gaining himself a very good reception and an encore.

The blackout sketch built around the popular tune, "Minnie the Moocher," was one of the most cleverly presented and worked-out stunts of its kind ever presented in the house. It opens, with a young fellow, apparently Jack Reid, doing "harlem-singing" of the song, Minnie, in a red spot, high up on the left side of the stage. As he is blacked out, the Chester Hale girls, on stage, do an effective and slightly risque "hooch" dance until they are blacked-out and a young lady, not announced, does a "hot" and "low-down" hooch from another level. While Reed sings the song, "Minnie's" history is told in scenes, with the entire bit blacking out at the finish. This received the best hand of the show. Gordon, Reed and King, tap dancers de luxe, present a routine of challenge tapping, strut dancing and comedy that earns them an encore and a very fine reception. A well-done and barbarious dance routine in which the Chester Hale girls work themselves into a frenzy, serves as a prologue to the "slave" adagio routine of Miles and Kover, whose work is very well done and gets a gratifying reception. The same "native" scene is used for the finale, which follows, and in which the C. H. girls do a supposedly native dance using shields as an effective display during their dance.

Denver Denver

Week ending August 12

The Fanchon & Marco "Vacation Days" Idea is a breezy and entertaining stage show from several angles. Zelda Stanley, featured as a queen of interpretation and impersonation, lived up to her advance notices and stopped the show. As Helen Morgan she sang "Give Me Something to Remember You By." She also imitated Eddie Cantor, George Arliss and Maurice Chevalier, and her closing number, "Ten Cents a Dance," was a masterpiece of interpretation.

Kirk and Lawrence, with their rodeo and Wild West humor and their small prop horses which were built around them, ran the ace act a mighty close second, and in the opinion of the youngsters was the top act. They put on a Wild West show, a fast and slow motion horse race and impersonated Sitting Bull and Buffalo Bill and his sharpshooting.

The line and routines were better than usual, the dozen being dressed in vacation clothes and with a Rocky Mountain vacation scene for a background in the first lineup; then with fisherboy outfits, lines, poles, 'n everything, singing "But I Haven't Got You." Their third appearance was as reindeer, all dressed up in brown velvet with long antlers on their heads.

The adagio act by 3 Jacks and a Queen was mysterious and many a gasp from the women in the audience was heard. Two of the men were dressed in white as was the queen, and the other jack was clothed in black. The stage was darkened. The Queen would be thrown through the air—apparently to land on the floor but would be caught by the man the crowd couldn't see. A spooky act.

Lee Wilmot and Ralph Peters, a pair of clever steppers and laugh provokers, entertained with their foolishness and dancing—especially in their hula costumes.

Kathleen Kay, contortionist and dancer, is fast on her feet and hands and received her share of the applause.

Milt Franklyn, master of ceremonies, entertained with an armful of instruments, playing each alone and then two together.

Fred Schmitt and his orchestra, in the overture, played the new march by Schmitt, "The Denver Post March," dedicated to Frederick G. Bonfils, publisher of the Denver Post. It had a stirring and noisy finish, with all the drums and brasses going full blast. Other numbers on the overture were Rubinstein's Melody in F and Egyptian ballet music by Lugini.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending August 12

Jan Rubini is batting for Walt Roesner this week as conductor of the Fox Concert orchestra and demonstrates that he is as much at home with a baton as with a violin bow. He leads the organization through "Gems from Faust," with a finale of brass which starts the audience applauding before it is concluded. Joaquin Garay, popular tenor, diverts thoughts from the beautiful Marguerite of the opera with "Little Girl," rendered in happy fashion.

The Fanchon & Marco offering is "Modern Minstrels," featuring Harry Jolson, and the act opens with the orchestra on the stage playing "Alexander's Ragtime Band." The curtain rises slowly and permits a view of twenty shapely legs in dance before it is seen that these belong to the Sunkist Beauties taking the part of modern minstrel maidens. Jack Rossell, dubbed "The Modern Eddie Leonard," sings about the minstrel days of old.

A huge tambourine is brought on the stage and, when the head is broken, out pops Harry Jolson, who at once proceeds to uncork some lively stories. Juggling Nelson is introduced as an old time minstrel man and proves a past master in handling hats and rubber balls. He has a lot of fun pouring water out of a brass container, apparently emptying it each time.

The Sunkist Beauties follow with a dance of magic, producing handkerchiefs, eggs and wands out of the ether as they go through their steps, and making them disappear as readily. They end by apparently producing baskets full of colored paper from their mouths.

Esther Campbell sings "Whistling in the Dark" and then whistles it in a delightful manner, with the Sunkist Beauties helping out with illuminated megaphones moved in unison in the darkness. Harry Van Fossen, "the grand old end-man," works with Harry Jolson in some real minstrel gags and gets deserved recognition.

The overstuffed member of the team of Oren and Monte does a yodeling number and then imitates chickens, dogs and musical instruments in a style which makes this part of the act the real hit of the show. His partner is exceedingly small and they get a lot of laughs out of their acrobatic stunts.

Harry Jolson sings "Rock-a-Bye Baby" and "Roll On, You Mississippi," showing that he has lost none of his old time effectiveness as an entertainer.

The act closes with the rear curtain going up on a background made up of enormous illuminated musical instruments played by the Sunkist Beauties.

Philadelphia Mastbaum

Week ending August 14

Ed Lowry, dynamic master of ceremonies at the Mastbaum, presents another breezy stage show this week entitled "Roof Top Revels," though the show is scarcely up to the Mastbaum standard.

Milton Charles at the organ plays and sings "Nevertheless." Then he plays while the audience sings "Shine On, Harvest Moon," "Sweet Adeline" and "Till We Meet Again," and announces that a record will be made then and there of the most popular of the songs just sung. This is decided by applause to be "Till We Meet Again" and a very creditable record is made and awarded to the person in the audience holding the proper ticket.

The outstanding feature of the stage show is the amusing nonsense of Georgie Price, of Broadway fame.

The Mastbaum Ensemble, in chic black velvet jackets and sheer black lace pajamas, dances and sings.

The charming Tiffany Twins in pale green costumes are not only pleasing to look at, but their dancing is out of the ordinary, and they get a great hand. As an encore they give a fast tap dance and some clever individual stunts, ending by dancing with Ed Lowry.

A pair of comedians with a talking parrot supply some amusement and a male quartette sings a description of a bridge game that is different and is well received.

Dapper Georgie Price introduces a breath of Broadway, with his witty monologues and his clever impersonations of John Barrymore, Al Jolson, Ted Lewis and President Hoover broadcasting "little white lies."

Ed Lowry, lively and full of pep as ever, in addition to conducting the stage band, keeps everything moving at a lively pace, sings, dances with the Tiffany Twins and finally, with the aid of one of the girls of the Ensemble, contributes an excruciatingly funny skit entitled "Mastbaum Service," which brings down the house.

All hands join in the finale, with the sun rising over the roof tops.

Keith's to Remain Open

Booking in of "The Woman Between" indicates that Warner Brothers will endeavor to keep open during the balance of the summer Keith's theatre, at Omaha, recently acquired from Moon Amusement Company. The house has no refrigeration.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

CHICAGO

Our good friend Patricia Ann Manners, who has been laid up in the hospital for the past few months, due to an automobile accident, is back at work now singing over both the Columbia and NBC chains, and is feeling as fit as a fiddle looking for a beau. . . . Margaret Felch, contact woman for the Remick Music company for a number of years, is doing very good at her present occupation of selling candy. . . . The Granada Cafe closed its doors last Monday. Intrenched again in fan popularity at the Terrace Garden of the Hotel Morrison, Clyde McCoy's dance orchestra is making new mail records with his daily broadcasts from KYW. His syncopating organization, a group of youngsters, is noted for its unique arrangements of new hit tunes.

If you hear long resounding applause on KYW, during a dance orchestra pickup program of Danny Russo's Orioles from the Canton Tea Garden, the chances are that he has just finished playing "When They Cut Down the Old Pine Tree." The nut song, which is really an old hill-billy tune, was resurrected from the mountains and set into a catchy arrangement by Russo himself.

* * *

This may be letting the cat out of the bag, or the skeletons out of the closet, but did you know that Bob Elson, WGN announcer, and Herbie Kay, popular dance orchestra leader, were once ushers together in a de luxe movie theatre in Chicago? They call Larry Funk's Palais D'Or Orchestra "the band with a thousand melodies." In reality, the library of this young conductor contains over five thousand numbers, making it one of the largest libraries of popular music in the country. . . . Ted Pearson is no longer connected with the NBC.

Ford and Wallace, whose early morning bits of patter and harmony over an NBC network have done much to leave a good taste, metaphorically speaking, in the mouths of countless listeners, are rated as one of the veteran teams of the air. They have entertained through the microphones of nearly every Chicago station as well as several other broadcasters in various parts of the country.

When Wayne King first played that catchy tune "Goofus" over the air he started an avalanche of letters asking what the word "Goofus" meant. The song first saw the light of day at an orchestral rehearsal.

During a few moments of relaxation Wayne had the members of the orchestra play odd bits of old numbers they once had known or written. While one of his violinists was playing a number the unusual idea of "Goofus" came to Wayne. First he sang the number, then the violinist played it, and then as the song progressed the various members of the band began to chime in, and soon the entire orchestra was playing a still unwritten and heretofore unknown melody, which if put on the market may be a big hit.

King Returns to Fox Oakland After Sacramento Engagement

Hernie King has returned to the Fox-Oakland, Oakland, Cal., as musical director and m. c. after a stay at the Fox Senator, Sacramento.

Jan Rubini, who relieved him at the Oakland, goes to the Fox San Francisco while Walt Roesner is on vacation.

ORGAN SOLOS

BILL HOFFMAN (Brooklyn Pitkin) took the audience for a ride this week, that is, "A Hay-ride," and they all apparently enjoyed it immensely. This novelty solo opened to Hoffman making his appearance in an outfit one associates with the oldtime farmer and playing a special version chorus of "The Gang's All Here." The solo was chock full of clever versions, written to all the well known "farmer" songs and a few of the more popular tunes. The organist interpolated a lot of incidental music which brought out and made realistic the farm atmosphere. The only popular number played was "Dream a Little Dream of Me," all the rest being specials which were sung very well.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) last week offered as his organ solo the following popular song hits: "I'm Yours," "Whistling In the Dark," "In a Five and Ten Cent Store," a classy tongue twister on "That's My Baby Now," "Loveless Love," and wound up with the late song sensation, "It Must Be Love." Earl Abel gave his usual talk and had the patrons singing pronto. They in turn gave the "wonder organist" a big hand which proved that it was well received as well as indicating that the patrons still think he is the "Prince of the Wurlitzer."

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill, L. I., RKO) did very well with his mid-week program of classical music, which, he explained, had been offered as an experiment and inasmuch as he had received so much favorable comments, it would be continued.

The program consisted of the fine playing of "Liebeslied," "Old Virginny," and "Toreador Song," from Carmen. He closed with a combination of four foreign classics, which he introduced as a memory test for the audience. During the playing of the numbers, different slide effects were played up with the use of color-wheels, which played beautiful combinations of colors on each effect. The reception accorded him was of the best.

SINGING BILL (Brooklyn Strand) introduced, via slides on the screen, a number of supposed fan-letters as an opening for his community sing. Following this with a little smart chatter and introductions of songs, Bill went into the singing and led the audience in their singing of "Ho Hum," "Love Is Like That," "I'm Keeping Company," a Jewish version of "Here Comes the Sun," and a final chorus of "Dream a Little Dream." The audience at this house likes his work and gives him plenty of support.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

GETTING back from a vacation and trying to work is one of those "impossible" things to do . . . but with an extra dose of will-power . . . or what have you . . . we may yet succeed . . . and while on the subject of vacations . . . we made more stops to chase bees out of the car than we did for any other reason . . . it got so bad that every time the missus let out a squeek we jammed on the brakes . . . there's a gal who likes her bees . . . outside the car . . . but then after we're stung a few times (by bees, mind you), we may take them as seriously as she does.

Unlike the proverbial trolley car conductor, we made no attempt to visit theatres during the vacation . . . but we did notice conditions and operation methods . . . which brought to light some queer twists in theatre operation . . . we can recall the fairly large city where the management sort of made the patron cater to the theatre, rather than vice versa . . . they start the show at 7 P. M. and run just one show . . . and a double feature to boot . . . so if you fail to arrive mighty early you just don't see the whole show . . . we stepped up to the b.o. at eighty forty-five and the second feature was well under way . . . meaning that we could see mighty little for our money . . . so now we're wondering why this theatre can't run two shows a night, or at least repeat the main feature . . . is there any good reason why their show should break at 10 o'clock? . . . maybe yes . . . and maybe no. . . .

* * *

Very often a manager will say that he can't get along with so and so . . . they are being nagged too much . . . of too much fault-finding . . . etc. . . etc. . . which brings to mind the thought that there's not much difference between running an automobile on a busy state road or getting along with one's superiors . . . in each case you must not only be able to know how to run your own . . . but to watch and anticipate what the other fellow is going to do . . . if it's trouble you're looking for, it's trouble you're going to get . . . and plenty of it. . . .

* * *

The coming George Washington Bicentennial Celebration offers untold possibilities for the patriotic-minded and wide-awake showman of today . . . this celebration will start next February and continue until Thanksgiving . . . a period of some nine months . . . each community will form its own committees and handle the celebration direct . . . smart showmen ought to be getting busy . . . making an effort to get on the local committees . . . become very active in all the plans being formulated . . . and in general, make himself conspicuous by the many things he can do to further the sentiment and progress of this country-wide affair . . . Club headquarters will have ready for distribution, by the time this issue goes to press, clip sheets and other valuable information regarding the celebration . . . a postcard request will bring you all the dope on the subject . . . or you can address your request direct to the Commission, at their executive offices: Washington Building, Washington, D. C. . . . get behind this one boys . . . we'll be keeping you posted right along now on all new slants for this national event. . . .

What good is a grouch? . . . aside from infecting everyone around you, what good does it ever do you? . . . the guy with guts is the man who can take it on the chin and come back for more . . . so the next time things break badly . . . don't take it out on someone else and parade around with a long face . . . laugh it off and let them see that they can't keep a good man's disposition down . . .

It has been said that where you find a live and progressive theatre management you will find a live and progressive community . . . and the reverse is just as true . . . if the theatre's a dead-head, the community surrounding is generally the same . . . it's up to the manager . . . he must lift his theatre out of the "sameness" class and pep things up . . . liven his newspaper with good, business getting ads . . . keep up an appearance of brightness and briskness in and about his house . . . try a laugh-provoking ballyhoo once in a while . . . give them a novel opening . . . stage some unusual affair of local interest at the theatre . . . these things form the basis of pep, enthusiasm and life, all identified with theatres and affect, not alone the theatre, but the entire community as well . . . what are YOU doing about it . . . ?

* * *

The boys in the various home offices must not lose sight of the fact that over ten thousand theatres must depend on their local manager's or owner's ingenuity for everything including newspaper advertising and exploitation . . . no specialists are employed for that purpose . . . so use discretion when you dope out those "colossal" campaigns and ads. . . .

* * *

Some men, if they drift on long enough, soon get to love no one but themselves . . . which is a tough "sit-she-a-shun" . . . because to be without any friends other than yourself, is indeed a lonesome existence . . . and if you happen to be fortunate enough to have lots of good friends . . . hang on to them . . . if you're so selfish that you're lonely . . . it's your own fault. . . .

* * *

'Snice day . . . if my conscience didn't bother me I'd play goluff for a couple of hours . . . but as it is I guess I'll try to catch up on some of the vacation mail. . . .

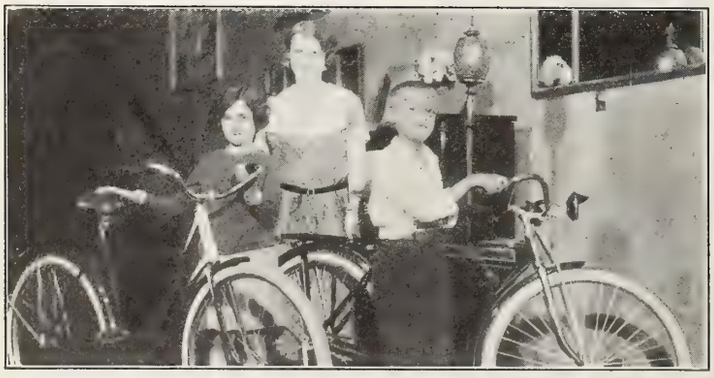
Paul Kunze Cashes In On Female Yen For Funny Pajamas

Pinch hitting for Paul Kunze, manager of the State Theatre, Stoughton, Mass., Natalie Tolman, director of the State's Kiddie Club, takes time off at 1 A. M., after a strenuous Sunday's work, to let the Club know what the "Boss" is doing these days. After a glance through her letter we'd say—plenty!

For one thing, these new-fangled pajamas have caught on up Stoughton way. So? Result was a pajama Party and Contest staged Saturday afternoon, with several hundred youngsters all dolled up in the funny looking pants. The contest was a Kiddie Club feature, with entrants grouped as to ages 2 to 4, 7 to 9, 10 to 12, and one class for the older girls. Prizes were promoted from the stores, pajamas were secured from stores dealing in them and the women judges picked from an audience, or otherwise.



There's no use in attempting a prediction as to just where this popular pajama craze is going—or how far. 'Course the cold weather may stop it. But right now it seems to have become all the rage in most every section of the country, beaches or what have you. It appears to be a good stunt to use with either adults or the kids—with the kids, Kiddie Club or not—and a show of this kind may be handled practically the same as a bathing beauty or fashion revue. A variety of tie-ups can be arranged so that the stunt become practically a costless one for the theatre.

Quite a splash was made in connection with the appearance of a personality billed at the State as "The Great Rajah Khier," Kunze working up a double truck featuring him in his act at different merchants' stores.

We also have at hand some interesting jungle scenes done in water color and crayon when "Trader" was exploited. This was carried out in connection with Miss Tolman's Kiddie Club and it proved a most effective interest stimulator. Prizes and free tickets were offered for the best examples of work. These posters may be obtained as regular exchange accessory.

This Kiddie Club at the State has become quite an institution in the hands of its director, as you may judge by the foregoing activities and the reproduced photo showing her with two of the youngsters when bicycles were awarded at the close of a six weeks' contest. All cost was absorbed through a tie-up with a big mail order house.

Another interesting stunt recently put over by the State was arranging with a local artist for an Art Exhibition in the lobby. In this case a couple of thousand dollars worth of paintings were secured free of charge for an out-of-the-ordinary display. It gave the patrons something new to discuss and the artist was more than pleased with resultant sales and publicity. The sole cost to the theatre consisted of taking out insurance against fire and theft.

All of which sounds like a lot of good show tips to us and we're therefore passing them along for the benefit of other Club members to let them know that Kunze, Miss Tolman and the State Theatre are very much on the map when it comes to publicizing their theatre and pictures and building up local good will.

Gurnette Is Firm Believer In P. T. A. As Box Office Aid

The value of gaining the good will of the Parent-Teachers Association is seen in results obtained by Barney Gurnette, manager of the California and Cline Theatres, Santa Rosa, Calif. He has been working with this organization for over a year and its cooperation has reflected a noticeable boost in box office receipts.

When he arrived in Santa Rosa he was aware that the California State Parent-Teachers Association recommended all pictures winning the approval of its reviewing committee and that local branches carried out these endorsements. He contacted the local office at once, getting data that could be used for advertising purposes, and it wasn't long before the newspapers gave him some corking publicity breaks on matter sent in by the P. T. A. pertaining to current or coming attractions at his theatre.

Another subject we'd like to bring up in connection with Gurnette is his comment on the "most valuable form of theatre advertising" series of letters that have recently made appearance in this department. He doesn't think it possible to make a set of rules applicable to all theatres but as far as his local situation is concerned he finds judicious use of newspaper display, good billboard representation, monthly calendars, occasional street ballys, attractive lobbies and up-to-date coming attractions announcements, produce best results. He also believes that many exhibitors overlook the value of their own screens, stating that it is a great and inexpensive asset.

His reminder that P. T. A. cooperation can be turned into a valuable builder of good will and comment on advertising is interesting and we are passing his views along to his fellow Club members with the thought that they also may benefit from his experience.

Student Birthday Stunt Well Liked By Lee M. Goldberg

The practice of presenting school pupils with a pair of tickets on birthdays proved such a business stimulator when tried out in Mayfield, Ky., that Lee M. Goldberg, zone manager for Warner theatre in the Louisville district, has introduced the plan in all cities under his jurisdiction.

Prior to starting his canvass of the enrollment to obtain names and date of birth, Goldberg contacted the head of the city educational department who freely gave him the necessary information. The pupils and their parents were also keenly interested in the stunt and the newspapers gave considerable publicity from time to time.

We've published data on the above plan a number of times but it's never out of the way to again remind Club members that this is a worthwhile manner of obtaining a lot of publicity and community good-will for a very small outlay. People get a great kick from being remembered on their birthdays, this event standing out as a most important one whether they like to admit it or not, and greetings to youngster or adult are appreciatively received.

SCHOOL DAYS SUGGESTIONS:

In a very few weeks the country's schools will be re-opening for the fall session. Are you planning some stunts at your theatre that will tie in with the occasion? Are you going to give away imprinted blotters, pencils, erasers, textbooks, or briefcases to your kid patrons? If so—it's time to get busy. If not—then you should.

One of your most profitable good-will angles, and one that will stick for some time, is to hand the kids something that they can take to school with them. It is unnecessary for you to pay out any large sums of money to do it. Your local dealers may be very willing to cooperate with you. There's a good many ways in which they can be worked in. They, too, want all the good-will they can get.

As a suggestion we'd like to point out that in return for advertising on a card in your lobby and on special tickets, your local dealers could supply you with brief cases and pen and pencil sets. Announce that on the Saturday matinee before opening you will give away the school supplies to the kids holding corresponding tickets, the tickets being procured with every purchase at the stores—and admission at the theatre. You could also work in a full page or a double page spread in your local newspaper on this angle, in which the dealers and the theatre wish the kiddies good-luck during the coming season and announce that they are donating the gifts to be presented at the theatre. In order that no kids be disappointed it would be a good move to hand out an imprinted ruler to each kid in the theatre, as they can be bought at a minimum cost.

There are ways in which you can display showmanship on this angle. It's up to you. You know your town and you know what will click with your public.

Lashley Celebrates House Anniversary With A Double Truck

Publix-Kincey Theatres recently had a birthday, and down in Burlington, N. C., where H. T. Lashley is City Manager, the Paramount and Carolina Theatres celebrated the event by putting over a successful double truck featuring three especially chosen pictures for the week.

In addition to each advertiser offering a guest ticket to the first five persons entering the store on a Monday, a tie-up was made with the daily newspaper for the free admittance of any reader who had never seen a talking picture. The paper carried a two-column story on this gag and a box listing the current pictures in order that the reader might check off title of picture to be witnessed. A reproduction of the ad will show how it was worked out.

Carrying out the Anniversary idea, four telegrams from stars were mounted on a large birthday cake for display in the lobby during the week. Banners were also used around the marquee, with appropriate copy and flags draped to the marquee from the top of the building. About 1,000 special invitations were mailed out, inviting patrons to the party. The coupons returned indicated that a considerable number of citizens had never seen and heard a talking picture.

In case anyone's memory has lapsed as to making a splash about their anniversaries, this will be a reminder for the promotion of some idea similar to the above. Certainly it's also evidence that when Lashley goes out to put one of these over the merchants lend him whole-hearted support.

Sam Chernow Ties With Auto Dealer For Lobby Display

Just before he left to assume the managership of the Sayre Theatre, Sayre, Pa., an effective tie-up with a local Ford dealer was made by Sam Chernow, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Waverly, N. Y., that was nicely reflected at the box office when "Trader Horn" had its run. This same stunt can also be tied in with the publicizing of any attraction.

Letters were written to all car owners in and surrounding Waverly by the Agency telling them about the Ford display in the Capitol lobby as well as telling them about picture, theatre and playdates. Approximately 5,000 letters were mailed out by the agency at no cost to the theatre.

The agency also used 40 inches of newspaper space, playing up the lobby display and the current attraction at the theatre—at no cost to the theatre. There were also large banners on trucks in the Ford caravan that traversed the city and surrounding towns.

Competition in the small auto field is keen these days and we believe that you will find most dealers receptive to any good merchandising idea that will help promote sales. As a further suggestion, it might be a good idea for the dealer to assign a representative to duty in the lobby during the display. Not to the extent that he will annoy theatre patrons by aggressively obtaining names and addresses but to merely be on hand to impart any desired information on models, etc. This was corking cooperation obtained by Chernow and we'll be looking forward to hearing about his next selling stunt.

THEATRE HOUSE ORGANS AND PROGRAMS!

Keen interest is being shown by members and readers all over the country in this series of program reproductions. Apparently many showmen are in a receptive mood when it comes to improving their programs.

This week's consist of three entirely different types. The Avaloe comes under the heading of the "flashy" style; the Patchogue is an intimate newsy affair and the Plaza is a circuit program, but embodies some local features which make it interesting in the community where the theatre is used.

A close study of all three will reveal some unusual angles, many of which may suggest a decided improvement for your own little program. At any rate, look them over and see what you can gain from the inspection.

If a programme has any value at all it should be capitalized to the extent of making it a strong selling argument for your theatre and its attraction. Merely "throwing" it at them week in and week out is not sufficient.

Let us see if some go-getting showmen can't start something real new in programme make-up and selling appeal through this particular agency. We all try for variety and punch in our newspaper ads and trailers, why not in the programmes?

This Avaloe program, at first glance, might suggest a rather rough looking piece of work, but, on the contrary, it is a neat "little" house organ especially designed for pocket use. It was reproduced in the same size as all other programs on these pages, but was only about one-quarter the size of the average sheet.

Front page was printed in two colors and insides spread carried many interesting line-cuts and half-tones. Between the two it resulted in a rather flashy little affair.

Apparently Dave Brotman, their managing director, always has something on the griddle when it comes to pepping up each attraction; you will get the point if you look this program over carefully. The back page (not shown here) was similar in make-up and helped round out the week's attractions. A few coming productions were also listed.

There are not many theatres using this style program, but they really are worthy of consideration. We don't know at this time whether the abbreviated size means a saving in money, but altogether was a neat piece of work and we'll be glad to include it in the Program Exchange upon request.

Feels like old times to be writing anything about Charlie Maxfield, but here he is again and still plugging along in great shape. Charlie, in case you don't happen to know it, is the d. m. for Seider's Prudential circuit out on Long Island and, needless to say, he's rather good at it, too.

They call their program a "Newssette" and just one little look will prove that they gave it the right title. Containing many interesting items about pictures and stars, its make-up is built for the community it serves, and that in itself is an achievement.

As for the portion devoted to the actual attractions, it covers a complete page, is easily read and tells enough about the picture and the cast to make it desirable.

As we said before, it's like old times writing anything about Maxwell, but it's a pleasure and we hope to write a whole lot more about him and his worthy associate, Joe Phelps.

Harry Goldberg inaugurated a novel, and certainly worth while idea, in all of the houses under his supervision in New Jersey when he encouraged his managers to inject their own personality into the programs via a little intimate message each week. These messages, which we have followed from week to week, are generally interesting comments about the theatre or the attractions and should go a long ways towards cementing much good will between manager and patron.

The program itself, as you will observe, is more of the "dignified" type. Its front page is used for special events and the inside spread is entirely devoted to the week's attractions with the exception of the message box in the center. This idea is carried out in all the Fox Jersey houses, so this one will have to be representative of all of them.

Besides showing what other theatres are doing in program make-up, this series is bringing other interesting slants to light. Follow them carefully if you would benefit by what your brother members and managers are doing.

Know Your Patrons Is Glackin's Motto; Sends A Good Stunt

One of the Club's recently elected members. Wm. M. Glackin, manager of the California Theatre, Sacramento, Calif., is a showman who thoroughly believes in the practice of getting acquainted with the people of his community, his experience having taught him that business men, particularly, come to hold a theatre man in an entirely different light when they find he is interested to the extent of taking a part in civic affairs.

Through the fact that he had made an extensive acquaintance and conveyed the impression of being the possessor of live-wire qualities, the merchants elected him president when they organized a business men's club known as "The Live Wires." He was likewise chosen president of the local Lions unit when it was established and has worked on every Community Chest Drive held in the city of Sacramento.

An example of what can be accomplished along publicity lines, as the result of being known, was a two column front page story in the city's first line newspaper. It was headed, "Think It Over, Boys and Girls—Isn't Harold Lloyd Better Fun Than Ruining Folks' Property?" A box followed containing "Honor Card" copy, stating that the newspaper and the theatre would see that the signer of a pledge not to indulge in malicious mischief on Hallowe'en Eve would be admitted free of charge to a special screening. A good sized story played up the event. The date on this particular paper is October, 1925, and we understand that the stunt has been repeated every year thereafter. A good gag to file away for Hallowe'en.

It takes something to crash the front page of a reputable newspaper with a yarn of this description and the answer is this man's standing in his community. There's another showman out your way, Glackin, who also thoroughly believes in mixing around. Maybe you know Charley Holtz in North Sacramento? You two ought to have lots in common and we certainly think both of you are on the right track. There can be no doubt that both of these showmen, through many contacts made, are well known and liked in their respective communities.

Well Dressed Front Brings In Patrons Declares H. J. Brown

Proving once again that a well dressed theatre front is one of the most valuable means of attracting patrons inside a theatre, we call your attention to a front turned out on "Daddy Long Legs" by H. J. Brown, manager of the Palace Theatre, Newbern, Tenn., and to a statement by him that it drew more attention and business than any other form of advertising made in some time.

With Dorris Fowlkes assisting him, this front was made out of beaverboard at the small cost of $12. The background of the display was a light shade of green, with a 5-inch border of dark green. The panel was inset with red and the title lettering was cutout work, set out from the board. The Gaynor and Baxter pictures were also cutouts.

Brown finds this form of advertising more effective than any other means so we'll have to list him among the others who have recently asserted themselves in this direction. He also hopes that his suggestion will prove beneficial to other Club members. This "best form of ad" controversy is still on and the Club will welcome letters on the subject from any other member.

Frank Hill Makes A Novel Float For "Daddy Long Legs"

There's always something novel going on in the show selling game wherever Frank B. Hill happens to be located and we hear that he's keeping things humming out in Walla Walla, Wash., where he manages the Liberty Theatre.

One of the most recent stunts he put on was a float for the advertising of Hughes-Franklin Theatres and "Daddy Long Legs," a reproduction of which you will see on this page. Frank is adept when it comes to constructing novel floats, but to our way of thinking this is one of the most attractive ones he's ever turned out. You will note that both objectives sought, that of publicizing a recently formed circuit and the advertising of a current attraction, were effectively carried out by the use of this display.

He's also been using a neat little parking card on "Indiscreet" with copy reading, "Don't be Indiscreet about parking your car over the time limit—The Judge Won't Be Indiscreet With You." Title, featured players, theatre and play dates follow.

Other gags recently put in effect include the issue of an attractively gotten up programette listing a two weeks' program; and also a novelty herald on "Laughing Sinners," made up in bookmark style.

We also have a number of Hill's excellently laid out ads on hand and shall have several of them made up for display in a future issue of this department so his fellow Club members will know what he's doing along this line. In the meantime we know this Round Tabler will continue to bat them over out his way.

Want Ad Contest Builds Trade On "Skippy" For Smith

A Want Ad contest in his local newspaper proved a welcome diversion in publicity methods when "Skippy" was played by J. C. Smith, manager of the Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

The newspaper ran a 2 by 6 box daily on the Want Ad page, a news story daily for several weeks, and called attention to the contest in the display columns with a 3 by 9 ad which ran three times.

Five pairs of guest tickets were awarded daily for 10 days (in advance of picture) for the five best "Skippy Want Ads" sent in by readers to help "Skippy" get what he needs in the new Paramount motion picture, "Skippy," based on the Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American comic strip character.

Each day's contest was a bit different. For instance, "To raise money to get his friend's dog out of the dog pound, Skippy tries to work up a business of running errands. To help him get business, write a Business Service Classified Ad just as you think Skippy should write it to attract trade for his messenger service. Sign it Skippy and give your own name and address."

We've published a score of stunts on the above picture and as fast as they come in they'll be found on these pages. Try this one of Smith's if you are looking for something a bit different. What else is new in your town, George? Let's know next time you write.

GET THOSE UNIFORMS READY!

With summer due to pass out of the picture within a few short weeks, it is time you looked over the winter uniforms to make sure they are in good shape and appearance.

If cleaning and slight repairs are necessary, have it done now, while there is plenty of time to take care of it. Perhaps a little renewed gold braid, etc., is in order.

TWO FRONTS FROM BALTIMORE!

Weaver Ties With Churches to Stage A Midsummer Revue

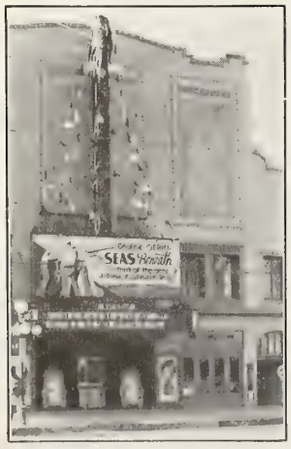
Tying a fashion show up with several churches is a somewhat out-of-the-ordinary stunt, but that's exactly what happened when L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., along with publicity manager A. G. Pickett, decided to stage a mid-summer frock and pajama style party.

Another angle which sets this apart from the usual run of fashion revues was that all models, consisting of about thirty girls, were recruited from various church denominations; and in addition to the event being announced in all the churches, the girls themselves contributed valuable word-o'-mouth advertising.

The other point of the triangular tie, in addition to theatre, was made with a department store which, in addition to furnishing scenery, frocks, models and advertising the event over radio and in newspaper ads, distributed several thousand heralds describing the revue and carrying ad of the theatre.

Now you'll want to know just how the churches were interested. This was done through a church voting stunt, the one receiving the largest number by way of its representatives, getting a donation of $300 from the department store. The theatre box office was stimulated through allowing tickets to count as votes.

Another advertising stunt recently put in effect at the Rialto was a street bally for "Skippy," the accompanying photo of the boy and dog telling the whole story. We are also showing how artist Guy Smith dressed the house when "Seas Beneath" was shown. The latter was also responsible for a very attractive foyer display made for "Reaching for the Moon." Smith is doing some nice work for the Rialto and we will hope to see other examples of his work.



That pajama and frock show looks like a corking stunt to put over while the weather is still warm. It's in direct contrast to the line of merchandise usually displayed in these revues, because of all garments being made of cotton fabric. This one angle ought to prove a most popular move in any state where Cotton is King, as a means of boosting local enterprise. In other localities the sheer novelty of the present day craze women have for these summer dresses should be enough to warrant a lot of interest. The church tie-up is a corker if you can put it over and should result in a lot of good will for the theatre.

It's been some little time since we've been able to get a line on Weaver's activities, but from the above we will all agree that he's been very much on the job this summer, and before the summer is over we will probably hear about some more warm weather stunts he's put over.

Mix Mounted Patrol Parades For Hadden To Exploit "Skippy"

One of the highlights in the "Skippy" campaign of J. S. Hadden, manager of the Publix-Paramount Theatre, Joplin, Mo., was getting "The Tom Mix Mounted Patrol" of Baxter Springs, Kan., to parade. The entire stunt was suggested and completed by Stewart Stanley, one of the part-time ushers, and he is deserving of great credit for his enthusiasm and efficient results.

The Patrol, composed of about 30 mounted members—all boys ranging from 6 to 16—is more or less famous in the West, having gained recognition at Tulsa, Kansas City and other towns. The cost involved amounted to $30; two-thirds for transportation of the 20 miles from Baxter Springs to Joplin, and the other one-third for a banquet. The boys were dressed in their cowboy outfits of many colors—and their mounts with flashing harness and saddles.

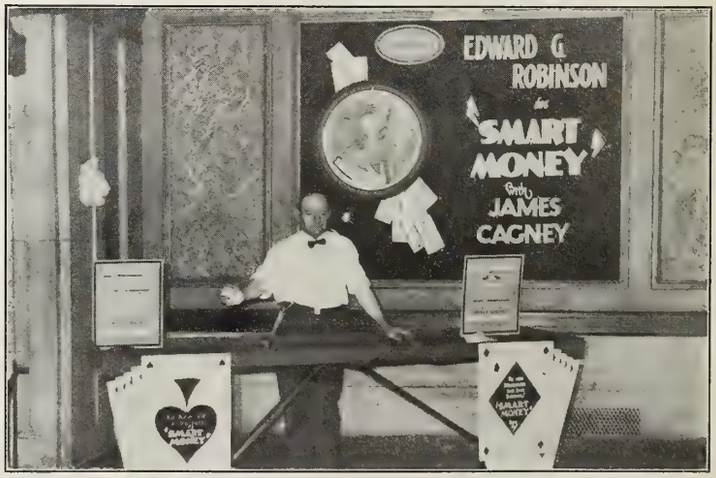
A parade was formed on the outskirts of town at 3:30 Saturday, prior to the picture's Sunday opening. The boys were led by a motorcycle police escort with the boys lined up in double file coming down the center of the main business thoroughfare. Burgess banners were carried by the mounts, reading, "Tom Mix Mounted Patrol—on their way to see—the Mid-West preview of—SKIPPY—(cast)—at the Paramount." A large truck followed up the rear, bannered with copy about the picture, theatre and playdates.

Upon reaching the theatre, the Patrol lined up in front formation and went through a series of stunts and tricks. Another parade took place the same evening with the boys again repeating their stunts in front of the theatre at 9:30. The boys then filed into the theatre to witness the preview. While inside, their horses were lined up and tied to a rope in front of the theatre. This also helped to advertise the preview screening.

That's one way to boost your kiddie business and Hadden is to be complimented on having such an efficient usher in his employ. We guess this boy will soon be stepping up the ladder of successful theatre management.

Lobby Display For "Smart Money" Good Booster For Morris

A highlight of a selling campaign put over on "Smart Money" by Walter Morris, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, Md., was a gaming table display in the lobby during the run of the picture. There's a good gag to use in connection with this display, but you'll either have to use your imagination or else drop a line to Walter for further information for there are certain limitations to the publishing business which forbid going into more detail. Anyway, it was a corking good gag and it attracted a great deal of attention.



Additional exploitation included a radio broadcast two weeks in advance and currently; a tie-up with a five and ten in which candy was sold in bags imprinted with name of theatre and play dates; all outgoing mail stamped with title copy; a front window display in the five and ten store and the inevitable big banner strung across Baltimore's main stem. Ten thousand paper napkins were also imprinted and distributed in restaurants and drug stores.

The reproduced photo on this page will give a good idea how the lobby display was arranged and we'll leave it to you all if it isn't an attractive layout. Note the attendant's working clothes, including the rolled up sleeves and black bow tie.

ATTENTION, MEMBERS!

Wide-awake members of this Club are urged to take advantage of an opportunity offered by M-G-M to compete for a worthwhile cash prize for the best campaigns submitted on "Politics."

This picture offers some corking exploitation angles and we are looking forward to receipt of some unusually interesting accounts on the way it was handled. It is suggested that campaign stories be written in duplicate form, sending one to Club headquarters and the other to the Advertising Department, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, 1540 Broadway, New York City.

Earle Holden Busy In Ocala; Several Good Sales Stunts

It hasn't taken Earle Holden long to find his way around in Ocala, Fla., where he was recently placed in charge of the Dixie, Etta and Temple theatres. But we'd expect results from Holden, whose activities in the show selling business we've had the opportunity of following for some time.

A good little stunt he put over lately, which only cost him a few passes, was a subscription tie-up with the local daily newspaper. The accompanying reproduction of an ad will show how a box, calling attention to the special offer, was carried 10 days in advance of showing. The whole stunt only set the house back about twenty tickets, the paper contributing the space.

When it was announced that a beauty pageant was to be held at Clearwater, Fla., he decided that Ocala would also be represented. Next day one of the papers broke a three column story with information about the event, with date set at the Etta Theatre. He and Leonard Bennett, assistant manager, surveyed the city and arranged with merchants to donate merchandise up to $100. At the end of the week 19 girls had signed up and when the show opened 300 people were turned away from the box office. They were, however, advised to see "the good show at the Dixie," and as the result of this business this house held up to average. Three hundred and fifty inches of free publicity and a total of 41 stories were garnered by the theatre on this stunt and it brought patrons to the house who had never been there before.

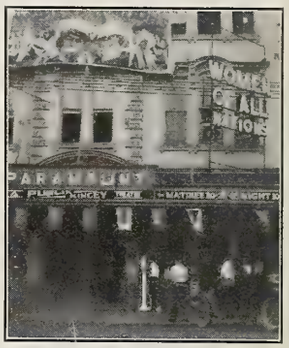
To build up a Thursday afternoon slump in trade, caused by a regular half-holiday, he resorted to use of the "Two For One" idea, but worked a merchant tie-up. Ten stores were secured as points of distribution and the merchants paid for a four column ad in each paper, carrying a month's program of pictures. This stunt was pulled in connection with the Dixie and now Thursday is the best day of the week. The newspaper liked the deal to the extent that the management allowed the balance of the page for theatre publicity purposes.

We're glad to know that Holden is getting so nicely established in his city and we will look forward to hearing how a new idea for a Kiddie Club turns out. He proposes to stage one each Saturday morning FREE. Educational reels will form the program, kid talent will be developed and maybe a safety talk given by someone. The idea of the free show at one house for the kids is so that regular matinee trade at the two other houses will not be disturbed. The city is not large enough to support three programs and he figures that he will be the gainer through the creation of good will from parents. We believe that he intends to get in touch with the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture for the free program. It's an interesting experiment and we'll be awaiting information on how it pans out.

Rosson Ties With Photo Studio For Lady Patron Boost

It's been some little time since we've had a line on what Round Tabler C. B. Rosson, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Goldsboro, N. C., has been doing in the way of selling shows, but news about members will filter through and we'll say he's been very much on the job.

One popular stunt he worked in connection with a local photographer was a tie-up for the issue of 50 free photos which ordinarily retailed for $3 each. Coupons entitling the holder to a free sitting for one photo were given to the first twenty-five ladies attending the matinee and to the first twenty-five attending the seven-o'clock evening show. The stunt was advertised by special trailer and in programs and foyer display. The results were eminently gratifying in that the photographer secured 50 future prospects and quite a little additional business owing to a special rate made for additional prints. The coupons were not given to any one under 15 years of age.



If any Club member has plans under way for the erection of an electric sign atop the marquee perhaps he will gain inspiration from the method followed by Rosson when solving this question. His house is located a block away from the "Square" and he wanted a changeable attraction which could be seen from both front and side. It is impossible to follow style of construction by the accompanying snapshot, but you will note that it is placed at an angle so as to be in the line of vision from the desired points. The frame was made of gas pipe, wired with No. 10 cable. It has four outlets and the cable is run to a home-made flasher. The letters were made out of waterproofed compo board and, taking into consideration the small cost, the results have been highly gratifying.

Other activities of his include the issue of a weekly theatre newspaper, 800 to out-of-town people and 1,200 distributed in theatre. When the September season opens he intends to replace this with a miniature monthly movie magazine. It will carry a month's attractions, have about 16 pages and will be self-supporting from four full pages of ads sold to local merchants. We will look forward to receiving a copy of the booklet when it appears, and also to further information as to what this member has been doing in the meantime. He is always working out some interesting stunt to garner additional patronage and doesn't mind tipping off his brother showmen.

C. M. Solley Has A Two-In-One Man In Operator Bill Hart

A combination of artist and mechanician all rolled up in one is not so easy to find, but such seems to be the case down at the Rose Theatre, Bastrop, La., managed by C. M. Solley. His projectionist, Bill Hart, is not only a good man on the machines, but can also turn out a darn good brand of art work, and if you have your doubts take a look at the front he made when "King of Jazz" was shown. The snap shot was a bit faint, hence the reproduction does not do justice to the display; however, we hope it will suffice to convey an idea of Hart's creative ability.
